Yes, may the time soon hasten, for the old earth has been groaning under the curse for about 6,000 long years to be relieved of her heavy burden reeling to and fro, as it were like a drunken man. But we must remain in this state of affairs yet a little longer and all will be well, yes all will be well when Jesus, our Savior, returns to earth again without sin unto salvation. But he has gone away into a far country to receive unto himself his great power and when the time comes he will vacate the throne of his Father's glory and descend to earth, remove the curse, and put sin out of the way, and all will be peace and safety. Then every one can eat of his own vine and fig tree, and none to molest or make them afraid. Then all the beasts of the forest will be at peace and will not hurt nor destroy in all his holy mountain saith the Lord. Now we have to bear the cross, then we will wear the crown. Now we must labor, then we will rest. Now we have trouble, then will be peace. Now we have sorrow and sighing, then sorrow and sighing will flee away. Now we have sickness, pain and death, then there will be no more sickness pain nor death, for the children of God are free from those plagues. Now we have deception on every hand, but then deception will have come to an end, as the people that will inhabit that goodly land will be of quick understanding and discerness of the heart. Do we not want to be there, as there will be no more sickness, pain, nor death. But if we would inherit that goodly country, we must suffer if need be even death for the name of him who gave himself a ransom that we might live. See the sufferings of our Lord, yet he bore it all with humility and compassion for those who thus reviled him. See him weeping over Jerusalem, the city of the great King, knowing they would not hearken unto his voice and live. He was always ready to teach them the way of life, and because he did so they hated him without a cause and if our Lord received such contempt from the world what may we expect the same. For he says if they have hated me they will hate you also. But, thank the Lord, these things will soon have passed away. They can shut the doors against us now, but they will be thrown wide open then, to those that love his appearing. But those that will be sleeping not looking for him when he is revealed from heaven, will cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from him that sitteth upon the throne. Yes see him like faithful Abraham—by faith, coming in the clouds of heaven arrayed in his royal robe with all his holy band. See him descending to meet his waiting ones. Happy time for them who are prepared to meet him in peace, while on the other hand consternation and despair.

Who will be able to stand? It is time that we awake to our duty and high calling—knowing that there is no life out of Christ. Let us press forward then with more energy and determination to the mark of the prize of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, and we will receive the reward at the end of the race. Yes over yonder in the ages to come we will meet to sing and shout hosanah to him that sitteth on the throne, throughout all that glorious and peaceful reign of the King who will rule with equity and in meekness he will judge the poor and oppressed in every nation, which will cause them to rejoice and extol the Lord of heaven as their oppressors will have been put down, and their iron bands bursted asunder and scattered to the four winds as the chaff of the summers threshing floor. Then shall the sun be confounded and the moon ashamed when the Lord shall rule all nations and reign before his ancients gloriously, will we be there? Will we have it to say when we have done with this order of things, like Paul we have fought the good fight and we will receive the crown of glory. So come Lord, come quickly is the prayer of thy waiting ones. J. M. HAMLAN.

One Dip Only.

Editor Restitution:—Having had my mind recently called to this subject, both by the preaching and practice of our friends who stoutly maintain that nothing short of three forward dips will fill the bill, and that this is being led by the spirit of God, and only those, who are thus led, are the sons of God. We feel moved upon, to contest a little. Notwithstanding the free and full expositions of this subject that has been given through THE RESTITUTION. They say that baptism is designed to represent or prefigure the death, and not the burial of our Savior. And as he bowed his head forward and gave up the ghost—expired, so the candidate should bow forward in baptism. Here is where I think they err. In as much as death was the ultimatum or end of life; the state or condition reached through the process of dying; and what was said and done prior to this point, was really in life, not in death; which baptism is to represent him in that death state, and not what he did in the transition. While it does seem that plunging forward three times is drawing the figure rather strong, as he only bowed one time and died. And more, why is it that his bowing his head, is entitled to a representation in baptism, more than his saying 'my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' It seems that this trying scene was too much for his kind and loving Father to behold, but is it true that God forsakes us in obedience to this command? While the very familiar and natural illustrations, such as, 'Buried with him by baptism into death,' and 'planted together in the likeness of his death' 'be born of water' most certainly indicate one action, as there is only one in the figures used to illustrate this subject. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein (in baptism) also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." 'But ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin." Now in order to obey from the heart, i. e., understandingly, the form of doctrine, we must understand what the doctrine is. I will venture to say that the doctrine of which we obey the form, is this, the death, or dying if you choose, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. And as Christ meekly bowed his head and died for sin, which was no light or easy death; no, no, the burden was so great that he sweat as it were great drops of blood, and cried "Father if it be possible let this cup pass from me." Just so we in figure obey this by humbly bowing to God's requirements, dying to sin, which is quite a task. Then in the second place, Jesus being now dead in deed, was taken by a good man who was waiting for the kingdom of God, and kindly and decently buried away in a new tomb. Just so we obey this in figure, (having previously died to sin), by being taken by some good man (who is waiting and praying "thy kingdom come,") and buried away in the watery grave in the likeness of our Savior in death. Then in the third place as our Savior was raised up from the grave spiritual, to die no more. So we in the figure are risen with him from the watery grave, spiritually minded, having put off the old man of sin with his deeds—to walk in newness of life. May the good Lord bless, and guide us into all truth.

T. E. ADAMS.

A daughter of the Hon. Richard H. Dana, Jr., of Massachusetts, having become a convert to Rome from attending a Romish school, a Romish paper very coolly and candidly says: "The influences of convent education have wrought this change of views, and if her family object to the way she has taken, they have themselves to thank for it. Religious instruction from a Catholic standpoint is about the first thing to find lodgment in an imaginative mind, and Miss Dana is quite romantic and poetic in her temperament." Mark this well, parents, and reflect upon it seriously, if you should ever be tempted to send a daughter or a son to a Romish school.—Western Methodist.

BREVITIES.

During October over 35,000,000 postal cards were sent from the Holyoke factory—the largest month's business ever done.

The Czar has recently granted religious liberty to the Baptists, who are put on an equal footing with his orthodox subjects.

Six hundred Bulgarian orphans, who lost their parents during the last Turko-Russian war, were taken to Russia, where they were instructed gratuitously at the expense of the government.

Cetywayo says there were only ten of his men present when the Prince Imperial was killed. A bold stand would have saved his life, if the Zulu King is to be believed, and the fate of an empire might have been changed.

A fungus, similar to that which Dr. Salisbury first noticed in the blood of persons suffering from malaria, is now announced as constantly present in the blood of consumptives, and therefore is suspected as being the cause of this dreadful malady.

Mrs. Mix, who has a Connecticut reputation for working miracles, travels through that state professing to cure diseases by the laying on of hands, and crowds seek her wherever she goes. The most wonderful stories are told of her powers. She charges nothing for her services, and accepts only food, lodging, and conveyance from place to place. She is of pure negro blood, uneducated, and a devout Methodist.

A Bulgarian correspondent of the London Economist writes that "not only is there now no restriction, civil or social, on the Jews, but they are even distinctly in high favor. The Chief Rabbi has received a formal confirmation of his authority and rights from the government, Jews sit in the Municipal Council, and some will certainly be elected to the Assembly." A great Jewish school, with French and English professors, and Bulgarian and Hebrew teachers, was about to be opened by the Prince in person.

The Bank of England was incorporated in 1649. It covers five acres of ground and employs 900 clerks. There are no windows on the street; light is admitted through open courts. No mob could take the bank, therefore, without cannon to batter the immense walls. The clock in the center of the bank has fifty dials attached to it. Large cisterns are sunk in the courts, and engines in perfect order are always in readiness in case of fire.

A SCIENTIST'S TESTIMONY.

The Eminent Dr. Ackland, Regius Professor of Medicine in the University of Oxford, an authority in matters of science, told the students of Union Theological Seminary that "after thirty-five years of patient research with the scalpel, microscope, and telescope, he was amazed that any man could dogmatize in the department of science as though he had reached ultimate truth. There is no antagonism between the Word of God and the facts of science." He said that he finds the "ultimate solution" of vexed questions in "the great truths of Holy Scripture."

A question of interest to Roman Catholic fathers and mothers all over the country has just been brought to a sharply-defined issue in Massachusetts. A number of well-to-do Irish-born citizens of Cambridgeport, one of them an alderman, have been sending their children to the public schools, alleging as a reason that the instruction given there is better than the parochial school affords. The priest of the parish has forbidden these persons to approach the sacraments so long as they persist in sending their children to the public schools; and it is now reported that the Archbishop of Boston fully sustains him. At latest advices the recalcitrant parishioners were still holding out.

The Rev. Fergus Ferguson, who has been arraigned before the United Presbyterian Synod of Scotland on a charge of heresy, says that the sum of Christian orthodoxy is contained in the following six points: "That there is a God; that the universe is the work of God; that man is a being made in the image and after the likeness of God; that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and the Savior of the world; that the church, as the body of Christ, is the organization in which the Spirit of God fully dwells, and by which, therefore, the mind of God as contained in the Sacred Scriptures may be most fully and clearly made known to the world, in order that the world might be brought back to God; and that the Bible is the Word of God." Mr. Ferguson leaves out the doctrine of eternal punishment, which is, he holds, "a notion not only incompatible with every one of the fundamental propositions of pure orthodoxy, but logically destructive of every one of them."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Notes of Recent Travel and Sojourn with the "Household of Faith." No. 2.

A. D. MAGRUDER.

Arrived at Cleveland, Brother Rennie and myself found our way without difficulty to the address that had been sent us, and learned that, owing to some misapprehension as to the time of the railway trains, we had missed the pleasure of being met at the station by Brethren McLauchlan, Catteli and Elton, who had been to meet us but finding us not in the train they expected to bring us, had gone home in [illegible] at once proceeded. It was, therefore, mutually agreeable to find that "we were all here," and no harm was done, and, consorting together, we soon felt ourselves no strangers to each other. There is ever a divine fraternity and fellowship between Christians. Is it on the geometrical rule that "things that are equal to the same are equal to each other?" We know each other because, as the beloved disciple tells us, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, ... and if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another," and, as St. Paul also says, "We who were afar off are now made nigh and having access by one spirit unto the Father, through the Son, we are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God, being built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Eph. ii. Here is the true secret of this wonderful unity which constitutes the family resemblance among God's children. Truly, ideas are powerful instruments to mould and shape men into a common likeness. To read the same book —the blessed Word of truth and to bow together before the same heavenly Father—teaches us to speak the same things—to think and act, and why not to look alike? If we all confess the "one God and Father of all who is above all, and through all, and in you all, and acknowledge the one body and one spirit, and one hope of our calling, the one Lord, and one faith, and one baptism," will not these five divine unities stamp their impress even on the countenance and aspect and manner of each so as to make us known and read at first sight of all who are thus indoctrinated in the truth?

It has always seemed to me the idlest of all controversies—the question so learnedly canvassed, "Shall we know each other in the resurrection-state?" If "wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of his times," shall we be less wise—greater simpletons in the future life-state than we are in the present? If the Lord knoweth them that are his; if the Father knoweth his children, shall not the children know each other? Besides, are not the brethren of Jesus taught expressly that they shall sit down with Abraham, etc., in the kingdom of God? We shall indeed know at sight the Father of the faithful and the friend of God, and it is a happy thought that he will know us, for if we bear the image of the heavenly king, we shall be like him, shall wear the wedding robe, and when we see him as he is, the family likeness will proclaim to all that we are all of the one whole family in heaven and earth, "and having that name that no man knoweth but the saints."

These reflections were suggested by our meeting in Cleveland, the warm-hearted and hospitable brethren, with whom we felt at home, albeit we were of various nationalities, and had never seen each other face to face before. It was a sort of secret cosmopolitan union in fervent Christian sympathy and love. Here were Brethren Rennie, McLauchlan and Hay, (Scotch); Brethren Catteli and Elton, (English), myself, a native American, and others of the "little flock," representing other climes and countries, and yet all one in Christ Jesus—already sitting together in heavenly places—happy in the faith and hope of the gospel of the kingdom, and all known to, and knowing one another. The feelings inspired by these sentiments of mutual faith and hope imparted a real joy to our visit, with heartfelt thankfulness to God that he had so arranged our relations as to make our very studies and duties in the Christian life to yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness and joy in our fraternal and social intercourse with each other. Thus, we could, with the devotional Psalmist of Israel, gratefully exclaim, "Oh! that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men," and gladly take up the joyful refrain "for his mercy endureth forever." Amen.

Such mutual sympathy, kindness and fellowship in good deeds hath a great blessing with it, for doth not the Master say, "Verily I say unto you, he that giveth a cup of cold water (even) to one of these little ones in the name of a disciple, shall in no wise lose his reward?" Matt. x.

Delightfully [illegible] days of our warm-hearted Brother Reunie, of the second day, his business duties requiring his return home, the writer, with our beloved brethren, Catteli and Elton, chiefly as guides and companions, passed the time until the First-Day meeting, in visiting the brethren and sisters from house to house, and in social evening re-unions with those of the household of faith who were sufficiently near to meet together. These occasions were most happy and instructive, and tended greatly to mutual edification and enjoyment. Brother Elton, whose praise is with all the brethren for zeal and affectionate and persuasive earnestness in pleading the cause of the truth, took me with him for the day via. the Lake Shore railway, to the town of Collingwood—the theatre of his persevering and successful labors in the gospel—where a small but ardent band of the faithful had been planted as a sort of colony of the Cleveland body. Here we spent several hours very agreeably with the brethren, partaking of the cordial hospitality of our intelligent brother, Doctor Smith and his sister wife at dinner, and returned the same evening to our welcome quarters with Brother Elton and his Christian household. Dr. Smith was formerly a very prominent disciple of the A. Campbell school of Bethany theology, and his defection from that creed to the more excellent way of "the truth as it is in Jesus" was very deeply deplored by his quondam brethren of the fanciful Pentecostian beginning of the reign of Christ. Being taught by the word "in the way of the Lord more perfectly," he now rejoices in the fuller light of the gospel of that kingdom which Peter truly preached at Pentecost, but expressly declared—Acts ii. 30-39—to be matter of promise and of hope—a promise yet future, but soon, we humbly trust and believe, to be fulfilled and accomplished in the glorious coming and reign of Jesus of the royal seed of David. Brother Smith is known to the brethren, also by his papers in THE RESTITUTION on the conformity of the Bible with true science on the nature and constitution of man.

When we reached Cleveland we found the whole city filled with the fame and excitement of the Moody and Sankey revivals, then at fever heat, and every day growing apparently in intensity. The weather was bright and balmy as spring. The business "boom," as the papers called it, was now active and onward after the long financial paralysis. Hotels on [illegible] was again asserting his accustomed, paramount sway over the whole realm of the money-ocracy; and the clergy of this beautiful lake and forest city, not willing to be left behind in the general race to get or to keep to the front, had imported the celebrated "evangelists," so-called, to preach and proclaim the gospel of worldly prosperity and of clerical emulation and ambition to swell the numbers of their converts in the general rush "through the wide gate and along the broad way." The machinery employed to achieve success in this general rivalry at "Vanity Fair," as Bunyan calls it, was powerful and well continued. Money freely supplemented the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the pride of life, to swell the flowing tide.

One of the city millionaires—a church member—erected, at his own expense, a huge building, fronting one of the principal avenues, called the tabernacle, capable of holding six or seven thousand people—a sort of ecclesiasterion—unlike that in Athens, however, in a very essential particular, for the Cleveland man's hill is only open to "evangelical" preachers and philosophy. But that term must be understood to mean those only whom the clergy of the city agree to dignify with this magic Shibboleth, and, hence, though one who may preach in the identical words and doctrine of the evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, and Peter, Paul, James and Jude, (for every apostle was, of necessity, an evangelist,) he will be denied entrance unless he can produce a diploma or endorsement from some Reverend Rabbi who will certify to his "orthodoxy"—a certain indefinite term which the clergy find it not convenient to explain or define. Verily, if St. Paul should now arise from the dead and appear in Cleveland, and apply to preach in the tabernacle "the new doctrine" and "the strange things" he was permitted to bring to the ears of the men of Athens, he would, undoubtedly, be refused; for he would necessarily be ignorant of "orthodoxy" as well as of the Catholic and Protestant systems of the day, seeing that it is matter of history that they all had their origin long subsequent to the days of himself and the other apostles of Jesus; as the grave has been his "narrow house" ever since his death, and, as it is written, "The dead know not anything," and that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge in the grave whither thou goest." It would not be possible for the apostle to know what was demanded of him, in order to insure his orthodoxy; and so he would inevitably have been denied in the Pantheon of "Christian" Cleveland the opportunity of delivering his Master's message which was freely accorded to him in Pagan Athens! Will not Athens rise up in the judgment with Cleveland and condemn it?

Let not the writer be hastily condemned for saying that there is too much reason to conclude that the spirit of Mammon and of money—or clerical pride and ambition—originates and directs the Moody excitement. It was publicly stated "on 'change," and as I heard, announced in the daily papers, that the money subscribed by the bankers and brokers and merchant princes of Cleveland "to pay the expenses of Moody and Sankey" had reached already $20,000, (at the end of twenty days of their thirty days' "engagement") and that the work was still going bravely on, and would, undoubtedly, reach $30,000, or $1,000 a day for their labor of love in preaching and singing the gospel—without money and without price!

If this statement is, in any respect untrue, the means of detection and correction are easily accessible. The writer will send a marked copy of this article to the editor of the Cleveland Leader, in whose columns the Moody sermons and movements were daily reported, and whose relations to the "evangelists" will certainly enable them to know the truth, and if wrong, our statement shall receive correction.

Now, we do not dispute the legal right of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to make money by their work and labor, whatever we may think of the righteousness of the proceeding. None will deny that "the laborer is worthy of his hire," but let him receive pay as a hireling and not claim like the prophets and apostles, that they preach "without money and without price," and get the fame and honor even of their perishing fellow mortals as a reward for generous and disinterested philanthrophy! These men declare themselves to be doing the work of God's evangelists and apostles; they say they stand in their shoes and preach the same gospel; and they are quite as zealous in their theological doctrines and traditions as the Pharisees of old. Verily, they, too, "have their reward."

Now, see the contrast between such and the prototypes and models they profess to imitate. The first "evangelists," like their divine Master, "went everywhere preaching the word, without money and without price." Acts viii. 4-17-21; Ib. iii. 6: Ib. xx. 32-36. Jesus taught "Freely you have received; freely give." Paul says, in Gal. i. 15, 16: "When it pleased God to call me by his grace and to reveal his Son in me that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood" (did not wait for arrangements to be made to pay him $1,000 a day,) "neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me (as if to court the patronage of any), but I went into Arabia and returned to Damascus," and not till "after three years" did he go up to Jerusalem, etc. Elsewhere, 1 Cor. x. 15-18, the same apostle glories in his poverty, and while avowing his authority under the law to receive a support from preaching the gospel, quoting the Mosaic precept, "muzzle not the ox that treadeth out the corn," yet adds his boast that "when I preach the gospel I may make the gospel of Christ without charge that I abuse not my power in the gospel." Can Moody and Sankey, with the extravagant wages they receive, take up Paul's parable and exclaim as he does in Acts xx. 33-36, ... "I have coveted no man's gold or silver or apparel. Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me; and I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus that it is more blessed to give than to receive."

Paul, with all his divine power and authority, abiding in Corinth with Aquilla and Priscilla, his wife, and being of the same craft, working with them, with his own hands at tent-making, "laboring night and day that he might not be chargable unto any of them, and might preach unto them the gospel, without money or price," Acts xviii.; 2 Thess. iii. 3, and Mr. Moody, sumptuously lodged in the splendid Forest City Hotel in Cleveland, with no apparent occupation but to receive and welcome to his handsome suite of apartments the reverend and titled visitors who call during the morning, and in the afternoon and night to discourse to overflowing houses the dramatic orations called gospel sermons, largely made up of his own history and adventures—certainly without any Bible gospel in them—and in the receipt of one thousand dollars a day for the work and labor and pain and sacrifice of such a hard life! Behold the contrast between then and now—between Paul, the apostle and Mr. Moody, "the evangelist!" Alas! that such is the popular ignorance of the Bible and its "precious promises;" that Paul, speaking to us in his words and his example, is ignored and forgotten, and not the gospel, but Moody's sermons and Sankey's singing lead captive the unthinking multitudes, and as the prophet saith of ancient Israel, "the people love to have it so." Oh! for the time to come, as come it will, when, in the language of the same prophet, the Gentiles, repudiating their present subjection to fanaticism and folly, will say, in shame "our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things in which there is no profit." Jer. xvi. 19.

In Jeremiah ii. 5, the Lord saith to the prophet, "I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations" (Gentiles); "I have set thee, this day, over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out and pull down and to destroy and to throw down, to build and to plant." His prophecy is largely burdened with the history and destiny of Gentile nations. He foretells to Israel the Assyrian and Persian and Roman conquests of their country and the consequences, and distinctly imputes their fall and ruin to the contempt of God's word, saying unto them, "Behold the word of the Lord is a reproach to them. They have no delight in it," chapter vi., and yet again exhorting them to "stand in the ways and see and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein and find rest for your souls, but they said we will not walk therein and we will not hearken." .... Then addressing the Gentiles, the prophet exhorts them, saying, "Hear, ye nations," etc. He then exclaims, in view of this stubborn rejection of his words, "Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord? Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" and adds this sad summary of their fearful iniquity: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means and my people love to have it so."

St. Paul says, 1 Cor. x. 6, etc., "These things were our examples—warnings to all other nations who, having the word of God, as we do, reject it—and as God is no respecter of persons or nations, may we not enquire trenchingly, "How shall we escape if we neglect, far worse, if we reject so great salvation?" The present generation is, undoubtedly, living in the "last days" of these Gentile times. If proof were needed of this we have only to point to those "signs of the times" among us Gentiles, which Paul, the prophet and "apostle to the Gentiles" directs our attention. In his letters to Timothy he says: "This know ye also that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of themselves, (selfish), proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, (the very opposite to children's religion, which is obedience to parents), unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, ... lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, (members of churches and "professing" Christianity) but denying the power thereof, ... departing from the faith, giving head to seducing spirits—ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth —who will not endure sound doctrine, heaping to themselves teachers (such as the modern evangelist) and having itching ears, they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables;" (anecdotes and sensational tales, etc.) "from such withdraw thyself."

Resolved, after seeing and hearing for ourselves, to make some effort to stem the tide of mistake and error which swept into its vortex so many votaries and victims of the prevailing delusion, the brethren were impelled by a sense of duty, to bring the minds of men, if possible, to see the contrast —clear and broad—between the Bible religion, the faith and hope of the gospel of Christ, and the religion of Moody and Sankey, accordingly a printed notice of such a purpose was inserted in two of the leading dailies of the city, inviting all of good and honest hearts to hear, at a convenient time and place stated, a plain and clear statement of the doctrine of Christ and the apostles as to what constituted the gospel in its faith and hope, and the means and terms of salvation, stated and proved from the Bible, and urging a comparison between the Bible religion and that which the "evangelists" were then preaching to the people of Cleveland. (This notice has been already inserted in THE RESTITUTION). The result did not differ from what we expected, although our zealous and earnest brethren attended in full force and urged others to come; the outsiders, for whose benefit the effort was mainly intended, were few and far between. It was so with Jesus and it was so with Paul, for truly "the servant is not greater than his Lord." Paul testifies as to one of his conflicts in 2 Tim. iv. 16, ... "At my first answer no man stood with me but all forsook me. I pray God it may not be laid to their charge. Notwithstanding, the Lord stood by me and strengthened me." We need not expect Paul's words to be heeded, where himself is rejected. Such sad experience verifies the wisdom of the Poet:

> "Broad is the way that leads to death,
> And thousands walk together there,
> While wisdom shews a narrow path
> With here and there—a traveler."

The writer heard Mr. Moody several times and held an hour's interview with him, a note of which must be reserved for another paper.

Spurgeon:—It is never worth while to make rents in a garment for the sake of mending them, nor to create doubts in order to show how cleverly we can quiet them.

The Resurrection Question.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

There seems to be some complaint that so much space in THE RESTITUTION is occupied in the discussion of the resurrection of the wicked. I would like to ask those who are disposed thus to complain a few questions. Are we generally agreed on that subject? If not, then, is there not need that the question should be discussed? What is the object of discussion? Is it not to discover, and bring out the truth in relation to the subject discussed, so that we may be of the same mind, and of the same judgment in relation to it? Is it not that we may all speak the same thing, and be perfectly joined together in our work of faith? Then, why cease to investigate a subject that we do not yet understand?

How did we learn what we now understand concerning the gospel of the kingdom of God? Was it by keeping quiet on the subject? Or, was it by agitation? How have we secured the best, and the deepest, and the strongest, union and fellowship that we now enjoy? Was it by being afraid of investigation? Or, was it by persistent agitation of those things we were anxious to understand? Who do you think understand the subject of the "coming of the Lord" the best? Those who remained in the churches where the subject was not allowed to be discussed, or those who were driven out on account of their continued agitation of the subject? Who understand the nature of man the best; those who have always discouraged the agitation of the subject, or those who persisted in preaching on the immortality of the soul for fifteen or twenty years? Who understand the kingdom, or the gospel of it the best, those who have hardly entertained a question upon those subjects; or those who have persisted in discussing them until they understand them? Upon what subjects are we the best united? Are they not the subjects which have been freely agitated?

We have already become settled and quiet on many subjects, but the question of the resurrection of the wicked is not settled. If we cease to agitate it, will it ever be settled? Shall we ever be any better united on the subject than we are now? Would not such a course check all progress? Are not agitation, the comparing our different views, and even sharp criticism, the means of all sound Christian union. If the Bible does furnish a common ground of union on this subject, will not some one or more than one bring it out? If there is no common ground on which we can all stand and be agreed how shall we understand Christ's prayer, that his people may all be one as he and the Father are one? Or the Apostles exhortation, that we all speak the same thing, that we be perfectly joined together in the same word, and in the same judgment?

We are not yet agreed upon this subject, shall we now give up in despair, and say that the Bible does not furnish a basis for such a union? I should be very unwilling to concede this in reference to our Bible. The investigations are just beginning to be hopeful. Shall we shut down now, and check the spirit of investigation? Or shall we not rather encourage it?

If the word of the Lord is not "yea and nay," do you not see that the whole Bible must be on our side of this question? The position will yet be found in which the whole Bible will agree, and in which all the saints may agree. Then, let us be patient, and hopeful, and ready to receive the truth when it comes. Let us not shut down the paper on this investigation. Let us not prohibit the discussion of any subject. Let us trust the editor to exercise a wise discretion in the selection of all the matter to fill the paper. If new and fresh arguments on any subject are furnished, let them be published by all means. If old and stale ones are written let them be rejected. Let us have an open Bible, a free paper and religious liberty. Let the editor preside on all such matters, and give the casting vote.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. J. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 26, 1879.

WILL not our brethren and friends make an effort to increase the circulation of THE RESTITUTION? If a few hundred paying subscribers could be added to our list, and the list thus enlarged, remain undiminished, we should soon be placed beyond serious embarrassment. Brethren have aided and God has blessed us so far, but we still need financial help, and ours is not the only paper, that heralds the advent of the Redeemer and the soon-coming kingdom, that has to solicit some extra aid.

A FEW complain because their long articles do not find a place in the paper. The impossibility of doing this, and sending out a sheet of general information on the changes taking place in the world, indicating a speedy change of dispensations, is about as great as to measure a gallon of fluid in a pint cup by once filling it. We do the best we can—often wishing that some one of more experience in editorial responsibilities may soon take our place. We never coveted the position and are by no means anxious to retain it. Providence seemed to demand our humble services in this direction, and we have tried to consult the very best interests of THE RESTITUTION. Many pieces that have not appeared have been equal in merit to some that have been published. Editors are fallible and err as often as other men; still they may have better means of knowing what is better for a paper's interest than distant contributors.

THE dark clouds that have been gathering over Europe and Asia threatening war and revolution, are more thickly condensing instead of becoming rifted with seams of light. Scarcely are the turmoils of conflict quieted a little in South Africa, and Afghanistan, than England is called to confront a new uprising among the turbulent inhabitants of Ireland, which may become an outbreak of a very formidable character. Germany, menaced by Russia, has entered into a compact with Austria. As a counter-league it now seems that Russia and France may form an alliance. While important national interests are at stake, and likely to bring the Great Powers into collision, internal elements are undermining the stability of long established despotisms, nihilism in Russia, and communism in other kingdoms gain strength daily. Papal Rome is consolidating her minions to regain her lost supremacy. The most gigantic war ever waged seems eminent. No doubt whoever manages a newspaper for the coming year will have to chronicle great events. No journal can fill the place of one that contemplates events of history in the light of prophecy. Those that discontinue papers devoted to pointing out the connection between the inspired predictions and their accomplishment in the unfolding of human affairs, do themselves the greatest injury.

The Eclectic Resurrection.

No careful, critical, reader of the Scriptures can have failed to notice that there is a marked peculiarity, in every expression of divine revelation, when the resurrection of the righteous is the theme. Sometimes it is presented independently; as, "the resurrection of the just," or, the resurrection of "the dead in Christ;" and, at other times, a reference is made to the dead who are left behind when those who "sleep in Jesus" emerge from the tomb. We propose to write briefly upon those passages that significantly promise the resurrection of the righteous, and which, at the same time, distinguish it as pertaining only to this chosen class of the dead. We commence with Dan. xii. 2, because, in the first place, it teaches only the resurrection of a part of the numberless dead, and, in the next place because its distributive phraseology is employed in the New Testament to as definitely describe the resurrection of the righteous as being an outrising from among the multitudinous hosts that sleep in the dust of the earth.

As, is well known, this passage in the common version, reads: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

The best critics are agreed that this rendering fails in precision, and very inadquately expresses the sense of the original. As close a word for word translation as we are able to give this text, owing to the peculiar construction of its words in their case relation in the Hebrew, would be: "And many from the sleepers in earth's dust shall awake; these to the lives of eternity; and these to revilings for the scorn of eternity."

In analyzing this text we observe, that the first leading declaration in the verse expresses an event, and the two subsequent dependent declarations express two diverse destinies as resulting from that event. Let us carefully investigate the nature of this event and the consequent destinies in something like minute detail. The first and fundamental idea is that of the dead, inclusive of all that sleep in the dust of the earth prior to any awakening whatever. The sentence recorded Gen. iii. 19, contains the very same Hebrew words in relation to returning to the ground or earth, and dust, that we have in this passage. It is then to this dissolved condition to this universal depositing in earth's dust of all that have ever come under the power of death—and who are there locked up in the unbroken repose of the grave, that our attention is first directed; and our attention is thus directed that we may contemplate an event no less stupendous than creation itself. That event is thus expressed in Hebrew in a very remarkable and explicit manner. We give the text:

וְרַבִּים מִיְּשֵׁנֵי אַדְמַת־עָפָר יָקִיצוּ
—verabbim miyyshenyey admath-appar yaqitzu—literally—many of the sleeping in earth's dust shall awake.

The preposition מִן —min—says Gesenius "is strictly the construct state of the noun מִן —men—properly part of anything, and hence a preposition;" —and, "strictly as a preposition, partitive, denoting a part taken from or out of a whole." In Davidson's Analytical Hebrew Lexicon it is defined—"of, noting a part taken from or out of a whole, both with reference to number and quantity."

The event then embraced in the leading declaration of the text is,—that many are parted from among the dead multitudes of the sleeping ones in earth's dust by awakening from this sleep. In other words many, separated from a multitudinous whole, are raised from the dead. When this awakening shall have parted many from among the countless sleepers in "earth's dust," what have we next to contemplate? We answer, two distinct aggregations, or classes; one of which is the company embracing the many that have been separated, by awakening out of sleep, from the congregation of the dead, and the other class embracing the hosts of the still unawakened dead left behind in the death-sleep in the earth's dust. Now, after having fully grasped the immensely differing states effected by this [illegible] to the company made alive from the dead, and the other to the still imprisoned dead,—the question of a future destiny, as bearing on each class, presses upon us for an answer: What allotment is for the awakened? What allotment is for the unawakened? We put our questions in the dative form because it is by employing the dative case and supplementing the grammatically implied ellipsis of the verb to be that the question is answered in Hebrew. To keep these two classes separately and distinctly before the mind, the demonstrative pronoun אֵלֶּה —elleh—these—is used; and to express the future destiny of each class thus demonstratively singled out, and, at the same time do it in the most sententious manner possible, there is a complete ellipsis of the verb, and the future fate of each antecedent order is designated by simply employing the preposition לְ —le—to or for, before the words preceding the destiny assigned to each. The rule applicable to examples of this kind is "לְ —le—is the sign of the dative, after verbs of giving, assigning, etc.; also as dative commodi and incommodi." Our text, in its last clauses, falls under the latter part of this rule. The words commodi and incommodi mean advantage and disadvantage; profit and loss; reward and punishment. When no verb is expressed, some form of the verb to be is implied. The destiny then of "the many awakened out from among those sleeping in the dust of the earth" is thus expressed—"These to the lives of eternity"—that is, the advantage, profit, or reward of the risen dead is "everlasting life." On the contrary the destiny of the other class is thus expressed—"And these to the reproaches and contempt of eternity;" that is, the detriment, loss, or horrible doom of the unawakened dead, is to be "scorn and everlasting contempt."

Some hasty objector might urge that it is manifestly too absurd to predicate "shame and everlasting contempt" of the unrisen dead. Our reply is short, pointed, and Scripturally authoritative. We quote Isa. lxvi. 24: "And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh."

Here the very language of intense loathing and scorn employed by Daniel, in the original, is also employed by Isaiah when speaking, beyond all controversy, of the dead. The black brand placed on Cain's person has adhered to his character for 6,000 years. The stereotyped expression—"of the wicked one"—tersely utters the detestation in which the murderer of his brother has been held during all time. The fratricide, the first murderer in the world, has been associated with the devil, the first murderer in the universe. Judas Iscariot scorned himself bad enough to commit suicide, and his name has been buried under mountains of "shame and contempt" for 1800 years. The name of the traitor, Benedict Arnold, has been a loathing to American patriotism for a century, and will be to the last syllable of recorded time. The name of Pope Alexander VI. has been the synonym of disgusting iniquitous infamy for more than 300 years—a name that would be discreditable to a demon; and no lapse of time will ever bleach it white. To "die in sin" fixes a character that sticks, and will ever stick, if Daniel's intensely strong language means anything. But we are writing on an Elective Resurrection and neither for nor against the resurrection of the ungodly. We leave these where Daniel, Isaiah, and other Old Testament writers leave them, and, if we continue our theme, shall endeavor to show that the texts in the New Testament, that speak of an Elective Resurrection, are intimately linked with Dan. xii. 2.

In closing it may be well to remark that the expression "everlasting life," which occurs comparatively often in the New Testament, occurs no where else in the Old Testament, and, furthermore, that, in this instance, it is predicated only of those that are made alive from the dead. "The resurrection and the life" are the inseparable terms of the future existence in both Testaments.

NEWS ITEMS.

THE WAR CLOUND IN EUROPE.

LONDON, NOV. 19.—The Times' Berlin correspondent telegraphs as follows: "The St. Petersburg Novoe Vremya, discussing the prospects of war, says that neither the Russian people nor the Russian government wish for war, because the bad financial state of the empire enjoins peace: but every day and every hour the conviction deepens that a great struggle is soon to break out."

[illegible] Gaulois from St. Petersburg reports that all Russian officers on leave of absence have been ordered to join their regiments immediately.

RUSSIA AND THE CABUL OUTBREAK.

LONDON, NOV. 19.—The Manchester Guardian's London correspondent believes that the statements to the effect that papers were found in Cabul compromising the Russian Foreign Office are accurate. Lord Beaconsfield is urged to publish the documents, but declines to do so.

FRANCE is building a number of first class forts on the Belgian frontier, and this action causes much uneasiness in Brussels.

According to Pesth (Hungary) dispatches received on the 17th famine prevailed to a frightful extent in Montenegro. It was believed that one-sixth of the inhabitants were starving. The same dispatches say there had been severe fighting on the Turkish frontier, near Brzsovitza, and that the latter city had been plundered by 500 Arnauts.

FORTY-NINE AFGHANS HANGED.

CABUL, Nov. 17.—Forty-nine Afghans have been hanged for complicity in the massacre of the British embassy. It is reported that trouble is apprehended in the Ghuzni country. One of the Khans and his brother are inciting insurrection in Kohistan.

BERLIN, November 22.—Winter has set in here and all over the northern part of the continent. The snow is deep in Berlin.

PARIS, November 22.—The early snow has driven the wolves from the forests in the department of Marne, and the peasants are organizing midnight hunting parties to protect their flocks.

Official announcement was made in London on the 19th that the government had resolved to put down sedition in Ireland. While doing all it possibly could to diminish and relieve distress in that country, it would not permit agitators to carry out their treasonable programme. Michael Devitt and James Bryce Killen had been arrested at Dublin, and James Daly, editor of the Connaught Telegraph, at Castlebar, for using language calculated to provoke breaches of the peace. There was great excitement throughout Ireland in consequence of the arrests.

CORK, November 22.—A detachment of troops left here last night for Baltimore, in this county, supposed to be in consequence of urgent private information received by the government it is likely that there will be several arrests in Ireland to day of well-known ringleaders in the present agitation.

A Paris correspondent telegraphed on the 11th that two French explorers discovered the source of the River Niger in September last.

THIRTY CHINAMEN KILLED AND A MOUNTAIN SHAKEN TO ITS CENTRE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18.—An explosion occurred in Tunnel No. three on the narrow-gauge railroad from San Jose to Santa Cruz early this morning. From the meagre accounts thus far received it seems that a blast was let off about 2,700 feet from the mouth of the tunnel, which caused an explosion of the gases generated by the filtering of coal oil through the roof and sides of the tunnel. Twenty-six Chinamen and two white men were at work in the tunnel at the time. Immediately about twenty more Chinamen rushed into the tunnel with torches to aid their comrades, and when they had penetrated about 1,600 feet their torches caused a second explosion more violent than the first, shaking the mountain to its centre. The white men—Lindle and Johnson—were brought out terribly burned, and about ten Chinamen, all seriously injured. As near as can be learned some thirty Chinamen were killed. The second explosion wrecked the engines and works. Physicians have been despatched to the scene from San Jose, and everything possible is being done for the sufferers.

LEADVILLE, Col., November 20.—A powerful vigilance committee has been organized here, and this morning early they proceeded to the jail, demanded the keys and took out Charles Stuart, a footpad, and a notorious lot and mine jumper, named Charles Frodsham, and hanged them to a small shed near the jail. They placed on the back of Frodsham a card warning a number of notorious characters to leave the city or take the same fate, among them the late city marshal, Kelly, and James Bush, who killed Arbuckle in the summer. A great many thieves and confidence-men have left to-day. The committee are in dead earnest, and mean business. Stuart was from Connersville, Pa., and Frodsham was from Salt Lake City.

VERDICT AGAINST A PRIEST.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., November 10.—The suit in the case of Joseph Parker, formerly a stable keeper at Holyoke, Mass., to recover $10,000 from the Rev. Father Andre B. Dufressne, a French Catholic priest of that town, for breaking Parker's [illegible] by [illegible]; telling his congregation that they must not patronize him, and forcing them to obey his commands by threats of excommunication, was given to the jury to day, and after two hours deliberation they gave a verdict to Parker of $3,432.

The most sanguinary naval fight of modern days occurred November 8th, at the capture of the Peruvian ram Huascar, which has done such notable service in the South American war. There were two hundred and sixteen men on the Peruvian vessel, and of these only eighty-six survived, and they were all badly wounded. The two Chilian vessels which effected the capture were the Cochrane and the Blanco, both heavily armed ships. The admiral commanding the Huascar was killed, and the three principal officers who successively assumed command after his death were shot down almost instantaneously. The scene on board must have been horrible. An eye-witness writes:

"After an hour and a half's fighting the ram was almost shot to pieces. Still, she discharged her sole remaining cannon at long intervals, as the very turret itself, only thirty feet in diameter, was choked up with the debris of the shattered gun and the bodies of the dead and wounded. Below, in the dark passages and narrow compartments of the ship, the scene was frightful. The dying and those who had perished were heaped indiscriminately together, and every few moments a shot from the enemy came crashing through the sides of the doomed vessel."

When at length a boarding party secured the vessel she seemed a veritable shamble. Scenes of carnage like this, show how fearful are the passions of which the heart of man has been the home since the Fall.

COL. VON WERDER'S EVENTFUL EXPERIENCE IN THE GREAT NAPOLEON'S WARS.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 17.—Col. John Frederick Von Werder died in this city last night, at the Aged Men's Home, aged ninety-nine years, ten months, and sixteen days. Von Werder was one of the Old Guard. He was with the first Napoleon in his retreat from Moscow, saw his wedding with Maria Louisa, entered Paris with the allied armies in 1814, served under Blucher at Waterloo, assisted in organizing the Greek insurrection of 1820, and fought against Abd-el-Kador on the plains of Algeria. Col. Werder, as appears from a manuscript sketch which he has left behind him, was born in Prussia on Jan. 1, 1780. In 1796 he joined the Prussian army, and at the battle of Jena was made a prisoner by the French, afterward joining that service. In 1807 and 1808 he fought in Spain, and in the latter year married the daughter of a Spanish grandee. He took part in the battles of Aspern, Eschlingen and Wagram and was made side-de-camp to Gen. Murat. In the spring of 1812 he was appointed side-de-camp to Marshal Ney and marched to Russia, entering Moscow with Napoleon. At Berezaina he was twice wounded, and after his recovery again joined the Prussian army, fighting in all the battles from 1813 to 1815. Between the years 1816 and 1827 he led an adventurous life in Greece and Turkey, and from 1827 to 1848 served with distinction in Africa. In 1850 he came to this country with his wife and children and invested his money in a nursery in Virginia. In 1852 his property was destroyed by a severe flood, and other misfortunes came upon him. Three of his sons fell in the late war, his wife and daughter died in 1863, and last summer the veteran was compelled to seek the shelter of the Aged Men's Home. For the past five years he was partly blind, but he retained his faculties to the last.

CORRESPONDENCE.

What is Man?

We are led to cry within ourselves when we look around and survey the earth, in the language of good old Job, "What is man?" And I presume this is the cry of all God's people who are of a serene temperament, and should be the cry of all mankind, and their contemplation in their meandering hours. Let us for a few moments look at man here on the earth, for we know nothing about him anywhere else. Here we see a boy, the son of a rich man, and, as a general rule, he has no care on his mind, and works not and hates those that do labor. But his father dies in the course of time and leaves all his money to his son. He goes into business of some kind, untrained, and finally fails; leads a miserable life thereafter, and is finally laid in the grave.

But now, let us look at a somewhat different picture. Now, we see a poor boy, maybe an orphan, and, like the Savior, not where to lay his head. But, by and by he finds some one who has sympathy for him and gives him something to do. He proves to be true, honest and industrious; gains the good will of his employer, and from hence he rises to distinction and eminence. But, alas! he, too, climbs the hill of time, and down on the other side to the grave. This is the case with all the great men of earth. Death comes, and he does not stop and say, Which one shall I take? but he takes the young as well as the old; all go together to the grave to slumber in the dust. Yes, the wise man as well as the fool; the rich as well as the poor; the king upon his throne, and men of eminence, as well as one of low degree. There is no difference, and we cry aloud, "What is man?" "He is like the chaff of the summer's threshing-floor. Yes, he is of a few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not." And "his breath goeth forth and he returneth to his earth; and in that very day his thoughts perish." Yes, "and there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither he goest."

A dark, dark picture! Is there no other hope for man than to simply work out the drama of life, then to fall back into everlasting oblivion? Is this so? Then, why did I not in the beginning be at rest, as all things under the sun are vanity and vexation of spirit? No hope, no rest; all is darkness, a myth, nonentity. What am I doing, and where am I going to die? Then, if that is the goal, wrap me in the arms of nature and let me go to my final rest in peace, where there will be none to disturb nor molest.

These are a few thoughts on one side of the picture, but thank the good Lord there is a brighter side to this picture than that; but I am afraid that all will not look for the bright side, but be content with the dark side, and when it comes to death, O how dark; there is no light whatever! Think, dear reader! Are you looking at the bright side or not? Are you looking for the hope of the faithful, which hope is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and even reaches into the sanctum sanctorum, even where Jesus has gone to appear for us? Yes. Now we have something to labor for—life eternal—and are we all working for that life—present—the life to live again? knowing we have no life out of Christ, we should try and get more in the right way every day. This is my hope and stay. This is what I want to live for—life everlasting—which is worth more than gold; but many are after the filthy lucre now, but by and by they will find it too late to be admitted into the kingdom of our Lord and Savior.

J. M. HARLAN.

Editor Restitution:—To the dear ones of the like precious faith. I came home yesterday from Clinton county we had a good meeting, there was one immersed on the last day of the meeting. Brother John Lawson was with us during the meeting, and helped to preach the word. Brother Lamson lives in Frankfort, Clinton county. Notwithstanding the bad weather there was a fair turn-out, and good attention during the meeting; the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Please say through THE RESTITUTION my time is not all occupied now in preaching the word, and if any of the brethren wants me to come and preach for them, they can write to me at Crawfordsville, Ind. J. S. HATCH.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Colton:—Vice has more martyrs than virtue.

Light cares speak; great ones are dumb.

Every accepted prayer is not an immediately answered prayer.

Sorrow is a summons to come up higher in Christian character.

No indulgence of passion destroys the spiritual nature so much as respectable selfishness.

Greg:—A sin without its punishment is as impossible, as complete a contradiction in terms, as a cause without an effect.

Jeremy Taylor:—Modesty is the appendage of sobriety, and is to chastity, to temperance, and to humility, as the fringes are to a garment.

PLEASANT WORDS.

No matter how the world may go,
How dark its shadows be,
Or whether June's sweet roses blow
To gladden you and me,
There always is a time of day
Our voices may be heard,
When we can pause beside the way
To say a pleasant word.

John Bunyan:—Prayer is the pitcher that fetcheth water from the brook wherewith to water the herbs; break the pitcher and it will fetch no water, and for want of water the garden will wither.

Don't [illegible] authorizes you to say disagreeable things to your intimates. On the contrary, the nearer you come into relation with a person, the more necessary do tact and courtesy become.

When you speak evil of another, you must be prepared to have others speak evil of you. There is an old Buddhist proverb which says, "He who indulges in enmity is like one who throws ashes to windward, which come back to the same place and cover him all over."

To the Christian nothing can be so dark but there can be a bright side.

"Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world, and what remains,
Of this tempestuous state of human things
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest;
For He, whose ear the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that rises upon His sultry march,
When sin hath moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy,—shall descend,
Propitious, in his chariot paved with love;
And what his storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."
—Cowper.

"Three hundred thousand earthly Sabbaths line the road that lies behind the people of God, pointing each with outstretched hand, like so many guide posts, in the same direction, and agreeing with overwhelming unanimity in their testimony to the blessed fact, that there remaineth a sabbatism for the people of God,"—and that it will soon be here.

Hannah More:—Private prayer is the golden pipe through which the Lord is graciously pleased to convey spiritual blessings to the soul. He knoweth all our wants, and, without our asking him, could supply all our wants in the best manner and at the best possible time. But he will be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do for them according to the exceeding great and precious promises he hath given.

Arabic Proverb:—Wisdom is better than riches. Wisdom guards thee, but thou must guard thy riches. Riches diminish in the using; but wisdom increases in the use of it.

"TO HIM THAT OVERCOMETH."

Great truths are greatly bought, Not found
By chance,
Nor waited on the breath of summer dream,
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream;
Won in the day of conflict, fear and grief,
When the strong hand of God, put forth in might,
Ploughs up the subsoil of the stagnant heart,
And brings the imprisoned truth-seed to the light.

POETRY.

[Whisper of Peace.]

In His Vineyard.

There is never a way so narrow or short,
But the Master's work is there;
There is something to do for His dear sake,
Or something to calmly bear.

There are trials to meet with Christian faith,
And duties with Christian grace;
And there's Christian sweetness to every one
To be given in every place.

Their working days are never so hard
Who find in Christ a stay;
And days of darkest are days of light,
When Jesus leads the way.

And the waiting days of those who love,
Are days of quietness;
And the praying days of those who trust,
Are days of perfect peace.

There are flowers down in the valley low,
And over the mountain side,
Which were never planted by a human voice,
Nor by human eyes descried.

Yet as sweet as the breath of the royal rose,
Is the perfume they exhale;
And why they bloom and where they bloom,
The good Lord knoweth well.

SELECTIONS.

[The Rainbow.]

Jerusalem in History and Prophecy.

The significance of the name of this famous city—"Dwelling of Peace"—demands a future to justify it. God, the Maker and owner of the world, has chosen the hill of Zion as the site of the world's metropolis, and no rivalry of other hills will induce him to alter his mind. "Why leap ye, ye high hills? this is the hill which God desireth to dwell in: yea, the Lord will dwell in it for ever" (Ps. lxviii. 16). "The Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it" (cxxxii. 13, 14). "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the great King. God is known in her palaces for a refuge" (xlviii. 1-3).

About these Scriptures there can be no mistake, and there are many others of similar import. Zion, Jerusalem, the city, and its palaces—to "spiritualize" these names, as if by some metaphorical mysticism they mean certain—or rather uncertain—aspects of the Christian Church, is to trifle with the word of truth, and to cheat human intelligence of precious information. Leave this verbal jugglery to pagan oracles, and sternly forbid it to cross the threshold of the divine temple! The living God does not peep and mutter like the impostors of necromancy, but speaks with clearness that men may understand.

We shall give an exceedingly condensed history of the city of Jerusalem, before we glance at its promised future. It was a city of the Amorites called "Jebus," on the north of Judah, but counted to Benjamin. It is fifteen miles from the Jordan and Salt Sea, and thirty-one from the Mediterranean. It was built on four hills: Zion, Acra, Moriah, and Bezetha. It was surrounded on the east, west, and south by a valley, which was environed with hills. It had three walls with towers, and was about four and a half miles in circumference. It was first taken by Judah, Judg. i. 8, but only in part ver. 21, and finally by David, B. C. 1049, 2 Sam. v. 6, 7. During 1014–1004 its temple was built. In 970 it was plundered by Shishak; and in 884 by the Philistines and Arabs in the days of Jehoram; in 808 by the Israelites; in 710 besieged by Sennacherib; in 610 taken by Pharaoh-Necho; in 598 plundered by Nebuchadnezzar; in 588 rebelled against him; in 587 the temple was burnt; in 536 Cyrus encourages its rebuilding; in 515 it is dedicated; in 445 Nehemiah rebuilds the wall; in 330 it is visited by Alexander the Great; in 320 captured by Ptolemy Soter; in 300 annexed to Egypt; in 170 its walls raised by Antiochus Epiphanes; in sixty-three taken by Pompey; in forty-four its walls rebuilt by Antipater, father of Herod the Great; on September 8, A. D. 70, it was destroyed by the Romans; in 130 rebuilt by Hadrian; in 335 Constantine founded by the church of the Holy Sepulchre; in 614 taken by the Persians; in 637 by the Saracens; in 1076 by the Turks; in 1098 assigned to Egypt; in 1099 taken by the Crusaders; in 1187 by Saladin; in 1228 assigned to the Christians; in 1243 taken by the Carizmians; in 1517 by the Ottomans; in 1832 assigned to Egypt; and in 1841 to Turkey.

But this city which has endured so many sieges—this city whose history casts the most extravagant romance into the shade—this city which killed the prophets, and filled up the measure of its iniquities by slaying the prince of life—this marvellous city, we say, must have a future to justify its name. "Salem"—peace! The epitome of its history just given is not remarkably suggestive of peace. The fiercest wars that ever raged have been in connection with Jerusalem. The so-called "Eastern Question," which has perplexed Europe for many years, and caused enormous destruction of men and money, is related to it, though politicians may be ignorant of the fact; and the day comes space when the impressive prediction of Zechariah will be fulfilled: "Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all the people that are round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem. And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people; all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it," xii. 2, 3.

The vision of peace in relation to the city of the Lord will become, must become, a realised fact; but that can only be by the coming to it of the prince of peace, when men will give it the grand name of "Jehovah-shammah"—"The Lord is there." Ezekiel's last word.

Of this divinely joyous theme the prophets were moved to speak from time to time; for the Lord means to rescue his city and land, to restore his people Israel, and to send blessings to the utmost limits of the earth, from the metropolis of his dominions. Thus: "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers," Jer. iii. 17, 18. "Judah shall dwell for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed; for the Lord dwelleth in Zion." Joel iii. 20, 21. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people; and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again." Zech. ii. 10–12.

When men moved by the Holy Spirit speak thus, it is our duty and privilege to listen. The arrogance and impudence, the positive infidelity of some men, who are nevertheless "Christians," are mournful. All these clear declarations are unblushingly ignored or explained away, exhaled into oriental figure, or by a process of theological "accommodation"—in plain language, holy theft—applied to things connected with the economy and ministry of grace and the Christian Church. This twisting and torturing of the divine word has robbed the followers of Christ of priceless treasures of intelligence to which they were entitled, the possession of which would have made them men—"sons of light," strong in the Lord. But instead of this, what do we find? Melancholy ignorance of Scripture, an extremely narrow circle of thought revolving around the very A B C of personal salvation, sometimes attenuated into metaphysical cobwebs without a particle of strength, and at other times crushed into a pitiful sectarianism without a particle of charity. The metaphysical teacher swathes your intellect in fog; the small sectarian binds your heart in ice. Which will you have? Neither, neither, we pray you! for the glorious future of the Church, and the beautiful future of the world are utterly unseen by both. Metaphysical mysticism has extinguished the light of revelation; sectarian bitterness has extinguished its love. Let us try, in the name of Him who is both light and love, to extinguish both these foes of God and man! it will be a difficult task, but the greater the difficulty the greater will be the honour of success: and success is certain if we fight the Lord's battle under the Lord's direction.

By way of illustration take a specimen each. The metaphysical theologian of course glorifies mind and refuses to accept anything which appears to him to disregard the standard he has set up. "The coming of the Lord," said one of these brethren to me, "yes, certainly, He is always coming. An impression upon the mind, and intellectual influence, a desire for a better state of things, an occasional rising of the heart heavenward, these are all visits from the Lord. He is always coming."

"Are you really satisfied," I said, "that the Scriptures mean nothing more than these mental impressions when they speak of the presence—παρουσια—of our Lord?"

"I am satisfied that no man who has any regard for his own mental peace will cross swords with you Fifth Monarchy men! You take the Scriptures literally, and there is no dealing with you."

The narrow man who delights in the idea of a "little flock," and who is far more Calvanistic than John Calvin, is, of course, blind to the breadth and splendor of the prospects which the light of revelation reveals in relation to the nations of the world, after the church has been perfected in the glory. That miserable thing called "spiritualizing," is the joy of his heart; and he uses it sometimes in grotesque fashion. The following illustration bears directly upon the subject of this paper, and as it is not from any secondhand source, but from personal recollection, the reader may accept it as literally true.

The preacher's text was that grand prediction, Mic. iv. 8, "And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." It is many years ago, but I distinctly remember the thought flashed through me, "Surely the preacher will do his best to describe the happiness of the world through the royalty of Israel whose Messiah shall then be present, for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."—(v. 2.)

"My brethren," said the speaker, "this is a part of the covenant of grace. The stronghold of the daughter of Zion is election. You see how electing love works. Ah! it may well be called a stronghold. The devil can't conquer election, though he has all the blind Arminians on his side! He hates election, and so do they. Well, we the dear children, the precious little flock, are the daughter of Jerusalem; not of the bond woman, but of the free—Jerusalem which is above, the mother of all the elect. We are to have the first dominion, that is nearest the throne in heaven. There may be some Arminians in heaven, I don't know, there may be a few through sovereign grace, but they will be a long way off, just inside the door, where there is very little light—that will suit their weak eyes, you know! (smiles of approval); but they will never come near us to all eternity, for the first dominion (strong emphasis) comes to the daughter of Zion, that is the elect church."

This is the substance of an hour's talk. It came to an end at last, as all painful inflictions do, sooner or later, and we left with a feeling of pity for both pastor and flock. But if men will rob Israel of its promised national blessings, Jerusalem of its metropolitan magnificence, as the city of the great King, and that King himself of the splendid dominion that awaits his advent, their knowledge of the Scriptures must be both limited and confused. We thought of the apostolic charge to Timothy: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

But one word more about the city of peace—the Jerusalem that is to be; and Isaiah shall be the speaker this time: "Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities; thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby. For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver; the Lord is our King; he will save us.—Dr. Leask, Editor of Rainbow.

The Bible of Modern Science.

The preparation of the new Bible, which is to be inspired by sweet reasonableness, has not made much advance yet. We lay before our readers the improved version of the first chapter of Genesis:

1. There never was a beginning.

2. And Cosmos was homogeneous and undifferentiated, and somehow or another evolution began and molecules appeared.

3. And molecule evolved protoplasm, and rhythmic thrills arose, and then there was light.

4. And a spirit of envy was developed and formed the plastic cell whence arose the primordial germ.

5. And the primordial germ became protogene, and protogene somehow shaped cercon, then was the dawn of life.

6. And the herb yielding seed and the fruit tree yielding fruit after its own kind, whose seed is in itself, developed according to its own fancy.

7. The cattle after his kind, the beast of the earth after his kind, and every creeping thing became evolved by heterogeneous segregation and concomitant dissipation of motion.

8. So that by survival of the fittest there evolved the similads from the jelly-fish, and the similads differentiated themselves into the anthropomorphic primordial types.

9. And in due time one lost his tail and became man, and behold he was the most cunning of all animals.

10. And in process of time, by natural selection and survival of the fittest, Matthew Arnold, Herbert Spencer, and Charles Darwin appeared, and behold it was very good.

Women of the Middle Ages.

To see Avignon, its ramparts, and the Papal fortress castle, has been a dream I have cherished for many long years. I shall never forget the utter peacefulness of the town which reposed me perfectly after the noisy, barbaric luxury of Paris. My room in the excellent Hotel de l'Europe looked out on one of its two court-yards, in which stood many trees, one a magnificent palm-tree. Its branches swept against my windows; I could touch the large leaves, and at nightfall and early morning hear the little birds twitter in the depths of its leafy shades. Near the hotel are the remains of the palace of Joanna of Naples, that Marie Stuart of the Middle Ages who, when young and beautiful and her fair fame blackened with slander, stood up in the vast consistory hall of the Papal palace before the greatest men of her day and defended herself from the charge of murder so well in choice Latin that she was acquitted. Oh, my strong-minded sisters of this nineteenth century, you will have to rise early and go to bed late before you can equal those splendid women of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance!

A Marriage Procession in Nazareth.

While we were resting under some olive trees to-day a marriage procession passed us. It was led by about fifty men in their best clothes, well mounted and armed, who were escorting a bride home. Some of these men played upon curious musical instruments. In their midst sat the bride, astride upon a white caparisoned horse led by a man in flowing robes. Her wonderful garments were stiff with embroidery, and she was laden with magnificent jewels. She wore the usual jacket, shirt, tunic, fall, and loose trousers, and was attended by four very ugly old hags as bridesmaids, who were nearly as smart as herself. But these antique damsels (or dames) were distinguished by extraordinary head-dresses, composed of rolls of silver coins about the size of a florin, piled up like money on a money-changer's counter, and arranged round the front of a sort of cap, something of the shape of a great sausage. The procession included a host of women and children, and the rear was brought up by a solitary camel, bearing a huge scarlet and green box aloft, which box contained the bride's trousseau.

There is trouble between the church and the press at Ottawa, in the providence of Ontario. The Roman Catholic Bishop recently visited Rome and obtained from his Holiness the bones of Saint Æmilius which, on his return to Ottawa, he presented to the cathedral of that city. There was a grand ceremony when the relic was brought to the church. It was borne from the Bishop's house by four priests; the students of the Roman Catholic College formed a guard of honor; sixty clergymen appeared in the procession, among them two Bishops; and the bones were exposed in the church for nine days. A local newspaper, owned and edited by an Irish Catholic, referred in a rather contemptuous manner to the relic and the ceremonies attending its reception, pointing to the men who had sacrificed their lives in endeavoring to enlarge the liberties of Irishmen as the true martyrs. The Bishop denounced the irreverent editor from the pulpit; the editor replied in his newspaper; then the Bishop, over his own signature, censured him in the other local papers, and then the recalcitrant editor declared his independence of the church and all its representatives.

From one idea we must judge all. No truth or dogma so humble that it has no biography written down in the vast book of nature. There are ephemeral insects, it is said, which live only one day. One day and night begin and close their experience. But to them that day is a career. There are stranger things in nature. There is a plant which opens almost the liveliest flower man ever beholds, and which pours forth perfume enough to fill a cathedral with holy incense; and yet that plant opens its flower only in the dead of night, and opens it but once. Two hours of color and sweetness contain the birth and death of this beautiful member of the floral band. But who will say that these two hours are not a history? Indeed, they make up a better record than the half-century of many a man stained with vice, or inaction, or crime. The life of many a rose is better than the life of many a man.—Prof. David Swing.

An Offended Priest.

BATESVILLE, Ind., November 14.—A Catholic priest of Morris, three miles east of this place, was arrested to-day for brutally beating three children of his church who acted as pall-bearers at the funeral of a Protestant child three years old. A change of venue was asked by the priest, and his preliminary trial is being held before Charles Johnson, Justice of the Peace of the township this evening.

A conflict between Church and State is raging in New South Wales, occasioned by the reading of a pastoral letter of the bishops in all the Roman Churches on Aug. 3, urging the faithful to withdraw their children from the public schools. A few days later Archbishop Vaughan, at a confirmation service, called upon those of the candidates who attended the public schools to step forward, and then refused to confirm them unless their parents would promise to remove them from these schools. In a single week 1,500 children were removed from the schools at Sydney. Then the Archbishop preferred charges against the public schools of godlessness and immortality; and he had no sooner proclaimed them than the Rev. Joseph Jefferies took up the gauntlet in defence of the schools. From the ecclesiastical field the controversy went to the press and then into the Council of education, so that all parties are now discussing the question of religious instruction in the public schools.

"Europe has not had a more troubled aspect," says an eminent journalist "since the battle of Waterloo than she presents now. Germany and Austria are against Britain and France respecting the management of Egyptian affairs. Russia, and probably France and Italy, are against Britain, Germany and Austria on Turkish affairs. All are armed or arming to the teeth, and no one can even guess at the result of the conflicting interests and bad feelings which are becoming more and more apparent every day." Students of prophecy will see in this description a confirmation of the conclusions drawn from Holy Writ that the close of this dispensation is near at hand.

THE SUN FOR 1880.

The Sun will deal with the events of the year 1880 in its own fashion, now pretty well understood by everybody. From January 1 until December 31 it will be conducted as a newspaper, written in English language, and printed for the people.

As a newspaper, The Sun believes in getting all the news of the world promptly, and presenting it in the most intelligible shape—in the shape that will enable its readers to keep well abreast of the age with the least unprofitable expenditure of time. The greatest interest to the greatest number will be the interest controlling its daily make-up. It now has a circulation very much larger than that of any other American newspaper, and enjoys an income which it is at all times prepared to spend liberally for the benefit of its readers. People of all conditions of life and all ways of thinking buy and read The Sun; and they all derive satisfaction from its columns, for they keep on buying and reading it.

In its comments on men and affairs, The Sun believes that the only guide of policy should be common sense, inspired by genuine American principles and backed by honesty of purpose. For this reason it is, and will continue to be, absolutely independent of party, class, clique, organization, or interest. It is for all, but of none. It will continue to praise what is good and reprobate what is evil, taking care that its language is to the point and plain, beyond the possibility of being misunderstood. It is unhampered by motives that do not appear on the surface. It has no opinions to sell, and those which may be had by any purchaser with two cents. It hates injustice and timidity even more than it hates unnecessary words. It abhors frauds, likes fools, and deplores circumpuncts of every species. It will continue throughout the year 1880 to chastise the first with the bludgeon of the second, and persecute the third. All honest men, with honest consciences, whether sound or mistaken, are its friends. And The Sun makes no bones of telling the truth to its friends and about its friends whenever occasion arises for plain speaking.

These are the principles upon which The Sun will be conducted during the year to come.

The year 1880 will be one in which no patriotic American can afford to close his eyes to public affairs. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the political events which it has in store, or the necessity of resolute vigilance on the part of every citizen who desires to preserve the Government that the founders gave us. The debates and acts of Congress, the utterances of the press, the exciting contests of the Republican and Democratic parties, now nearly equal in strength throughout the country, the surging drift of public sentiment, will all bear directly and effectively upon the twenty-fourth Presidential election, to be held in November. The Sun will be on hand to chronicle the facts as they are developed, and to exhibit them clearly and fearlessly in their relations to expedient and right.

Thus, with a habit of philosophical good humor in looking at the minor affairs of life, and in great things a steadfast purpose to maintain the rights of the people and the principles of the Constitution against all aggressors, The Sun is prepared to write a truthful, fair, impartial, and at the same time entertaining history of 1880.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the Daily Sun, a forty-eight sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year, postage paid.

The price of the Weekly Sun, eight pages, fifty six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs often sending, $10 we will send one copy free.

POETRY.

Charity.

Give! tho the gift be ever so small;
Better do little than nothing at all;
An act of kindness, a word, a prayer
To lighten the burden of sorrow and care.

Little hands, little hearts, their little may do;
Little works of advice, so kind and so true;
Little errands of mercy and actions of love;
Little prayers prayed to earnest for help from above.

The celestial giver is loved of the Lord,
And Charity bears all love its reward;
E'en the poor widow's mite was called than all—
"Twas the best she could do, though the gift was small.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Plain Facts No. 4.

Brethren, I will make a few remarks before I proceed further on the subject of "Plain Facts." First, I would have the readers of THE RESTITUTION to understand that I am not wholly the composer of the articles called Plain Facts. But nevertheless as I mingle my ideas together with those that I collect from other works on the great subject of salvation, I shall sign my name as the writer of these facts, but not wholly the composer. With this explanation I will proceed to the subject.

4th. This purpose of Jehovah to establish a universal kingdom on earth, with Christ as its head, has a connection with God's past dealings with the nation of the Jews. This connection must be understood before the bearing of God's purpose in the future can be clearly understood. To assist in the attainment of this understanding, we affirm the following facts:

The kingdom of God has already once existed, being the kingdom of Israel, divinely constituted under the hand of Moses, existent 2,000 years ago, in the land of Palestine. And of all my sons, (for the Lord hath given me many sons), he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord over Israel. 1st Chron. xxviii. 5. Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne to be king for the Lord thy God. 2d Chron. ix. 8. And now ye think to withstand the kingdom of the Lord in the hands of the sons of David. 2d Chron. xiii. 8. It was divinely overturned and scattered to the winds on account of iniquity.

And that profane, wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God; remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him. Eze. xxi. 25-27.

There is no avoiding this fact, according to the Scriptures, just so sure as Zedekiah was the king that last reigned over the Jews, and just so sure as it was overturned some six hundred years B. C., just so sure Christ will come the second time and rule and reign over them and the nations of the earth. Isaiah ix. 6-7. For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called wonderful counselor. The mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment, and with justice from henceforth even forever. Brethren, I for one, long to enjoy such a kingdom, amen. But at the present time the Jews are without a king, a governor, and according to the word of Hosea, iii. 4-5, he says the children shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David (Heb. "beloved") their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days. Luke xxi. 24; Matt. xxiii. 36-39. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captives into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Isaiah lxiii. 14-19. Return for thy servant's sake, the tribes of thine inheritance; the people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while; our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary. We are thine: thou never barest rule over them, (the nations) they were not called by thy name. This prediction was uttered in the reign of Zedekiah, the last Israelitish king in the line of David, B. C. 593; ever since that time the kingdom has been overturned. It was overthrown by Nebuchadnezzar in the days of Zedekiah, and was afterwards successively trampled down by Greece and Rome. Since the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the kingdom of David (i. e. the kingdom of God) has had no existence, but we notice by the secular papers, as well as religious papers, that the Jews are gathering pretty fast to the land of Palestine, which is in accordance with the Scriptures. Doubtless we near the time when he shall come whose right it is. Amen.

Time of Reward.

As there is a vast difference in the minds of the people in regard to the time of reward, I will pen a few lines on that subject, and give Bible proof for what I have to say. First, Jesus says, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v. 5.

David, in Psa. xxxvii. 9, says, "But those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth," and in verse 22, "For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth. The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever. Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it."

Solomon says, "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it." Prov. ii. 21.

Prov. x. 30, says "The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." Also, Prov. xi. 31, "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." The Bible names the place of reward, and the time of reward in Luke xiv. 14: "And thou shalt be blessed, for they (the poor, the lame and the blind) cannot recompense thee, for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

We now turn back to Matt. xvi. 27; "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Therefore all will be rewarded at his coming on the earth. This is the universal teaching of the Bible. Over one hundred and fifty years ago John Wesley taught, that the souls of good men did not go to heaven. He says in Vol. 2, p. 413: "It is indeed very generally supposed that the souls of good men, as soon as they are discharged from the body, go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least particle of foundation in the oracle of God."

The discourse Wesley made when preaching on the subject of the rich man and Lazarus, we see by that Wesley did not believe men were rewarded at death.

Again, Rev. v. 9, 10: "And they sung a new song, saying, thou art worthy to take the Book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

We commence with the promises of God to Abraham down to the apostles and the revelations and promises in earth and land, and not sky and heaven. Then let us believe the record that God has given us, and not the tradition of our fathers. For Peter says: "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish or spot." 1 Pet. i. 18, 19.

The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness, "but is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Peter iii. 9. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." St. John xvii. 17. Amen.

Dear Brother Chaplin, as this is only my third attempt, I hope you will look over the errors if there be any. I am now eighteen years of age, and can not do so well as some of the more experienced. I am trying to live so that I can meet all the dear brothers and sisters in the soon-coming kingdom where there will be no more sorrow, no fastings, nor anything to cause sadness.

In hope of this, I remain your sister in Christ. AZORAH E. HATCH.

"Be Courteous,"

It will make you feel better; it will make those you associate with feel better. It will cost you nothing but self control, and that will do you good. You may have to think twice, and sort your words; but these will be worth more with the culls left out; the hot ones that jump to tongue or pen on impulse are rarely the best; nobody will suffer less if they are forced back, and words of patience, kindness, courtesy uttered instead, or a respectful silence maintained. Hasty and disrespectful words make a strong man appear weak, and injure a good cause which the speaker would be glad to serve. A courteous bearing is a great help to argument, and one which the friends of unpopular truth cannot afford to dispense with.

May I be kindly plain? An intelligent writer, a good man and a strong preacher, in a recent article in an earnest and protracted discussion, now before me, asks:

"Is it possible that brethren equally intelligent can be governed by the literal rule of interpretation, and yet by a fair exegesis of the texts of Scripture quoted, can find support for these widely divergent themes?"

Most certainly it is possible. I venture to say that it is one of the most common things that comes under the questioner's observation. It is merely an infirmity of the judgment, and should be treated courteously.

Further along he says: "Certainly nothing but the inexorable demands of a theory would demand the wresting of this text from its entire context."

That is a pretty serious charge. Does the writer really think it deserved? I do not, though I do not hold the theory he is opposing.

Again. "All Christians must place the former construction on Job's language."

"Courteous," brother. You don't mean that the brother you are opposing is not a Christian, nor that it is impossible for persons to hold the interpretation he does of that text in Job and be Christians. Then, please don't say so. Your age, experience, vocation and position require that you "be courteous." Please look that article over, and see if it would not serve your purpose better, and the cause you so dearly love and have served so long and so well, if expressions like these I have quoted, were cut out? Let us be careful that what we do is not spoiled by the way we do it.

Will the brother please remember and say to others, that the New Testament does not require a particular opinion about the resurrection of the wicked as a condition of Christian character and salvation? So Christians may differ widely on that subject.

Severance Meeting.

According to notice the meeting convened Oct. 23. Brother Prosser was absent on account of sickness in his family. Brother Adams was present and spoke from this Scripture: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked." Friday nigh the spoke on the Time of Reward. Saturday several hours were spent in what we term a speaking meeting, in which all have an opportunity to present a doctrine, or admonition, or to sing a psalm, or hymn, or spiritual song. Saturday night he spoke to a full house from this text: "Seek first the kingdom of God." By a mis-reading of the notice Brother Pierson did not arrive till Sunday morning—house full. The speaker divided the time on this subject: "What must I do to be saved." Sunday night the house was full to overflowing. Brother Pierson spoke on the purpose of God concerning man on earth. His deep, earnest manner, in which he presented it, held the audience spellbound.

Several persons expressed themselves highly gratified and instructed. The seed of the kingdom found lodgement, but Satan immediately commenced to dig up the seed. The great and precious promises were so kindly presented by the speakers, that we trust and hope the meeting will result in good. The meeting closed by singing this hymn: "There will be no more sorrow when Jesus comes."

Brother Prosser will come some time in the future.

Yours in Hope,

J. P. BITNER.

Conference Report.

The annual conference of the Christian Association of Iowa, convened at Tener, Tama county, Iowa, on Thursday evening, Oct. 23, 1879, and held over the following Sunday. Brothers S. S. Hayden and George Moyer, were present and preached the word of the kingdom, the meetings were well attended and a good interest was manifested; quite a large number of friends came from abroad to attend the meeting. The conference was called to order Oct. 25th, at three o'clock p. m. M. A. Newcomb, vice president in the chair; there being no unfinished business, the election of officers for the ensuing year was the next in order, the result of which was that of Bro. G. R. Chown, of Irwin, for president; Bro. S. P. Allard, of Spring Creek, for vice president; M. A. Newcomb, of Tener, for secretary; Bro. C. C. Hoskins, of Waltham, for treasurer. The three additions necessary to fill the board were then chosen as follows: Brothers J. H. Stevens, of Marysville; C. P. Burrouga, of Floyd; and Silas Peck, of New Hartford. Three persons were baptized on Sunday afternoon. The conference adjourned to the call of the president.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I spent Sunday, Nov. 2, with the church at Fruitport, a pleasant little place in Muskegon county, at the head of Spring Lake; spoke twice and baptized one sister in the Lord. Was there once also last summer, and baptized five obedient believers. The church at that place was gathered into order chiefly through the labors of our dear brother, Dr. James Skeels, who fell asleep in Jesus nearly a year ago, leaving behind him a precious fragrance of good works and consistent faith. He, with others, succeeded in forming a "union church," with elements from nine religious denominations. They have worked together with as much harmony, perhaps, as could be expected. Of course there has been some friction; there is anywhere among earnest people; but charity, as a centripetal power, has so far been stronger than any centrifugal force. The truth is vocalized and lived.

Elder Hughes, who preaches to the church under the auspices of the Congregational Missionary Society, treated me with great kindness, and had me fill his regular appointment at my last visit, he listening and taking part in the meetings. May he and the church have great peace and comfort in the Lord.

O. R. L. CROZIER.

Hot Springs, Ark.

Dear Brethren and Sisters—You have all read Brother J. P. Weethee's writings. You feel acquainted with him. You would be glad to see him, have him enter your houses and talk face to face with you. We were made thus glad. On his way home from the Argos Conference, he stopped off a week with us, delivering one discourse at Plerceton, and five at the Gospel Grove meeting house.

No words of ours can express what we would like to say. We can only open our lips in thanksgiving that God sent him to us that we might through him be shown more clearly the blessed path of life. We thought we knew something of the way in which we should live to be ready for the Master, but how meager our knowledge seems now, how far we are from attaining unto that perfect standard that has been held up to us!

We, long ago, threw off the hateful garment of sin, put on the robe of Christ's righteousness and covered it with the Christian's armor, but alas! how often have our weapons been laid down, the sword put behind us, our lips compressed in silence! We have sometimes done well, but we have not continued doing well, or if continuing have not patiently continued.

Though holding fast to our faith, we have forgotten to be temperate in all things, have not endured hardness as good soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ, but have murmured and become discouraged because of the giants in the way, and because of the little fruit gathered as the result of our labor. But listening to the solemn warnings, the admonitions, the blessed assurances of this faithful servant of our Lord, our strength has been renewed, and we feel better able to go on, fighting the good fight, until the Master shall come. Our sins have been set in the light of God's countenance; we have looked upon ourselves as we are, as that pure and holy being looks upon us, and have cried out from the depths of our hearts, "Oh cleanse thou me from secret faults?" We have shrunk into nothingness, beholding the narrow gate at the end of the way; the rugged, toilsome way, that leads to the glorious city of life, and have prayed, as we were shown the little flock, standing among the scoffers of the last days: "Christ's reign of subjugation" about to begin; "the stone about to smite the great image on the feet, so that the wind might carry it away as the chaff—that we might be found ready, without spot and blameless, when we should be called to meet our Lord.

We are seeking for that ineffable glory that is to fill the whole earth, for the honor of reigning with him, who is to put down all rule and all authority; for the state that is to know no death,—and we expect to be rewarded with an endless life. And that we may have that life, we want to continue patiently in well doing, we want to love the blessed hope; not only to have it, but to love it, because it is only when we have a sincere love for the Lord's coming, that we purify ourselves for that coming.

We must be found standing out separate from the world, clad as pilgrims, watching, waiting, longing, for the king, not beating our fellow-servants, reveling at festivals, nor eating and drinking with the drunken, but earnestly contending for the faith, and continuing constant in prayer, be ready with lighted lamps, to meet the bridegroom. The crown is for the loving watchers.

Those who are not ready, who have not put on Christ, have been stripped of their robes of self-righteousness, have had all their fortresses torn away. Will they get ready now? Or will they wait until "the knee is made to bow at a time when they can no longer be saved?" Will they think? will they consider their ways and be wise? or will they "sit still" until they die?"

We hope that some will heed and "right about face," towards the celestial city. One dear child resolved to obey the Lord at no distant day. Precious little Kitty! "Suffer the little ones to come!" Another, of older years, is studying the word, that her duty may be plain and that she may obey understandingly—counting the cost. Pray for them.

We parted from Brother Weethee with regret. He had come west to remain some time, if there had been an opportunity for proclaiming the precious truths that he loves, but as no other door seemed to open, he thought best to return. He will visit us again at some future time, if the Lord will, yet if we never look upon his face until we meet in the kingdom, we know we shall not cease to thank God for what he has done for us. The Lord bless him now and evermore.

In the Blessed Hope,

J. L. & S. ROXANA WINCE.

Editor Restitution:—The cause in Michigan is looking a little more favorable than it has for some years. There seems to be a determination among the brethren to take hold of the work in earnest. What we want is more of the practical; after understanding the Gospel of the kingdom, then we are to go on to perfection. Every one that has this hope purifieth himself. Nothing is better calculated to help do this work than the meeting together of the brethren in the capacity of socials and prayer meetings. Let us keep up our prayer and conference meetings, and when we send out an Evangelist, let us give him our hearty sympathy, by words of encouragement and our earnest prayers. Paul may plant, but God giveth the increase. Brother Myers is in this State at work. May the Lord bless his work abundantly is my earnest prayer.

Yours in the Hope,

BENJAMIN WOODWARD.

Editor Restitution:—In the Abrahamic faith, which, I believe, is the faith once delivered to the Saints, by which we are sealed unto the day of redemption of the purchased possession that is reserved in heaven for us, who are kept by the power of God, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time, when the Son of Man will be seen coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. How it becomes every one to be prepared for such a great change—to be changed from mortal to immortality; for the trumpet shall sound, and we shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. Then shall be brought to pass the saying: "Death is swallowed up in victory." Then we can say thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Who shall gain this victory? Those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, power and immortality—eternal life. If we would obtain the prize, we must do the commands of Christ. He says "except you deny yourselves, and take up the cross daily, you cannot be my disciples." It is an every day work. Well what is the cross we must take up? It must be something different from our common avocations of life, for there would be no cross in that, for that is just what we want to do, and to do as the world does. But to come out from the world and be separate as we are commanded, in order to be received as sons and daughters of the Almighty, is indeed a cross that very few will take up, and by the neglect of this we see with sorrow where the church is drifting to. In their Laodicean state they are so wedded to the world they see no signs of the Savior's coming, and will not until that blast of Gabriel's mighty trumpet breaks upon their slumbering ears, to call them to judgment. O, that the Lord would arouse both preacher and people, to sound the cry: "behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." Let all the virgins trim their lamps for their king is coming; soon, yea very soon, and my prayer is, even so come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Lord prepare us all for a seat at thy table in the kingdom. Your sister looking for Christ.

BREVITIES.

Eastern Siberia has been suffering from famine, no whales or other fish having visited those waters this summer. At Iojun Point all but one man out of two hundred inhabitants perished.

The reading room of the British Museum contains three miles of bookcases eight feet high. The dome whence the electric light irradiates the vast room is next to that of the Pantheon at Rome, the largest extant.

The Scriptures, whole or in part, have already been translated into no less than 250 tongues. One of the latest has been made by the Rev. John Ross into the language of Corea, a country to which the new native church of Japan has resolved to send a missionary.

Several varieties of the olive have been found to grow readily in different soils in all the Australian colonies, and the cultivation of the tree, which has been carried on with considerable success in Queensland and in South Australia, is now being largely taken up in Victoria and New South Wales.

The Japanese Government has charged Dr. E. Naumann, a son of the famous German mineralogist, with making a systematic geological survey of the empire. Sixty thousand dollars annually has been granted for that purpose for twelve years. A "Geographical Society," recently founded at Tokio, proposes to devote its energies more especially to the Geography of Japan. Most, if not all, of its members are Japanese, among them being several high dignitaries of State.

The operations undertaken to connect the triangulation of Algeria with that of Spain have been crowned with complete success, the angles of a triangle, the sides of which, nearly 180 miles in length, extended across the Mediterranean, having been correctly measured. The work was carried out by means of electric lights, four of which were employed, one at each angle of a quadrilateral. The lamps employed were Serrin's, the electric current for each being generated by a Gramme machine worked by a small steam engine of four or five horse power. Powerful reflectors were employed to direct the rays of each lamp to the three other corners of the quadrilateral, from which the light, viewed through a telescope, appeared like a star of the second magnitude. During the month of September each of the angles was measured forty times.

There is in the Royal Library at Stockholm an immense manuscript, which, when open, covers about a square of surface, and requires two or three men to lift it. It consists of 300 leaves of thick parchment, probably of asses' skin, and contains the Old Testament, the Antiquities and Jewish Wars of Josephus, the Origines of Isidore, a medical work of Johannicius Johannes Alexandrinus, the New Testament, a curious picture of the devil, and other miscellaneous matter. It belonged to a small Benedictine monastery at Podiazlo, in Bohemia. The date of its transcription may be ascribed to the period between 1224 and 1230. Late in the 16th century it was taken to Prague, whence it was carried off by the Swedes in the last year of the thirty years' war (1648). Since then it has been in its present home.

A LUCKY FIND.

The Cyrenaic gold coin, which is likely to be taken by the British Museum, was brought to Capt. Gorringe, United States Navy, by the Arab who found it, and who said he could not pass it. The Captain handed him a piece of 20 francs for it, and the man expressed his astonishment and gratitude by many protestations of thanks, and by kissing his hand. The intrinsic value of this stater is about $5; but, for its extreme rarity and fine condition, it is expected to bring $1,000.

THE FIRST JEW SHERIFF OF LONDON.

It is a fact well worthy of note, amid whatever records of court ceremonial and of political change, that a few days after the accession of the Queen, Mr. Montefiore was elected Sheriff of London, the first Jew who had ever been chosen for that office; and that he received knighthood at the hands of Her Majesty, when she visited the city on the following Lord Mayor's day. He was the first Jew whom royalty had honored in this country, since the good old times when royalty was pleased to borrow the Jew's money or order instead of the extraction of his teeth. The expansion of the principle of religious liberty and equality, which has been one of the most remarkable characteristics of the reign of Queen Victoria, could hardly have been more becomingly inaugurated than by the compliment which sovereign and city paid to Sir Moses Montefiore.—[History of Our Times.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Bible "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

WILEY JONES.

John xi. 1-44.

Verse 1: "Now a certain man was sick," rather, "but (δὲ) a certain man was sick;" showing why the Savior returned so soon from beyond Jordan, "Bethany," this town is noticed, while Thebes and Memphis are not named in the New Testament. The presence of the Lord's people makes a village more famous in his sight than a great city where there are none.

Verse 2: "It was that Mary," etc. The sweet fragrance of that holy deed gives her perpetual renown. Let us therefore "do good as we have opportunity," and "be not weary in well doing" for "the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." Gal. vi. 9, 10; Psa. cxii. 6. This anointing by the sister of Lazarus is not to be confounded with that by an entirely different person, in Luke vii. 38.

Verse 3: "Sent unto him." This does not prove any lack of faith in his knowledge. He saw Nathaniel under the fig-tree; the recovery of the nobleman's son; the colt tied; the upper room furnished; Lazarus dead; etc. Why then send to him, if he knew it already? As well ask "why pray?" for the Lord knows our wants. But "therefore pray ye;" only use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do, who pray to lifeless idols which know nothing. Matt. vi. 8, 9. "Call upon me in the day of trouble." Psa. l. 15. "The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers." 1 Pet. iii. 12. They were the wicked who said, "what profit shall we have if we pray unto him?" Job xxi. 15; Mal. iii. 14. Let us cry unto our Father in every time of trouble, for we can send a message to heaven by prayer as really and truly as Mary and Martha sent this. "His sisters sent unto him;" see what a useful and blessed thing it is to have praying sisters, and other such relatives and friends. Perhaps Lazarus, in his last moments had grieved much at the thought of dying and leaving his sisters—how helpless they were! And yet, in reality, how helpful they were! No human strength could have done more for him than they did; nay, perhaps a pompous "doctor" from Jerusalem had already given up Lazarus as a lost patient, when they sent that humble and prayerful message to the Savior.

"Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." The words are few; as the urgency of the case required. They did not expect to "be heard for their much speaking." If a child falls into a well or pit, run and tell his father in the briefest and plainest manner. It may be a surprise to some, that one whom the Lord loveth should sicken and die. But this is no proof that he does not love us. Death, although denounced against sinners, fell first on a saint. The Christian life may often abound in afflictions, labors and physical weakness. The brightest lamp is often the first to burn itself out. Epaphroditus and Timothy were both of weak health, and Paul could not prevent it. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." "All things work together for good to them that love God." Chastening may seem grievous at first, but "afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them that are exercised thereby." Heb. xii. 11. The hardest bricks are made in the hottest fire. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all"—sooner or later; if not in this life, at least in that which is to come. Psa. xxxiv. 19.

"Whom thou lovest." It is his love to us that gives us our chief importance. "We love him because he first loved us" 1 John iv. 19. His love is mighty, and, like a ray of sunlight, can penetrate the deepest grave and warm into endless life the silent dust of his saints.

Verse 6: "He abode two days still in the same place." He hears our prayers; they are like sweet incense treasured up in golden vials. Rev. v. 8. But he abideth still "within the vail," interceding for us; while day and night his waiting people cry out, "Come, Lord Jesus. .... Oh, that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down." Isa. lxiv. 1. He could have spoken a word and Lazarus "in the same hour" would have begun to amend, as did the nobleman's son. John iv. 50. But "we must through much tribulation enter the kingdom of God." Their brother grows worse every moment. Oh, how anxiously they must have listened at every slight sound without, hoping to hear that "the Master is come!" But the day wears its weary length away; the stars beam out in the silent sky; and the dew sparkles along the pathway, undisturbed by any approaching footstep. At last, softly as the summer wave upon the shore, their brother heaves a long sad, sad sigh, and—is dead! Ah, you can weep aloud now, loving sisters; your sobs will not pain the silent sleeper; though in life he might have said, "[illegible] weep and to break my heart?" Acts xxi. 13. Kind neighbors in due time help to lay Lazarus away in the tomb. But where is the blessed Jesus? Ah, he knows it all. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Psa. cxvi. 15. "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." Prov. xv. 3.

Verse 7: "Let us go into Judea again," etc. Yes, and as truly as he then returned to Judea he will yet return to this earth, for although the people of this world have once "sought to kill" him, and succeeded, yet he triumphed over death, ascended to heaven and will soon stand upon this very earth "again." Acts i. 11; Job xix. 25, 26; Zech. xiv. 4. The heavens will not contain or detain him beyond "the times of the restoration of all things" which the prophets have foretold. Acts iii. 21. One of the things whose restoration the prophets have foretold is life to the dead—"thy dead men shall live," "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Isa. xxvi. 19; Dan. xii. 2.

Verse 11: "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." He still calls him "friend." God is still "the God of Abraham" for Abraham "shall rise again." Death does not sever from his love. The ties of the flesh are quickly broken, but the ties of religion are the best of bonds, and are indestructible "so long as ye do well." 1 Pet. iii. 6. Lord help us every one to "be not weary in well doing."

"Lazarus sleepeth," etc. How gentle and tender that expression—sleepeth! It is viewing death on the bright side. So Paul, when he must say "it is sown in dishonor," immediately turns the picture and says, "it is raised in glory." He did not say, "Lazarus has gone to heaven." Sleep is a beautiful and instructive term as applied to the dead, for it implies their future awakening. But if a living man is unconscious while asleep, surely a dead man must be.

Verse 17: "Then when Jesus came," etc. As truly as he then came to Bethany (which some say means "the house of affliction,") he will come to his suffering church. Martha was without, Mary within doors, and Lazarus dead; so his coming will find the great household in a scattered condition—some in the field, some in the house, and some in the silent grave. But for the entire family his coming will be "our gathering together unto him." 2 Thess. ii. 1.

Verse 21: "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died." Was it ever known that a righteous petition died in his presence? And especially among the risen and glorified ones that will [illegible] ver about him at his coming "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying." Rev. xxi. 4.

"But I know, that even now, whatsoever thou will ask of God, God will give it thee.' Yes, and we, too, can cherish the same beautiful faith "concerning them which are asleep," for although some of them have lain so many, many years "in the dust of the earth" yet "even now," after all that has happened to them, he can raise them again. What a blessed privilege it is to have such a Savior!

Verse 23: "Thy brother shall rise again." "Wherefore comfort one another with these words" (1 Thess. iv. 11-18), and remember that the Great Teacher did not comfort this mourner by saying, after the modern fashion, "thy brother is in heaven." Nor can I suppose that their purpose in sending for the Savior was to keep their brother out of heaven. When Lazarus was at the point of death, Paul says "the Lord had mercy on him," i. e., restored him. But would not his death at that crisis have been a much greater mercy. If Christians enter heaven as soon as they die? Phil. i. 23.

Verse 24: "I know that he shall rise again, in the resurrection at the last day." Golden words! Thousands have been comforted by that beautiful phrase which, out of deepest affliction, breathes "the full assurance of faith!" Many rich men, warriors, and politicians have lived and died without benefiting the human race as much as that one Christian woman has done in a brief conversation. She does not say, "I sometimes pause in my busy work and think, in a sort of dreamy bewilderment that, perhaps, at some time or other, he may possibly rise again." Her faith was no such sickly sentimentalism, but a vigorous and clear perception of [illegible] that he shall rise again." This precious faith had, no doubt, been to Lazarus too a great comfort in his last illness. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Nothing was said here about mortal emergence at the last day. I wonder that men wrangle so much about this point since, practically, they must all admit that when Paul or any other righteous person has once emerged from the grave he will never die again; and if the life that stirs the first pulsation in his heart before he stands on his feet never ceases, what is this, practically speaking, but immortality? This does not dispense with the judgment seat of Christ, for though the Lord at all times "knoweth them that are his," yet it is there that "we must all be made manifest" (A. B. V.) as the children of God, and there receive, by divine decision, our different degrees of glory and honor for the eternal state; for it must be remembered that we seek not for immortality alone, but also for "glory and honor" superadded to this. 2 Tim. ii. 19; Rom. ii. 7; 2 Cor. v. 10.

Verse 27: "I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God." Here is a wonderful amount of truth which an humble and honest-hearted woman had learned while haughty, self-righteous and gray-bearded priests and scribes and "doctors" of the law over in Jerusalem, hardly two miles away, were persecuting people for believing this. Then as now, "Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." Luke xii. 21. Yes, Martha's faith shines out brightly here; more brightly perhaps than before that great grief came upon her in the loss of her brother. "It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes." Psa. cxix. 71. Great sorrows often teach great lessons. There is an evil under the sun among those who slight the calls and claims of religion. "Surely they are disquieted in vain"—they rise up early, sit up late, and eat the bread of sorrows to heap up riches; and they know not who shall gather them. Psa. xxxix. 6, and cxxvii. 2. Not that Martha had fallen into this evil, or had carried matters to this extreme. To my mind, her case rather teaches the important lesson that stirring habits may often be found combined with a strong and clear faith. That she was not so worldly-minded as some have thought is proved by the fact that she was beloved by him who knows the hearts of all. Verse 5. The Savior's gentle reproof on a former occasion (Luke x. 41), and the recent loss of her brother had a tendency to "perfect that which was lacking" in her faith (1 Thess. iii. 10) although she seems to have never attained to the higher excellence of her sister Mary. This teaches church members to make allowance for their different attainments in the Christian life. Don't let us fall out because I am not just exactly of your temperament nor you of mine. I once enquired of a lady, "If you had to spend a day as a Christian, how would you go about it?" Her reply was, "I would sit right still." She soon took a more Scriptural and practical view of it however, for she was baptized a few days after this conversation. Mary had certainly a more placid and contemplative disposition than Martha, but it would be a great mistake to suppose that she was all the time "sitting right still;" for is it not written, to her perpetual praise, that "she hath done what she could?" Oh, that we might all merit such a plaudit at last. Mark xiv. 8.

Verse 28: "The Master is come and calleth for thee." This was said "secretly," not to all the company. His own people will be the first to know of his return; "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." Blissful summons! May we all be ever anxious and ready to hear it; so that, in whatever circle it may find us we may, without apology or explanation, "rise up hastily" and fly to meet him.

Verse 32: "She fell down at his feet, saying unto him, 'Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.'" She that had sat at his feet attentively, now falls at his feet weeping. So, if we hearken to him in prosperity, we may appeal to him in adversity. Mary did not finish the sentence as Martha [illegible] ough, no doubt, she believed the [illegible] less, but went more. than Mary, who [illegible] his [illegible] tender and sorrowful spirit. Such have need to guard against melancholy, and ought to be pitied and helped. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." Neh. viii. 10.

Verse 35: "Jesus wept." What a sublime and thrilling sentence is this! It seems almost to connect heaven and earth together; justice and mercy sweetly blending in those precious tears. Could there be found a better comment than the following inspired language? "We have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Heb. iv. 15, 16.

Verse 39: "Lord, by this time he is offensive;" (A. B. V.) This from Martha who had just said, "whatsoever thou will ask of God, God will give it thee." But she seems here to waver, like Peter walking on the water. If the Bible had not told us of some who, although imperfect, enjoyed the divine favor, I think its biographic sketches would have been very discouraging to us who lack so much of perfection.

Verse 43: "Lazarus, come forth." This great miracle, wrought almost at the gates of Jerusalem, ought to have convinced the whole nation. But, like the gospel, it was to some the savor of life unto life, and to others the savor of death unto death. When we see how plainly the gospel of the kingdom is taught in the Bible, it might surprise us to find so many people refusing to believe it if we did not have the example of the Savior's personal ministry before us. He was absolutely faultless, both in life and doctrine, and also had miracles to confirm his word; and yet there were some who refused to believe the gospel of the kingdom, even in those days. There can be but one cause assigned for their unbelief—the inherent wickedness of the human heart. And the same cause accounts for the unbelief of this generation. Let us therefore remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." John xv. 20.

This beautiful narrative has an additional interest for us because it so pointedly illustrates "good things to come." Miracles are frequently superior to parables as illustrations of doctrine; for prophetic parables are merely comparisons or analogies of things future, while the Savior's miracles are actual samples, foretastes or earnests "of the powers of the world to come;" thus rendering more vivid the lesson designed to be taught. The Lord Jesus at his first coming gave but a foretaste or foregleam of his powers, the larger manifestation will be given at his second coming, when his Lordship and regenerative might will be seen over all the richly varied works of creation. Already he has shown his command over, 1. The waters and winds, walking on the sea and calming a tempest. 2. The fishes of the sea; causing them to fill the nets, one to bring a piece of money, and multiplying them for food. 3. The vegetable kingdom; causing a green leafy tree to wither at a word, and multiplying loaves of bread. 4. The brute creation, both wild and tame; miraculously seeing the unbroken colt, and riding upon him, and being with the wild beasts in the wilderness without suffering harm from them. 5. The human race, healing its diseases. He cured the blind, deaf, dumb, paralytic, leprous, demoniacs, and even that climax of all disease—the last enemy, death itself—in one that had been four days dead.

To the great Redeemer's universal power creation will respond by universal praise, in the new order or world to come. "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee." Psa. cxlv. 10; Rev. v. 13. One symphonious hallelujah is indicated by Psa. cxlviii. (Prophetic, because "let them praise" in verses 5 and 13, is in the future tense; the same verb in the same form, יְהַלְלוּ, is translated "they shall praise." in Psa. xxii. 26).

A CALL TO THE HEAVENS

Praise ye the Lord. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens; praise him in the heights. Praise ye him, all his angels; praise him, all his hosts. Praise ye him sun and moon; praise him all [illegible] Praise him, that be above the heavens. Let them praise the name of the Lord; for he commanded and they were created. He hath also established them forever and ever; he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

A CALL TO THE EARTH.

Praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons and all deeps. Fire, and hail; snow and vapors; stormy wind fulfilling his word; mountains and all hills; fruitful trees and all cedars; beasts and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl; kings of the earth and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth; both young men and maidens; old men and children; let them praise the name of the Lord; for his name alone is excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven."

WORTH KNOWING.

The Question as to Phrophetic Time.

We all know that our Lord in his great prophesy outlined the history of man and earth, from the first advent, on to the end; especially to the time when believers might know that "he was nigh at the door,"—his second advent, Matt. xxiv. 33; Luke xxi. 29.

Yet again, he tells us that we—"ye know not when the time is, therefore watch, that ye may escape all that shall come (as a snare) and stand before the Son of Man." Matt. xxv. 13; Luke xxi. 34-36.

There we have the two classes of texts, in brief, which bear on the subject, and to me they suggest the known and the unknown, as embodied in the Bible. Some events—a whole class indeed—are known. They are known as parts of Scripture history, and they are kept in mind by the mementoes, or memorial services, or monumental landmarks that forbid forgetfulness of them.

On the other hand there is a class of events that no one, (at least within my range) pretends to know, in association with this important truth of revelation—that is "the day and hour of the second coming,"—the exact time of "the end" of Gentile times; and the beginning of "his times," who is the blessed and only potentate—the Lord Christ.

Let us then note both classes of these events that belong to this subject:

1. The well known class. The 430 years, from Abraham's call to the exode, is known to a day. Because they ended, and by consequence they did begin, at the self-same day of the passover sacrifice, in Egypt. Ex. xii. 40-42. This day was the 14th day of the first month, about April in our calendar. This has been observed ever since and so kept in mind.

The Tabernacle of the wilderness was reared in this same first month.

The crossing of Jordan, the entrance into the Land and the first Passover in it, was at the 40th anniversary of that "self-same day of the first month." Josh. v. 10.

Ezra began to go up on the 1st day of the 1st month; Ezra vii. 9, from Babylon to rebuild Jerusalem. Then, to crown this series of events, in the first month we that Christ our passover, was sacrificed for us, at the anniversary of "the self-same day"—in the first month and on the 14th day of the month.

Thus from Abraham's calling to the one offering of Jesus Christ, the salient events transpired in the first month of the Jewish year, and the most signal on its 14th day. This will be the crisis, I think, in the future.

2. But the day of the Lord's coming down to meet and commission Moses; some weeks—perhaps months—prior to "the self-same day," of [illegible]el's deliverance—of the beginning and ending of the "430 years." Ex. iii. 7, 8, 12, 40, 42, is not known.

It is then certain to me that Abraham's first calling to prepare for his removal is alike an unknown day as to date.

The inchoate, furniture and preparation to set up the Tabernacle seems also left out of the data in the records of time.

The same is true of Ezra's preparation to leave Babylon. The date of his setting out and his arrival at Jerusalem, appears in the records. However the most of all unknown days and dates is that of Jesus' birth. It every month, and almost every day of the year. Hence the sign of the of Man be the unknown [illegible]

This omission of the date at all such points of [illegible] plan of Redemption, may be designed to arrest curiosity, show us that we "know but in part;" and constrain us to wait on God for making known "the day and hour" of "the signs of the last trump—the resurrection of the just; and the incipient scenes, at the setting up of Christ's kingdom.

What has been so often, may occur again. Moses did not know the date of his mission until the day declared it.

The apostles knew the descent of the Holy Ghost, and the power of their Gospel commission, only as it was disclosed, at the Pentecost. There let us reverently wait on God to make known the day. Amen.

Love the Bible.

When you open the Bible, never forget that it is the Word of God. That he is as really speaking to you there, as he spoke with Moses on the mount. As you read, let Scripture explain Scripture; and use the more easy portions to shed light upon the more deep and difficult. Never be satisfied with merely skimming the surface of the Bible. You are to search the Scriptures. "Plough into the Bible," was the saying of a wise and good man.

David often tells how he stood in awe of God's word; and so of many other of the saints and holy men of old.

It is said of King Edward VI. of England, that once, when quite young, he could not reach to some book, and an attendant put down a large Bible that he might stand on it to reach up. But the king refused reverently, and rebuked him for the careless disrespect shown to the Word of God. There may sometimes be outward respect without inward piety; but in this case we know it arose from reverence of the truth, and honor to the Author of the book.

Dr. Posey: God helps us in our prayers, but he does so in proportion as we admit his aid in the rest of our life. We cannot pray as we ought, unless we live as we ought. Our prayers will partake of our other infirmities. We cannot at once collect ourselves and become other men in the presence of God from what we were just before.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. L. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 3, 1879.

COMMUNICATIONS, pro and con, on the question of the non-resurrection of the ungodly, on hand now are, like Paul's labors, more abundant. Many of these pieces are quite well written and we may give some of them. We know however, from letters received and from what Brother Myers writes, that this discussion is very distasteful to a majority, perhaps, of our brethren. As it has got into the paper we ask the patience of our brethren for a very little.

THE destitution and distress in Ireland are represented in the news from London as being worse than have been known in that unfortunate country since the great famine of some thirty years ago. Want, hunger, and poverty are the conditions of thousands of the miserable inhabitants. In large meetings of the suffering and their sympathizers, Landlordism is denounced, and the Government, which has squandered blood and treasure in unjust wars abroad, is bitterly arraigned.

WILL all who are interested in the prosperity of THE RESTITUTION attentively read Brother A. Pontious' appeal in another column of this week's paper. We have been compelled to suspend issuing from four to six numbers each year, since we assumed the editorial management of THE RESTITUTION, to avoid involving any additional indebtedness. A concert of action, on the part of our brethren generally, would not only liquidate the remaining indebtedness, but, also, place THE RESTITUTION on a basis where suspensions would not be imperative. Three names are already on the list, and the amount against their names paid. The two additional names have no more superfluous abundance of this world's wealth than Brother Pontious; but they can aid to this extent and do it, whether there should be a single other response or not—as they do not wish impliedly to say—"Lord, we will aid your cause to a certain amount if 500 others will do the same." We believe there are 600 others, who sympathize with us in the truth, equally able to do as much, whether they do it or not. Smaller amounts will be acceptable from those only able to do a little, and no particular fault will be found, should some, who feel so to do more, feel like dispositions to increase the amount. The last meeting at Argos [illegible] for the purpose of doing something for [illegible] as there was no general attendance of our brethren from abroad the subject was wholly passed over without action. If the brethren, one and all who can, will act in this matter the result proposed in that meeting can be attained. A few can not do all but a large amount can be distributed among many and no one suffer from even a little sacrifice. To hundreds it would be no sacrifice at all, as the difference in their finances would not be felt in the least degree. Now let 500 or 1,000 of our subscribers and friends make the cause a New Year's present. We presume this number have been anxious to make a New Year's gift to some person or object and have been greatly puzzled to know how to do it to advantage. We here tell you how—do it for the cause of our paper—and we believe the Lord will reward you.

The Eclectic Resurrection.

In a preceding article we conveyed the impression that not only are the express ideas, and the express form of language embodying these ideas, which is employed in Dan. xii. 2, indefinitely setting forth an eclectic resurrection out from the dead, made use of by the New Testament writers, when speaking of this resurrection of the just, but we also meant to be understood that a direct reference to this very passage is sufficiently obvious in several places both in the Evangelists and in the Apostolic writings. We will illustrate this statement by calling attention to Luke, xx. 34-36:—"And Jesus answering said unto them. The children of this world marry and are given in marriage: but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

We will now give Murdock's rendering of the Peshito Syriac:—"Jesus said to them: The children of this world take wives and wives are given to husbands. But they who are worthy of that world, and of the resurrection from the dead, do not take wives, nor are wives given to husbands. Neither can they die any more; for they are as the angels, and are the children of God, because they are the children of the resurrection." We also give Wakefield's translation:—"And Jesus answered and said: The children of this life marry and are given in marriage; but they, which are thought worthy to obtain that life and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; for they cannot die any more, and are like angels, and Sons of God, being sons of the resurrection." We now add Tafel's Interlinear Translation,—which is word for word: "And answering said to them the Jesus: The sons of the age this marry and are married. But those made (down) worthy (of) the age that to hit, and of the standing up (the one) out of (the) dead, neither marry, nor are being married. For neither to die still they can; for like angels they are; and sons they are of (the) God, of the standing up sons being."

We will now give as literal a rendering as we can by translating a phrase or two of these verses as we have good authority for doing, by transposing the order of the Greek words into that of the English idiom, and by retaining all the articles and demonstrative pronouns except the two articles before the names Jesus and God in the original. "And Jesus answering said to them; The children of the this age marry and are married. But those worthy of the that age to attain and of the rising-up,—the one out from dead-ones,—neither marry nor are married. For truly they cannot die any more because they are angels-equals, and they are the children of God, being children of the rising-up." The Savior shows that the relation of husband and wife is a relation of the age this—Greek, τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου—i. e., of the present age—and a relation that obtains among the children of God as well as among others; but that there is no such relation of the age that—Greek, τοῦ αἰῶνος ἐκείνου—i. e., of the age to come, as husband and wife among the children of God. Now, how has their relation to God, as being his children, been made manifest? Through what change have they passed into the conditions of an existence that is absolutely deathless? By what process have they been made the peers of the glorious unfallen angels of light? The attainment of the age to come, and the attainment of the resurrection, in some indefinite sense of this term, are not specific enough, and the Savior according [illegible] that the [illegible] Daniel's Hebrew into Greek by [illegible] saying—τῶν ἐκ νεκρῶν—the one out from dead-ones.

Daniel makes the resurrection eclectic by saying "Many parted from the sleepers in earth's dust awake," and our Savior makes it equally eclectic by saying of the resurrection, or uprising, that it is "the one out from dead-ones."

The Savior, John vi. 39, 40, 44, 54, in a four-fold expression, shows that he will raise up a class to everlasting life, without the loss of a single one, whose characteristics, as believers in the Son of God, are fully set forth in the context. He also shows that it is the spirit that quickens—ζωοποιεῖ—i. e., makes alive the ones to whom he promises this resurrection. As the resurrection here promised is limited to persons of holy character it is therefore eclectic. In Luke xiv. 14, Jesus promises to the kind dispenser of earthly comforts to the poor and suffering a recompense, although the children of want and woe can never spread a bountiful board in return for a supply furnished to famished destitution. That reward is to be given in the future life—Greek, ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει τῶν δικαίων—In the standing up of the just—Tafel's word for word translation. More literally—of the just ones—as the word is a genitive plural. This resurrection "of the just ones" is eclectic as it embraces a class only. In the much discussed passage, John v. 28, 29, the Great Teacher distinguishes this "resurrection of the just," or its equivalent, of "those that have done good" as being a "going out"—Greek, ἐκπορεύονται — i. e., from the graves) "into a resurrection of life." Let us now briefly recapitulate the expressions of our Lord, and compare what he has said on this eclectic "upstanding" with that fundamental text of divine revelation on this important subject in Dan. xii. 2.

In Daniel "Many parted from the sleepers in the earth's dust awake," and this awakening is "to everlasting life." The Lord Jesus says of "those accounted worthy to attain the age to come, and the resurrection—the one out from among dead ones," that "they are the children of God, equal unto the angels," and that "they can not die any more," in John vi. 40-54., "the raising up" of believers is to everlasting or eternal life. In Luke xiv. 14, the reward to the mercifully benevolent for their ministrations to the destitute helpless poor is promised "in the resurrection of the just ones."

In John, v. 29, the eclectic resurrection of the well-doers is specifically termed "a standing up of life"—ἀνάστασις ζωῆς and the resurrection of evil-doers is, on the contrary, said to be "a standing up of judgment"—ἀνάστασις κρίσεως—giving Tafel's Interlinear Translation of both phrases. In one other instance the Lord alludes to this resurrection of judgment. In Lu. xi. 1, 32, we read: "The queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them; for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here. The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgement with this generation and shall condemn it; for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

It is here declared that the queen of the South "shall be raised up in the judgment"—κρίσει ἐγερθήσεται—and the men of Nineveh that they "shall stand up in the judgment"—ἀναστήσονται ἐν κρίσει—giving a word for word rendering of both expressions.

With the exception of some declarations concerning his own rising again from the dead, we have now cited what the Lord Jesus has taught concerning the resurrection. The eclectic resurrection, in its limitations to a class, is the grand topic on which he expatiates. The passages are self-interpreting. He tells the Sadducees that it was from "not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God" that their error and unbelief resulted—Mark xii, 24. This is as much as to say that the doctrine was clearly revealed in the Old Testament. See Ps. xvii. 15—Job xix. 26—Isa. xxvi. 19—Dan. xii. 2—Hos. xiii. 14. But neither claimed that they were not found to believe a doctrine unless taught by God's great legislator, Moses, in the law. Jesus logically deduces the proof of the resurrection from the Pentateuch itself. This resurrection of the Patriarchs falls within the eclectic order.

On that resurrection which is not of believers in the Son of God,—nor of those that have done good,—not of the just,—not the resurrection of life but which embraces evil-doers,—the generation that rejected the Messiah, the queen of the South, and the men of Nineveh,—and which is "going forth (from the graves) into a resurrection of judgment"—using their own expressions—(it), we shall offer no comment. The passages are not full self-interpreting, and we have no disposition to essay an interpretation from other Scriptures. Our theme is the eclectic resurrection, and we shall leave the resurrection of judgment where the Savior left it—unexplained.

The Resurrection.

G. M. MYERS.

To Brothers Magruder and Stephenson:

Notwithstanding there is another article on the resurrection question due from me, I will forbear writing further:

1. Because, after all the criticisms which have been offered, I am still willing to leave what I have said, just as I have said it.

2. Because, so much upon the theme is becoming unpleasant to many of the readers of our paper.

Undue agitation and contention upon this and many other subjects is rendering our paper unsuitable to hand out as reading matter to the world, is causing many to withhold their subscriptions, and is injuring our general interests as a people. Therefore I decline anything further which I see is detrimental to the interests of our paper and our cause before the people. Your brethren who are older and of wiser heads of course are at liberty to continue if you choose to do so. I am a lover of the investigation of truth and am sanguine of my position upon the resurrection, but judgment should be used as to how, as to when, and as to where it should be had.

Now in conclusion will you allow me to make a suggestion or two:

1. That we request the promised article from our editor, on Daniel xii. 2.

2. As our resurrection question as discussed is one of three sides, and we three represent these three sides, that we lift the discussion so far as we are concerned, from the columns of our paper, and each one, inside of the next six or eight months, write out his position, consulting other brethren as he may choose, for principles and expositions, and then that we have them all in order—Brother Stephenson's first, Brother Magruder's second, and so on, published in a book. This will present the three positions together for the benefit of those who may desire to read. As to the sale of the book we need have no fears. I suggest further, that we prepare enough matter each to make from 100 to 125 pages of print.

Let me hear from you at once as to this. Address me at Belle Plaine, Iowa. Yours in the hope of life from among the dead.

SELECTIONS.

THE BIBLE.

The Book of Books, Whose Divinity Impresses Every Mind.

A correspondent of the Inter-Ocean, who has read Colonel Ingersoll's lectures, has collected the following utterances of scientists, statesmen and thinkers in regard to the Bible:

SCIENTISTS.

The grand old Book of God still stands and this old earth, the more its leaves are turned over and pondered, the more it will sustain and illustrate the sacred Word.—Professor Dana.

All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming, more and more strongly, the truths contained in the sacred scriptures.—Sir John Herschel.

The Bible furnishes the only vehicle to express the thoughts that overwhelm us when contemplating the stellar universe.—O. M. Mitchell.

In my investigation of natural science I have always found that whenever I can meet with anything in the Bible on my subject, it always affords me a firm platform on which to stand.—Lieut. Gen. Maury.

If the kind of love is most appropriately worshiped in the Christian temple, the God of nature may be equally honored in the temple of science. Even from its lofty minarets the philosopher may summon the faithful to prayer, and the priest and the sage exchange altars without the compromise of faith or knowledge.—Sir David Brewster.

STATESMEN.

There is a Book worth all other books which were ever printed.—Patrick Henry.

The Bible is the best book in the world.—John Adams.

So much is my veneration for the book that the earlier my children begin to read it, the more confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful citizens to their country, and respectable members of society.—John Quincy Adams.

It is impossible to govern the world without God. He must be worse than an infidel that lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligation. General George Washington.

Pointing to the family Bible on the stand, during his last illness, Andrew Jackson said to his friend, "That book, sir, is the rock on which our republic rests."

I deem the present occasion sufficiently important and solemn to justify me in expressing to my fellow-citizens a profound reverence for the Christian religion, and a thorough conviction that sound morals, religious liberty, and a just sense of religious responsibility, are essentially connected with all true and lasting happiness.—General Harrison's Inaugural Address.

As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think his system of morals and his religion, as he left them to us, are the best the world has ever seen, or is likely to see.—Benjamin Franklin.

I always have had, and always shall have, a profound regard for Christianity, the religion of my fathers, and for its rites, its usages, and its observances.—Henry Clay.

A few days before his death, "the foremost man of all his times" drew up and signed this declaration of his religious faith: "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Philosophical arguments, especially those drawn from the vastness of the universe in comparison with the insignificance of this globe, have sometimes shaken my reason or the faith that is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The sermon on the mount cannot be merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience.—Daniel Webster.

Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of our liberties; write its precepts on your hearts, and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future.—U. S. Grant.

I account the Scriptures of God to be the most sublime philosophy.—Sir Isaac Newton.

To give a man full knowledge of true morality, I should need to send him to no other book than the New Testament.—John Locke.

I know the Bible is inspired, because it finds me at greater depths of my being than any other book.—Coleridge.

A noble book! All men's book. It is our first statement of the never-ending problem of man's destiny and God's way with men on earth.—Carlyle.

I must confess, the unjesty of the Scriptures strikes me with astonishment.—Rousseau.

There is not a boy nor a girl, all Christendom through, whose lot is not made better by the great Book.—Theodore Parker.

NEWS ITEMS.

TELEGRAPH LINE COMPLETED.

LONDON, November 26.—Telegraphic communication with Cabul and Candahar has been completed. The morning newspapers publish dispatches from both those points, dated Tuesday night.

Shipbuilding on the Clyde was never so active as now, seventy vessels being on the stocks in the thirty-five building yards. Twenty-three new keels were laid last month. The French Transatlantic Company is having eight new steamers constructed there.

FIGHTING IN AFGHANISTAN.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—The News' dispatch from Cabul says Gen. Baker's cavalry came into conflict with a force of natives near Maidan, in the course of which several of the natives were killed. Gen. Baker was to attack the natives in force on the 27th inst.

VIENNA, November 28.—Novikoff, the Russian Ambassador here, has been summoned to St. Petersburg to participate in the forthcoming ministerial deliberations.

CETTINJE, November 26.—Intelligence has been received here that Ahmed Mukhtar Pasha, the Turkish General, has been massacred by Arnauts at Gusinje.

M. de Lesseps will start for Panama early in December. A brigade of pioneers and surveyors has already left to prepare for cutting the canal.

A dispatch from Simla says that General Roberts has renewed his proclamation of amnesty to all Afghans delivering up their arms and who were not concerned in the Cabul massacre. Evidence of Yakoob Khan's complicity in the massacre is accumulating.

EGYPT TO INVADE ABYSSINIA.

VIENNA, Nov. 28.—A despatch from Alexandria says: "Gordon Pasha has been instructed, in case the negotiations with the King of Abyssinia prove fruitless, to proceed to Khartoum and report the failure of his mission to the foreign Consuls there, and afterward to proceed to Dender and enter Abyssinia with Egyptian troops."

It is reported in Montreal, Canada, that the Imperial Government is establishing a reserve of 10,000 men in Canada, composed of militia of the Dominion, for active service at home or abroad, if required.

Forty-four and four-tenths per cent. of the white people who took the yellow fever during the late epidemic in Memphis are said to have died; of the black people 16 6-10 per cent. died. There were altogether 1,537 cases of fever and 457 deaths, a total death percentage of 31 6-10.

New railway tracks to the extent of 2,000 miles have been built in this country thus far this year, of which over 2,000 were laid west of the Mississippi river.

LONDON, Nov. 28.—Further intelligence from Rome relative to the proposal of Cardinal McCloskey for the establishment of three Bishoprics in America show that the Propagandt Fide "will ask" Cardinal McCloskey as to the most suitable location of the Sees, instead of "instructing" him regarding their location.

THE CAPTURE OF IQUIQUE.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—The Chilian Minister to England confirms the report of the capture of Iquique by his countrymen.

A strong shock of earthquake was felt in Arequipa on the morning of Oct. 2. The walls of many churches and buildings were cracked, the shock lasting thirty seconds, and was the strongest felt since the great earthquake of 1868.

A terrible earthquake occurred in the province of Kanuh, China, beginning on June 29th, and continuing in shocks till July 11th. The most tremendous of the shocks occurred on July 1st, when immense damage was done. Temples, "yamens," city walls, shops, and private dwellings were destroyed, and in several instances completely swallowed up, the destruction extending over thirty cities and villages. In the city of Chieh Chow two officials with their entire households were thus ingulfed and disappeared. The loss of life was very severe, but at present it is impossible to ascertain either the number of fatalities or the loss of property. Great distress has, however, been caused by the catastrophe, and the Emperor, in a recent decree in reply to a memorial, expresses sympathy with the surviving sufferers, and orders the memorialist to use every effort to relieve them. Kansuh is an inland province to the northwest, and communication with it is very slow. This will account for the length of time which elapsed before news of the disaster reached the coast.

BREVITIES.

Rev. Dr. N. Brown writes to the American Baptist Union, under whose auspices he has labored for six years, that he has completed a translation of the New Testament into the Japanese. He doubts "if there is any Eastern language into which the New Testament could be translated in a shorter time or one capable of expressing more naturally and truthfully the thought of the original." He transferred only two or three words in Greek—such as "Amen" and "hyssop."

An Arab who was quarrying stone at a place about four and a half miles from Gaza, in Palestine, recently, unearthed a marble figure supposed to be a colossal god of the Philistines. The total height is fifteen feet. The hair hangs in long ringlets down upon the shoulders, and the beard is long, indicating a man of venerable age. There is no inscription on the figure or the pedestal, which is a huge block carved in one piece with the figure. The statue was found in a recumbent position, buried in sand on the top of a hill near the sea.

A Mohammedan priest, Ahmed Effendi, has been for some years assisting a company of Protestant missionaries in a translation of the New Testament, receiving $25 per month for revising, correcting, and clothing in poetical Turkish their versions. This coming to the knowledge of the Sheikul-Islam, he had the priest arrested and tried by an ecclesiastical court. A religious excitement was stirred up, and was fanned by the Turkish press, and when the last mail left Constantinople the court was hesitating whether to sentence Ahmed to fifteen years' imprisonment in a fortress or to death.

The tub in which Diogenes is reported to have lived is now said by German archæologists to have been no tub at all. Tubs are of comparative modern origin. The Greeks knew nothing about them. Their washing was done in earthenware vessels. Diogenes's abode was one of the gigantic wine jars sometimes in use. When lying down he laid it lengthwise; when desiring to stand or sit in it, he placed it upright. The aborigines of Brazil buried their distinguished dead in earthen jars, and under the giant trees on the banks of the Parahiba these peculiar coffins are found, containing mummies of priests and warriors, with their ornaments or arms.

TALKING OVER 2,000 MILES.

The Bethlehem (Pa.) Times of a recent date says: "Robert A. Packer, Superintendent of the Pennsylvania and New York railroad, is at present hunting with a party of gentlemen in the vicinity of North Bend, Neb. Yesterday he for two hours conversed pleasantly with his wife and friends at Sayre, his brother at Mauch Chunk, and friends along the line. The medium was the railroad and Western Union wires and Edison's telephone. At the office in this place connection was made with the Easton and Amboy wire, and at Perth Amboy with a Western Union wire, and thence to Chicago and North Bend. The total distance was about 2,000 miles, and every whisper was audible."

DIED.

WALKER—At his residence in Hamilton, Ont., Canada, Oct. 16, 1879, Geo. Walker, aged eighty-two years, three months and seven days.

Bro. Walker was a native of England, and came to Canada about forty years ago. He was a member of the Roman Catholic church, but upon his hearing the gospel which St. Paul preached, he was led by it to come out from the mother of harlots and was immersed into the saving name of Jesus for the remission of sins, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus his elder brother, which he believed would take him out of the grave, and all of God's family of us subsequent to his return to this earth. His faith embraced only the family of God in the resurrection, as he for[illegible] as he felt at our house on Aug. 20, 1872.

Bro. W.'s death was caused by a fall from a tree, and he is, two sons and two daughters, and their husbands, and his grandchildren have lost a loving father, the church of God at Hamilton one of its most suitable and exemplary members, The resurrection and the writer one of our warm patrons.

Bro. W. having made the request that the writer should preach his funeral sermon and bury him, consequently he withdrew his appointments, and on Sunday at 2:30 p. m., he proceeded to a large audience, composed of Mormon and Protestants, the believers only hope of a future state, closing the services at the grave in presence of some three hundred persons, with the appropriate [illegible] and a short prayer.

Sleep on, dear [illegible]
And take your rest,
Until the [illegible]

Redemption.

E. N. HARDING.

Jesus, precious Savior, the Redeemer,
Died to save our sinful race,
"Yes, rather rose again"—living Mediator
Between sinners and the Father's face.

"It is finished." O depth of gracious love,
The work—"now accomplished"—bravely done:
"He lives with Him in God"—all ye,
"The first-fruits," eternal life begun.

The curse is borne, freedom given,
Death to them was life to man,
Victor, ascended unto God in heaven,
Expecting soon, He'll come again.

We are watching, watching for His coming,
Patiently we must wait and pray!
Longing to see that glorious morning,
First dawn of the bright eternal day.

Our ear alert, the trumpet sounding voice
We long to greet with joyful cheers;
The sleeping, living, Christ their choice
Will rise, be changed, when He appears.

Mortals dying, immortality puts on,
These natural to spiritual bodies clasped,
Seeing—"face to face"—and known as known,
With Christ, all in all at last.

"Christ and the church" meet above,
United in the "riches of His glory,"
"Manifestation of the sons of God,"
Groaning creation to hear the story.

Then sin-cursed earth will feel a power
It has never, no, never felt before.
"Through our mercy" a sufficient shower
Of grace cleansing to the very core.

"The kingdom delivered up" by the Son,
Creation set free from its corruption,
With Christ—"The Church"—the twain in one
"Restitution"—is to the curse destruction.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Romans viii. 1, 2.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit: for the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

1. All men are not in Christ.

2. Therefore they are under condemnation or the law of sin and death.

3. This affirmation of Paul carrys us back to the beginning, where we have a clear statement of the introduction of evil, or sin and death into our world.

4. Sin is the transgression of law.

5. Death is the penalty, or punishment.

6. All men are under the penalty, Rom. iv. 12. Wherefore as by one man, sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sined.

7. What is death, a negation of life, it is a state; a punishment the penalty of the law (not eternal life in torment).

WHAT IS LIFE.

Adam was not a live man till after God breathed into his nostrils—the breath of life, then he became a live man, or a living soul—was he a man before inhaling the breath of life, yea but a dead man, it takes the spirit or the breath of life with the body to make a whole live man, Job xxvii. 3, when we understand the root of the word spirit as scholars declare it to be, wind, air or breath, all is plain—man when endowed with the five senses of human life is a live man—when deprived of these he is a dead man; this is clear and conclusive, to add more would be superfluous.

The Scriptures speak of life and death in the plural, first and second death; natural (or first), life through Adam—second or eternal life through Christ, the way the truth and the life; this involves a resurrection upon which the whole scheme of redemption, and the future of the race is predicated deep and profound, questions are involved in the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, which we cannot discuss. It is sufficient for us to know and affirm upon the authority of the word that the body will be like their glorious Head; made so by the spirit of holiness or thus by a resurrection out from among the dead ones. There cannot be any resurrection to eternal life only by and through a union with him; this brings us squarely on to the ground, how do we get into him or become one with him, as he was so are we in this world; the process and the way is very clearly defined and the lines distinctly drawn. His commands and his example equally plain and positive.

First, his example. He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners; he was rich but for our sakes he became poor. Take his whole life from his appearance on the banks of Jordon until his ascension from Mount Olivet; it was one of strict obedience to his Father's will.

When the time had fully come for his public ministry to commence he appears with the multitude on the banks of the Jordan where John was baptizing.

History or the record is silent as to his life from the time he was twelve years old, until he had obtained his majority. If it was necessary for him or for the head to be qualified for the accomplishment of God's purpose it is equally so for the members of his body; then to follow his example is our imperative duty. After a few words with John, the Immerser, they go down into the Jordan; and he is buried in its limpid waters. The example for his body the church is set, the Father's will is done, and is attested to in a most striking and forcible manner. "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." If there is one thing more astounding than an other it is that men professing to believe the Bible to ignore so plain a command as the ordinance of baptism is written for the remission of sins; add to his examples his most positive teaching, and every example of obediences recorded in the New Testament all in harmony with the Divine Mind; and yet great men and men that would be offended if we did not call their good are living in actual disobedience of the plainest and most positive teaching of the word of God; truly such will be beaten with many stripes.

How do we get into Christ? the answer is very plain, viz., by faith repentance and obedience; this covers the whole ground, and to such as comply and are walking in newness of life before him; to such there is no condemnation: how different from the language of the poet.

"He a point I long to know
Oft has it caused me anxious thought
Do I love the Lord or no,
Am I his or am I not.

A FEW INFERENCES OR REFLECTIONS.

The Master in his teaching, at the close of his sermon on the mount gives a very forcible illustration of obedience and disobedience to his commands or teaching, Matt. vii. 25, 20. Let us ponder his words.

The result is reached in doing or not doing, or in building upon the rock, or on the sand—how forcible are his wise sayings, especially when they fall upon an obedient ear. He was the full embodiment of infinite wisdom; truly the Spirit was given him without measure. How worthy of our imitation was his examples, his holy walk and conversation. How happy the reflection that he is to be the King the Supreme Ruler in the kingdom of God, who is to govern or rule the nations in the soon coming age; and the law embodied in his sermon on the mount will be the law of the kingdom; no oppression there, no over-reaching a brother, no in-equality, no widows tears, none will hunger or thirst, none will ever say I am sick, no dying there, but perfect peace, perfect happiness, and perfect love will reign supreme and God will be all and in all.

Dear reader, what think you of the reward for becoming a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus? I tell you it will pay you a thousand fold—his yoke is easy and his burden is light, his service is honorable, sensible and manly, the reward large and bountiful! This is the result of building upon the rock, or of making choice of that good part that shall never be taken from you. Shall we turn over the picture? most gladly would we be excused would duty permit, but life and death are at our option or matters of choice. Just as sure as eternal life is the reward of the righteous. Just so sure is death eternal the doom of the unrighteous. There is no escaping the conclusion; the two parallel lines run through the entire Bible; we have endeavored to tell you what life is and what its negative is. There is no time to be lost, already the muttering thunder in the not far distant heaven is heard, the forked lightning begin to flash, portending a fearful storm; already the hail stones are beginning to fall. Oh what will you do without a covering; were you out in that hail storm? A little way south of us the papers state the hail stones some of them as large as a goose egg, much damage done, several lives lost. What will you do when every stone coming down will be about the weight of a talent, Rev. xvi. 21. How fearful the doom of those that are left when the righteous are taken away from the earth, and the vials of God's wrath, are poured out upon the ungodly. Dear reader, this is no fancied sketch but is plain Bible truth; there is a moment left to escape for thy life! I remember Lots wife; she lingered and became a pillar of salt, a monument of God's displeasure.

A word as to the motive for repentance; it is not an eternal hell of sin and suffering—that is fiction, but the love of God in the gift of his Son and the kingdom and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to judge and rule the world in righteousness. Amen! and Amen. NEWELL BOND.

Flat Rock, N. C.

Not in Our Day.

"Yes, I believe in the second coming of Christ to earth again, but not in our day, for before he comes again the world must be converted to Christ and we enjoy the glories of a millennium of peace and righteousness." Ah, are you sure the world is to be filled with righteousness at the time Christ appears the second time, and are you sure his appearing may not be in our day? Is righteousness to fill the earth in the last days? Let us read: "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come," etc. 2 Tim. iv. 1-9; 1 Tim. iv. 1-3; 2 Thess. ii. 3; 2 Peter iii. 3. "But as the days of Noe were so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Matt. xxiv. 37. How was it in Noe's day? "For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day Noe entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Matt. xxiv. 38. What was the condition of the world, religiously, in Noe's day, as "in the days that were before the flood?"

"And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man, and beast, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air. And God said unto Noah, the end of all flesh is come before me; .... Make thee an ark of gopher wood; .... And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die." Gen. vi. 5, 7, 13, 17. Though the appearance of a flood that should wrap a world in one vast, watery, winding sheet of death was an event that might stagger human belief and faith in the truthfulness of the statement made by God to Noah, yet through faith in that one declaration, and that one command by God to him, "Noah, whose head was whitened by the frosts of six centuries, laid the foundation of his huge vessel amid the sunlight of a pleasant day when all was serene and tranquil. The fields were smiling in verdure before his eyes; the music of birds and sounds of busy life were about him, when, by faith alone, he laid the first beam of that structure which was to sail over a buried planet. As the farmer returned from the field of labor at evening, as the gay citizen of the town drove past, and the thoughtless and licentious wandered back to their haunts of sin and wickedness, they christened it Noah's folly. Those more aged and sober shook their heads, wisely saying: The old man is mad. Even the workmen engaged upon it laughed as they drove the nails and hewed the plank; declared they cared not as long as the foolish old man was able to pay. Still the ark went up and the great wonder ceased to be talked about. At length the patriarch with his family, entered, the door was shut in the face of the world of wickedness and he sat down on the strength of a single promise to await the issue. That night the sun went down over the green hills beautiful as ever, the stars came out in the blue sky and nature breathed long and peacefully. In the morning the sun rose in splendor and mounted the heavens; deep within the vast building Noah could hear the muffled sound of life without. The lowing of herds came on his ear, and the song of the husbandman going to his toil and the rapid roll of carriage wheels as they hurried past, and, perhaps, the ribald shout and laughter of those who expended their wit on him and his ark. Thus, day after day passed on, until a week had gone by, but still the faith of the old man never shook. At length the sky became overcast and the gentle rain descended—to Noah the beginning of the flood—to the world a welcomed shower. But, as the rain continued day after day, and fell faster and faster on the earth, and the swollen streams went surging by, men cursed the storm that seemed determined never to stop. Week after week it came pouring from the clouds, till it was like one falling sheet of water, yet still the water rose higher and higher still. Oh, what scenes of vice, shame, brutality and revelry did the storm look down upon in the thronged city; and what unhallowed songs mingled with the roar of the passing storm! But, at length, another sound was heard. It was a far, distant roar, faint, but fearfully yet sounding more distinct and ominous every moment, till it filled all the air. The earth trembled and groaned under it as if an earthquake was on the march. Nearer, and louder, and more terrible it grew, until men, forgetting, alike their pleasure and their anger, rushed out in the storm, whispering: The flood! the flood! 'The fountains of the great deep were broken up.' But, amid the sudden midnight that had wrapped the earth and the frenzy of the elements and utter overthrow and chaos of all things, there was one heart that beat as calmly as in sleep; one brow over which no breath of passion or of fear passed; one spirit whose serene trust never shook, for, in the solitary ark that lifted to the heaving billows the aged patriarch knelt in prayer. Amid the surging of that fierce ocean his voice may not have been heard by mortal ear, but the light of faith shone around his aged brow and the moving lip spoke a repose as tranquil as childhood's trust. The patriarch's God ruled the heavens and that wild scene about him. But, at last the cry of human agony was hushed; ocean met ocean in its flow, and the waves swept on over a buried world without a shore." "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man." Luke xvii. 26.

As certain as the flood came, so surely will the second coming of the Son of God take place at the time appointed by the Father; and, we believe that time is now near at hand. Although the world may laugh at us for believing these things, and scoffingly say: "Where is the promise of his presence? (Emphatic Diaglott) for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," (even denying the flood as well as to question the truth of Christ's second coming). 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. Yet there will come a day when sudden destruction will come upon them, and they will not escape. Although we may cry peace and safely, and say Christ will come, but not in our day, yet he will come in some one's day. There will come a day when two shall go forth with the morning light to the field to labor, but there will be but one to return to his home at the sunset hour, for the other has been taken. There will come a time when two will enter the mill to perform their accustomed task, but there will be but one to return to his cheerful, for the other has been taken. There will come an evening when two will go to rest upon their couch, but there will be but one to rise to greet the morning light of another day, for the other has been taken. And may this not occur in our day?

From the signs of times, and the present condition of society and of the world, we believe it will. "Let us watch and be ready, lest coming suddenly, he find us sleeping." "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass and to stand before the Son of Man."

Yours in hope,
J. S. BRONSON.

Heavenly Things.

John iii.

"If I have told you of earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things."

I have thought that advent people as a class confine their thoughts and reasonings mostly to earthly things. I will some of our leading brethren would comment on a few passages of Scripture, such as Matt. v. 12, "For great is your reward in heaven." Coll. v. 1, "If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." 1st Peter 4, 6.

The relation of the heavenly and the earthly, is the subject which I should like to have discussed.

Editor Restitution:—I am thankful to you for sending me THE RESTITUTION so long after it should have been paid. I hope it has not been without fruits, although I know not of it, if it has not brought some into the fold of Christ, it has borne witness to many truths of the gospel; after I read them I give the papers to any that will accept them. There is much need of truths being scattered among the people of this Territory, as there is more infidelity than anything else here. We are making a start on a new farm here, and the profits have been very small; that is the reason that I am so far behind in payment. Yours in hope of eternal life in the kingdom,

Editor Restitution:—Please find inclosed $1 on my subscription. THE RESTITUTION advocates wholesome Christian doctrine and practice. The doctrine of Life in Christ only, has a much stronger hold upon the community at large than is generally supposed. The idea is taking hold of many unawares. They have never read it in any human production. It is the result of a literal understanding of the Scriptures overcoming their former spiritual understanding of the same.

Your Brother in Christ,

The celebrated chestnut at Totworth, which was said, half a century ago, to be the oldest tree in England, still stands, the pride of its noble owner (Earl Dudley) and the boast of the district. Its present dimensions are as follows: Circumference, three feet from the ground, forty-nine feet; spread of branches from north to south, eighty-six feet; from east to west, eighty-eight feet.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

An avaricious man is like a sandy desert—barking in all the rain, and giving back no fruit.

Humboldt: Only what we have wrought into our characters during life can we take away with us.

Benevolence is not merely a feeling, but a principle; not a dream of rapture to indulge in, but a business for the hand to execute.

Largely thou givest, gracious Lord;
Largely thy gifts should be reckoned.
Freely thou givest; and thy word
Is, "Freely give!"
He only who forgets to hoard
Has learned to live. —Keble.

J. Foster: How dangerous to defer these momentous reformations which conscience is solemnly preaching to the heart! If they are neglected, the difficulty and indisposition increase every day. The mind is receding, degree after degree, from the warm and hopeful zone, till at last it will enter the arctic circle and become fixed in relentless and eternal ice.

Idleness is contrary to the will of God. Men are created with a disposition to do something in the world; and if they are not engaged in the service of God they will be serving the wicked one. God has a work to do for every one. The father in the gospel said to his son, "Go work to-day in my vineyard." The great Father above gives the same command to every man to-day.

"Go work in my vineyard. I claim thee as mine.
With blood did I buy thee and all that is thine;
Thy time and thy talents thy loftiest powers;
Thy warmest affections, thy sunniest hours."

The happiness of life consists, like the day, not in single flashes of light, but in one continued mild serenity. The most beautiful period of the heart's existence is in this calm, equable light, even although it be only moonshine or twilight. Now the mind alone can obtain for us this heavenly cheerfulness and peace.

"Savior, more than life to me;
I am clinging, clinging close to thee.
Let thy precious blood applied,
Keep me ever near thy side;
Through this changing world below
Lead me gently, gently as I go;
Trusting thee I can not stray;
I can never, never lose my way."

The great mistake of modern Christianity has been the substitution of light for heat, and nowhere is this more evident than in the doctrines it has taught concerning God. In its eagerness to be enlightened, it has become icy; and the attempt to make the head correct has too often left the heart cold. But I say, accuracy is far less important than energy; that idea of God is best for me which vitalizes me most. Doctrines which furnish the head but leave the heart in empty barrenness—abstractions that substitute words for feelings, and knowledge for life; teachings about God, instead of visions of God; these have been the greatest hindrances of vital religion.

Naught from his love shall me sever—
Tumult, or trial, or strife;
Savior! I'll trust thee forever,
Bound in the bundle of life.
Deep which I know can not fathom,
Leave I, till over life's sea
Thou wilt make everything radiant,
Bound in the bundle with thee.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AURORA, FULTON Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Elder Restitutio—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and insure its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel the matter able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $3.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that medium weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment—are we who claim to be the chosen of God guiltless entirely that we can not support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $3.00, and will they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 67 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will endeavor to do to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, read the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

THE SUN FOR 1880.

The Sun will deal with the events of the year 1880 in its own fashion, now pretty well understood by everybody. From January 1 until December 31 it will be conducted as a newspaper, written in English language, and printed for the people.

As a newspaper, The Sun believes in telling all the news of the world promptly, and presenting it in the most intelligible shape—the shape that will enable its readers to get a full abstract of the age with the least unproductive expenditure of time. The greatest interest to the greatest number—that is the rule controlling its daily make-up. It now has a circulation very much larger than that of any other American newspaper, and enjoys an income which it is at all times prepared to expend liberally for the benefit of its readers. People of all conditions of life and all ways of thinking buy and read The Sun; and they all derive satisfaction of some sort from its columns, for they keep on buying and reading it.

In its comments on men and affairs, The Sun believes that the only guide of politics should be common sense, inspired by genuine American principles and tacked by honesty of purpose. For this reason it is, and will continue to be, absolutely independent of party, class, clique, organization, or interest. It is for all, but of none. It will continue to praise what is good and to criticise what is evil, taking care that its language is in the purest and plain, beyond the possibility of being misunderstood. It is unbribed and by no means unbribable. It is unterrified by mad-cap schemes, not apparent on the surface. It has no splinter to nail, no axe to grind which may be hurt by any purchaser with two cents. It hates injustice and rascality even more than it hates unnecessary words. Shallow frauds, plain fools, and hopeless impecuniosity of every species. It will continue throughout the year 1880 to chastise the first class, instruct the second, and discountenance the third. All honest men, with honest convictions, whether sound or mistaken, are its friends. And The Sun makes no bones of telling the truth to its friends and about its friends whenever occasion arises for so doing.

These are the principles upon which The Sun will be conducted during the year to come.

The year 1880 will be one in which no patriotic American can afford to close his eyes to public affairs. It is important to cooperate in the preservation of the political system which it is its object, or the duty of resolute vigilance on the part of every citizen who desires to preserve the Government that the founders gave us. The debates and acts of Congress, the utterances of the press, the exciting contests of the Republican and Democratic parties, now pretty equal in strength throughout the country, the varying drift of public sentiment, will all bear directly and effectively upon the two stupendous Presidential elections, to be held in November. The Sun will be on hand to chronicle the facts as they are developed, and to exhibit them clearly and fearlessly in their relations to expediency and right.

Thus, with a habit of philosophical good hope, or in looking at the minor trials of life, and in great things a steadfast purpose to maintain the rights of the people and the principles of the Constitution against all aggression, The Sun is prepared to write a truthful narrative, and at the same time entertaining history of 1880.

Our rates of subscription remain unchanged. For the Daily Sun, a sheet of large size, containing all the news, sold by mail, postage paid, 55 cents a month, or $6 50 a year, or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, one cent a copy, or 65 cents a month, or $7 80 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of The Sun is also furnished separately at $1 20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the Weekly Sun, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. Postal clubs of ten, $10; twenty, $20. Specimen copies free.

POETRY.

The Pilgrim.

I walk as one who knows that he is treading
A stranger soil;
As one 'round whom the world is spreading
Its subtle coil.

I walk as one but yesterday delivered
From a cramp chain,
Who trembles lest the hand so newly severed
Be bound again.

I walk as one who feels that he is breathing
Ungenial air;
For whom, at times, the tempter still is wreathing
The bright and fair.

My steps, I know, are on the plains of danger;
For sin is near;
But, looking up, I greet always, a stranger,
In tears and fear.

This earth has lost its power to drag me downward;
Its spell is gone;
My course is now right upward and right onward
To yonder throne.

Hour after hour of time's dark night is fleeting
In gloom away;
Speed thy fair dawn of light, and joy, and greeting,
Thou star of day.

For thee, its God, its King, the long rejected,
Earth groans and cries;
For thee, the long beloved, the long expected,
Thy church still sighs.

COMMUNICATIONS.

An Outline of Travels and Labors.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Some two months ago I wrote a detailed account of my travels and labors and mailed it, but it never reached the office at Plymouth. I would say to all interested in the proclamation of the Gospel of the kingdom that I have not been idle in the vineyard of our Lord and Savior. I will not attempt to give a detailed account of my labors.

During the past six months, since my last report, my labors in the proclamation of the gospel have been incessant and arduous. Have visited Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. Have no record of the number of discourses I have delivered, but think they will have averaged one discourse per day.

I attended conferences in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, in regular succession. As a rule I have labored a week at each place, speaking every evening and three times on Sundays, to large, attentive and to all appearance interested congregations. With commendable zeal and interest our brethren and sisters generally keep up their weekly meetings, not forsaking the assembling themselves together as the manner of some is.

But I must confine my report to more recent visits in Kansas and Missouri. Have visited Severance, Morrill and Frankfort, in Doniphan, Brown and Mitchell counties, several times. In my tour west, south and northwest of Frankfort, I visited Clay Center, in whose vicinity I preached four or five times, with good congregations, interest and attention. Have just received a card from Esq. Mayer, giving a favorable report of our meetings and sending an urgent request for me to visit them again. Would say to friend Mayer, and Brother Chapman that duty calls me east, and I cannot visit Kansas before winter.

I next called on our beloved and faithful brother, Tatt Clover, who resides three miles out of Glen Elder, and who also conveyed me to my appointment in the neighborhood of brethren Thompsons and Barnhills, whom our brethren in Marshall county, Ind., will remember, and with whom I spent many pleasant, and I trust, profitable interviews, during the week I spent with them, preaching every evening and three times on Sunday, with not large but appreciative audiences. Meetings moved from place to place, which is always disastrous. First to a turf school house, then in Brother Barnhill's house, and then in a pleasant little grove. Having returned with Brother Clover to his home, I remained, preaching every evening and three times Sunday, in a school house near by, filled with as attentive, and to all appearance as well entertained congregations as I have ever addressed. The conference is to convene there the 21st of this month. I deeply regret not being able to attend. Had made arrangements to do so, but Brother Rennie and the community of Glasgow and Fort Washington, Ohio, hold me to a long standing promise to meet Professor Dodd, an eminent Disciple preacher, in public discussion, during the month of November. I begged to have the discussion deferred a month, but to no purpose, so my brethren in Kansas must excuse me. I shall long and appreciatively remember the kindness and hospitality of brother and sister Clover, whose home I shared during my stay.

Accompanying brethren Clover and Hull, I was conveyed to the next appointment, in Jewell county, where I remained several days. The rain prevented meeting the first evening. The subsequent meetings were well attended. The three meetings on Sunday were large and the attention and interest marked. Brethren in Brother Barnhill's neighborhood, and the last named place, near Jewell Center, number about a dozen members each. They keep up their meetings at both places. Brother Clover preaches at both these places. He is an efficient, zealous laborer in the vineyard of Christ.

From Beloit I was conveyed by Brother Barnhill to the place of conference, which convened at the Star school house, near brother Samuel Noes. This was their first conference in that part of the State. They organized the conference by appointing officers: and then appointed the first quarterly conference at Fairview, near Glen Elder, the 21st of November. There was a fair turn out from different parts of Northern Kansas. There was also a good turn out from the community in which the conference was held. The interest and influence were manifestly good.

By the arrangement of the committee I did all the preaching except a short discourse, by Brother Clover, the first evening, followed by the writer. The committee wished that there should be a connected series of discourses on the mission of the Gospel and the kingdom, or what must be believed and done to be saved. Everything went off smoothly and harmoniously. The propriety and necessity of organization were investigated with no opposition, all being in accord. Organization and co-operation are essential prerequisites to the success of any enterprise.

On my way from Concordia to Severance, I stopped at Morrill, Kansas, preaching in Scott's school house, and across the State line in Nebraska, in Temperance Hall. In the latter place we held two meetings to quite large and attentive congregations. On Saturday evening previously, I delivered a temperance lecture to a large gathering.

At my previous meeting in Brother Saylor's neighborhood, three intelligent believers were immersed, making seven in that neighborhood who have obeyed that form of doctrine—delivered unto them.

I next called at Severance, speaking Saturday evening and twice the following day, in a school house near brethren Bitners and Vichoy's. We always have fair congregations and good interest in that neighborhood. I next visited brethren Thomas & Adam's neighborhood, commencing meetings Friday evening, and continuing over two Sunday's. Preached Friday, Saturday, and the following Wednesday and Thursday evenings at a school house near Brother Adam's. The appointments not being generally known the congregations were small. The first Sunday morning Brother Adams conveyed me to his appointment, eight or nine miles, to a school house near Mr. Emills. There was a good congregation waiting our arrival, and good attention to a discourse on the Gospel of the kingdom. It was our intention to have continued the meetings several evenings, but the rain prevented any more meetings. The prospects were quite favorable for good meetings there. We held meetings Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings in a village about four miles from Brother Adam's. We occupied the upper room of a school house. The meetings increased in numbers and interest from the beginning. There was a fair congregation the first evening. The second the spacious room was filled to its utmost capacity. To accommodate the congregation on Sunday evening the Dunkard church was procured, and though large, it was filled. One thing which enhanced the interest of the meetings was two lectures on the law and the Sabbath, there being quite a number of Sabbatarians in that village and vicinity. They were going to hold a tent meeting in that village, and had, as I was informed, intimated a willingness to discuss the issues between them and us. Brother Adams and I having counseled decided that I should challenge them to furnish a man to discuss the Sabbath question. When the proposition was made known to them they refused, giving as a reason that I was too much of a fighter. They challenge First Day Adventists and orthodox preachers to debate with them. Would they accept as valid from those men the same reason they have given for not debating with me? I was far more combatative when they furnished their best man to debate with me at Crane's Grove, Ill., a score of years ago. Their oracle, Ellen White, had a vision after that discussion in which she claimed that it had been revealed to her that Satan helped me, and that they should hold no more debates with me. Brother Adams wrote me to arrange to be there during their meeting, repealing his own words, that we might "hold them level." The Sunday morning previously to my last lecture I preached the funeral of a brother who had died several years previously. There was a large congregation, and Brother Adams wrote me that the impression was good.

I next visited Fredrickstown, Madison county, Missouri. Our meetings were held in a school house, six miles from the city, near brother J. P. Bailey's—that is except two lectures in the Disciple church, in the city, to fair congregations. I remained eight days, preaching every evening, and three discourses First day. We had good congregations, and good interest from beginning. Three became obedient to the faith in following Christ in his first overt example to be followed by all who would become his disciples.

Had they an efficient expositor who would exemplify his preaching by his daily walk and conversation, they would share the products of their lands and labor with him. Mammon, in the form of the golden calf, they are not troubled with. The land is generally poor, and apart from the silver mines, in which the wages are very low, there is scarcely any avocation which will command living wages in cash. Like most Southern people, they carry on a kind of barter trade. Some talk of moving away that they may enjoy the privileges of meetings, with those of like precious faith. Brother Joshua, and his son Henry Bailey, of the city, would be glad to have any worthy brother call or them, and especially would be exceedingly glad to have brother T. E. Adams visit them and expound the word in that part of Missouri.

I next visited Ripley and Cooperstown, in Brown county, Ill., which from time to time I have visited for eight years. Commenced meetings Saturday evening and continued over two Sundays, dividing the time between the two villages, preaching each week day evening, and twice each Sunday, once at Cooperstown and three times at Ripley. The Baptist meeting house in which we held our meeting, being occupied in the afternoon, we could have but one meeting at Cooperstown, Sunday, it being necessary for me to start on my journey from Ripley next morning. We had, as we always do, good turn outs and good interest. The brethren in these two localities can and will support a settled pastor, who shall spend his entire time in the discharge of pastoral duties, being an elder who shall fill the requirements of the elders ordered by Paul, Timothy and Titus. See 1 Tim. iii. 1-6; Tit. i. 5-9.

I next visited Busseyville, Wisconsin, a place I have been visiting from time to time since my return from Oregon. We never fail under propitious circumstances to have large congregations and the very best attention and interest. Under the diligent supervision of brother C. J. Lee, and a corps of efficient teachers, they have what I would call a model Sunday school, in which the Bible is its own expositor, being the only text book. Ours are the only meetings held in that village, and I am the only public expositor. They occupy a commodious hall. A large part of the congregation and the Sunday school are young people, who attend both. From the thrilling interest manifested I can but hope that many through the faith and obedience of the Gospel will be garnered in the kingdom of God. If one or two whom I might name would set the example I think a number of others would follow. My prayer to God is that the Gospel may be his power unto the salvation of many in that community.

The Unjust Reserved Unto the Day of Judgment to be Punished.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

Having answered the only objection to the non-resurrection of the wicked found in the Old Testament, I will now come to the New. When Christ and the apostles lived, there was no other than the Old Testament Scriptures. To search the Scriptures then, meant to search the Old Testament. The New Testament has been added since. The New Testament did not come as an amendment to the Old, or to correct its mistakes or errors. The things done in the New Testament were done "according to the Scriptures,"—"in fulfillment of them," or "as it is written." The things taught in the New Testament were according to the law and the Prophets. The hope in the New Testament is the hope of the promise made of God to the fathers. The Savior of the New Testament is the Messiah of the Old. The Gospel of the New Testament is the Gospel which was preached to Abraham. The kingdom of the New Testament is the kingdom that was prepared when the world was made. Therefore all of the authority of the New Testament is derived from the Old. The New Testament does not measure the Old, but the Old the New. Then, the New Testament must be in harmony with the Old. Any interpretation of the New, that conflicts with the Old, cannot be correct.

We will now consider the objection at the head of this article: "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." 2 Pet. ii. 9.

It is claimed that this passage teaches that all the unjust that have lived since the world began will be raised from the dead to go into this judgment to be judged and punished again. That after they have suffered the extreme penalty of the law, and after they have been destroyed as completely as they can be destroyed, and after they have received the full wages of sin, they will be raised from the dead and go through the processes of another judgment, and be punished again.

If this is the sense of the passage, then, it is out of harmony with the law given to Adam, and with the law given to Moses. It is in conflict with what the prophets have said on the subject, and with the requirements of the Gospel. It stands in opposition to the general tenor of the teachings of the whole Bible. Therefore the sense claimed for the passage cannot be correct.

Well, if that is not the meaning of the passage, what does it mean? In the New Testament, the coming of the Lord, and the day of judgment connected with his coming, are spoken of as events that might occur in that generation. They are events which were described as being at hand, and for which they were to wait and watch, as men wait for their Lord's return from a wedding. It was said, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." That we that are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not go before them which are asleep. For the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. The christians in those days were to live soberly, righteously, and godly; looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ. For they did not know the day of his coming, neither did the angels which are in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father only. Therefore they were to watch for they know not when the Son of Man would come. They lived, and preached, and hoped, and feared, in view of an impending judgment upon the living world sometime during that generation. The coming of the Lord, the judgment of the living world, in the near future, were the motives that were urged upon that generation, as events that were expected to take place in their life time. The Gospel then, was preached to the living world, in view of the judgment of the same living world. The unjust will be reserved unto this judgment to be punished. The living world only who have not died will be judged in this judgment, instead of a resurrected world.

The judgment of the living wicked would in the time of Noah, and the judgment of the cities of the plain, in the time of Lot, were examples of God's judgments. None but the living were in those judgments: so none but the living will be in the judgment to which the unjust are reserved. As the judgment of the old world did not affect the generations that had passed away, so the day of judgment referred to in this objection will not affect those who have died. As the old world was reserved unto a judgment by water, and by fire, to be punished, so the world that now is, is reserved unto a judgment of ungodly men to be punished, but not to be punished again. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall judge them." There are no resurrected people in this judgment. This is the judgment to which the unjust are reserved. All the living nations are reserved unto this judgment, those who have died will be judged in the judgment of the dead.

What will be done with the unjust, of which Peter speaks, if they die before the judgment? Let him answer the question himself. He says, "that such bring upon themselves swift destruction," that their judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not." "That they will receive the reward of unrighteousness, and the latter end with them is worse than the beginning." He says, "it would have been better for them not to have known the holy commandment than to turn from it, but they are as the dog that is turned to his own vomit again; and as the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." These are the conditions under which they live, and when they die, "they shall utterly perish in their own corruption as brute beasts perish. To them will be reserved the blackness of darkness forever."

In all this there is nothing said about the wicked being raised from the dead to be punished again.

Thus, we think the objection is fully answered. The living unjust world are reserved unto the day of judgment for the same living world to be punished, while those who die before the judgment takes place, will die like the beasts that perish, and will be remembered only in the judgment of the dead.

SELECTIONS.

(Christian Herald.)

Signs of Coming Struggles.

The student of the "signs of the times" will watch keenly every fresh development of the political world. History is being written before his eyes, and it is the history of the latter days. Very remarkable are some of the changes, ecclesiastical as well as political, which are now at work in many of the European States—not least the ominous revival of the spiritual power in the direction and shaping of the policy of nations. Old ties which seemed indissoluble have vanished, new alliances are sought and cemented, and each successive change reveals the ceaseless unrest of the kingdoms of the world—ever seeking peace and finding none.

Bismarck, the iron prince, whom men regard as the arbiter of the destiny of Europe, has recently, in more than one striking respect, taken a fresh departure from his original policy, and charged himself with a readjustment of the balance of power. The kaleidoscope has turned, a new mosaic has been formed—ostensibly in the interest of peace, and yet in its very nature calculated to disturb it. Till now we have seen the East arrayed against the West. The tripple alliance arising out of one of the darkest tragedies that stain the page of history—an unholy league sworn over the grave of unhappy Poland—was proclaimed as the guardian of the peace of Europe. No one could exact a compact such as this, founded upon political treachery and signed in blood, to be everlasting.

And now it is dissolved, and the bond of selfish interest has been broken. Germany, warned by the menacing language of the Russian press, and bound to guard against her ever-watchful enemy across the Rhine, has contracted an alliance with the Austrian Empire; and we see the two great German-speaking nations of Central Europe drawn closely together in the bonds of a friendship which is hailed by statesmen and politicians as a pledge of the peace of Europe.

Yet he would be a sanguine man who would venture to predict so happy a result. League ever provokes counterleague. Already Russia has been making overtures to France; and if she can bid high enough, and promise the sweets of revenge, and the recovery of the lost provinces, she is but too likely to succeed. Here, then, in the probable antagonism of the four chief kingdoms of continental Europe, we have the elements of the most gigantic war that has yet been waged. It will be a general war; the minor States, however much they may desire to remain passive spectators of the conflict, will be drawn into it irresistably. The torch of war once lit will spread from land to land; and there will not be wanting restless spirits eager to fan the flame.

Nor may the beginning of the conflict be so far distant as some suppose. Russia is in the throes of an internal commotion that imperils the existence of her monarchy. She is like one whose feet are standing upon the very verge of a volcano. Her finances have long been in a state of national bankruptcy; her prestige has been grievously wounded by the barren results of the Turkish campaign; her chief men are assassinated, and her cities burnt to the ground by the hand of an unseen foe; sedition is everywhere rife in the land, and her people are clamouring for the same measure of liberty which she claimed for the Christians of Bulgaria. The suicide courts death as a refuge from the troubles and woes of life. What more likely than that Russia should plunge recklessly into war to escape from the internal troubles that threaten her destruction?

In the presence of this widespread uneasiness and distress of nations, there are two elements of power daily growing in strength which claim our attention. One is the spirit of revolution. It is no secret to the statesman that the forces of democracy are continually increasing in every land. The people are beginning to feel their power, and to be impatient of the rule of kings. The Radicals of our own country, the Communists of France, the Republicans of Germany, Italy, and Spain, the Nihilists of Russia, are all inspired by one common faith—that the sovereign power belongs not of right to the crowned autocrat, but is vested in the people. It is the spectre of the statesman that haunts him even in his dreams. No one knows better than he that if the Democracy possessed the means of combination, and were marshalled by able leaders, no government could withstand its power, and the crowns of Europe would not survive a single day. Want of combination alone prevents this hideous catastrophe.

But the history of the past revolutions warns us how quickly some trifling incident may reveal to the people the extent of their power, and plunge a whole nation in anarchy. And when we bear in mind that in most of the European States every citizen is trained in the use of arms, and the net-work of an organized revolution is so wide-spread, extending even to the ranks of their trained hosts, it is not difficult to foresee the outbreak of a reign of terror that would menace every land with the dire perils of fire and sword.

The other element of rising power that threatens the peace of nations is Rome—Rome spiritual, for Rome temporal exists no more, and only survives in the memory of the past. But because she is shorn of her imperial dignity, and no longer sits as a queen upon her seven hills, dictating laws to the world and constraining kings to accept her will, men are apt to conclude that her sceptre has departed forever. Yet there never was a time since the day when she asserted her claim to universal supremacy when her spiritual sway was wider.

What seemed to be her death-blow has marvelously advanced her spiritual power: the loss of temporal dominion has consolidated her ranks, and rallied her subjects as one man around the banner of the Papacy. It is true her hopes of ascendency over the nations through the power of kings and princes have been rudely broken; yet never for a moment has she abandoned her dream of universal dominion. As in more than one former crisis of her strange history she has entered upon a new phase of existence, and adopted a new policy suited to its altered conditions. It is her boast that Rome never changes; and yet the very stones of her proud capital give the lie to this false assertion, and bear witness to the successive developments of her faith. Rome Papal sits in the chair of Rome Imperial, and Rome Imperial is built upon the ruins of Rome Pagan.

How these things are all fulfillments of Scripture prophecy and signs of a speedy Second Coming of Christ we will show in a further article.—C. H. Hamilton.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—The Restitution yet comes a welcome visitor, burdened with valuable articles, well seasoned with quotations from divine inspiration. Just such a paper as every inquirer after truth might be benefitted with.

I am glad to see that some of our laboring brethren, are prospering in their work, in winning souls to Christ, by imparting knowledge from God's holy word.

Last week myself & wife visited the brethren at Morrits, near Woodland, and found them zealous in the good work. Brother Rice is laboring with them, and Brother Corberley, occasionally.

I feel grieved to think I have not been doing anything for a few years back, in the Lord's vineyard, but have been trying to accumulate in the things of this world, that I might be in better circumstances to take the field unincumbered, and not burdensome to the brethren. But now feel that I have not sufficiently regarded the injunction of holy writ, to "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal," (which I have recently learned to my satisfaction.) "But lay up treasures for yourselves in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," Matt. vi. 19-21. "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33.

Your Brother in Christ,
S. S. Gimes.

God does not love us because Christ died; for Christ died because God loved us. God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the literal burning of the wicked, righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sin, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Do the Scriptures Teach the Resurrection of All the Dead.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

In his masters argument to prove the absolute necessity of a resurrection in order to future life Paul lays down his premise in 1 Cor. xv. 12. He says, "Now of Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" The palpable issue between the apostle and these skeptics was not the resurrection or non-resurrection of any special class of men, [illegible] resurrection of [illegible] They boldly affirmed that there was "no resurrection of the dead." To prove the feasibility of a resurrection at all the apostle appeals to the resurrection of Christ as the antitype of the first fruits of them that slept, thus necessitating a harvest of resurrected ones. Having thus shown the feasibility of a resurrection the apostle resumes the general issue at the 21st and 22d verses. He says; "For since through man there is death, through a man also there is a resurrection of the dead; for as by Adam all die, so by the annointed also will all be restored to life." 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22.

1. Like cause like effect is one of the simplest axioms of philosophy. According to foregoing Adam is the cause of the death of all men, and Christ will be the cause of the life of all men. Those who advocate the death of all by Adam, and the resurrection of only a part by Christ, will not read their faith into the text, which can always be done when our position is true. Try it. "For as by Adam all die, so by Christ shall a part be made alive.

2. It is also logically true. A logical conclusion must always agree with its premise. If it is a proposition denoting causality in the premise, it must be the same in the conclusion. There is no analogy between a proposition denoting causality and one denoting relationship, any more than there is between one man building a house, and another man being in that house. There is no analogy between all dying by Adam, and only a part being alive in Christ. There is therefore no avoiding the conclusion that the same all who die by Adam will also be made alive by Christ, but every man in his own band or company. Christ and all the Saints are one band or company, therefore to have more than one band, is to necessitate the resurrection of more than the righteous dead.

3. It will not do to carry the all who die by Adam and who will be made alive by Christ, down to the 42d verse. That Paul is referring to none but the righteous dead is clearly evident from the conclusion he reaches at the 20th verse. He says, "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Again he says at the 51st verse, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." The first personal pronoun we includes primarily Paul and the Church of God at Corinth, and representatively all Christ [illegible] living and dead when Christ returns.

I would invite careful attention to a corresponding portion of Paul's writing on the same great cardinal point in Rom. v. 12-18, corresponds perfectly with 1 Cor. xv. 12-22. He says, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned."—Margin. Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came unto all men unto justification of life." Rom. v. 12-18. Please observe:

1. All between Rom. 12-18 verses is elliptical; therefore the 18th verse is a conclusion drawn from the 12th verse: consequently the indefinite adjective all in the conclusion is just as broad as it is in the premise. This conclusion is unavoidable. Passing the ellipsis the premise and conclusion read thus—"Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned."—Margin. "Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Please observe:

1. All sin by Adam, their federal head, and not by actual transgression.

2. The obedience of the second federal head offsets the disobedience of the first federal head and justifies to life the same all against whom the sentence of death had passed.

3. The life which Christ will restore to all against whom the sentence of condemnation has passed, will be the Adamic life—the same life which was forfeited by Adam's transgression, and which will be restored through Christ's obedience.

We must not confound the temporal life restored to man as a free gift through the righteousness of "one" "many" through their own righteousness in the context.

1. One is through the righteousness of "one man," the other through the righteousness of "many."

2. One is conditional, the other is unconditional.

3. The former is simply by grace, and the latter is by the super-abounding of grace.

4. One is the Adamic life, the other is the Christ life.

Those who limit the all men in the second half of the couplet (1) destroy the force of the contrast, and (2) they will not read their faith into the text. It would read thus—"Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon a part of all men unto justification of life." I now come to Revelations, 20th chap. The rule of interpretation adopted by Brother Myers in reference to this chapter is the most dangerous of anything I have ever heard of by a believer in the intelligibility of the Holy Scriptures. The same reason for which he figured away the reliving of "the rest of the dead" will figure away the reliving of the rest of the righteous (2) dead: and also the gathering and distruction of the armies of Gog and Magog as bold tropes or figures. Indeed there is not a chapter in the book of Revelations that would have left a single literal fact or event in it, according to this figurative rule. Elder Myers believes in the literal resurrection of the righteous dead, what necessity therefore for departing from the literal rule of interpretation as far as John v. 25 26; Rev. xx. 4 6 are concerned? There is obviously no reason for figuring away as plain texts as can be found in the Bible to sustain any doctrine, or view, except to get rid of equally plain texts necessitating the literal resurrection of the "bad," the "unjust" and the "rest of the dead." There is no necessity of figuring away the literal resurrection and life of the righteous dead at the beginning of the thousand years, and the reliving of the "rest of the dead" at the end of the thousand years, except a theory the same as that of Unitarians, Universalists and Swedenborgians. Better far to sacrifice any theory or dogma, than to sacrifice the literal rule of interpretation where there is not an obvious necessity for so doing. If the resurrection, life, kinghood, priesthood, and reign of the righteous dead the living again at the rest of the dead, the sea, death and hades delivering up the dead in them, the second death, &c., are figurative, what do they prefigure? If fire is a figure it must prefigure literal death to the wicked; for it is a deadly element. It is a very convenient way to dispose of all the plain Bible statements against any view to sweep them from the board with the declaration that they are figurative. I hold a public discussion some years ago, with a Universalist preacher, on the personal advent of Christ. With a gentle waive of the hand he swept away all the plain texts, affirming in the most unequivocal language Christ's real, personal return to earth, with the declaration—"they are figurative." He did not consider himself under any obligation to show the necessity for understanding these texts figuratively. Brother Myers' manner of dealing with interposing texts reminds me of Mr. Crawford.

Believing, as I most assuredly do, that the literal rule of interpretation should always have the precedence, I will quote from the 20th chapter of Revelations as the words of Christ, and entitled to the same consideration of those words uttered by him when upon earth. He says, through his chosen messenger; "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years: But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection, blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power: but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And when the thousand years shall expire, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison. * * And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, * * and the sea delivered, gave up the dead which were in it: and death and hell (the grave) delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell (the grave) were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever's name was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. xx. 4-7-12-15. Please observe:

1. Where there are two antecedents the sense must determine which is referred to. Of course a resurrection, a thousand years before another resurrection, must be the first of the two. To call the second or last a first, would change its ordinal relation to a previous resurrection.

2. None but the righteous dead will live in the first resurrection. They lived and they reigned. Then they who live reign. No exception is named. The they who live "are blessed and holy priests of God and of Christ."

3. The second death will be powerless to harm them—thus they will all be immortal. Why affirm that the second death shall have no power on the first named class, if it shall not have power on a less favored class of Christians living 1800 years ago, if they did not overcome, will fall beneath the power of the second death. "He that hath an ear let him hear what the spirit saith, * * he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11.

Two Christians were trying to overcome 1800 years ago—one of these overcame and will have personal access to the tree of life; the other failed to overcome, and will just as personally and literally suffer the second death. Any theory that will figure away the literality of the penalty threatened, will figure away the literality of the reward promised. Christ in his discourse with the Sadducees, affirmed the same doctrine. He affirmed that they who should be worthy to obtain that age and that resurrection from among the dead, should not die again; (Luke xx. 37)—thus clearly implying that the opposite class should die again. By reference to Rev xx. 4, 5, we find, from an affirmative standpoint, that all the righteous dead will be worthy to obtain that age (which is 1,000 years), and will not die again; thus fulfilling the declaration of Christ. We next read, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years shall be finished,"—clearly teaching that they will live again beyond that age. Therefore both passages are in perfect accord. We next read that, "Whosoever's name was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—and that "this is the second death." Thus those of all the responsible dead who shall not be worthy to obtain that age, will die again. Such perfect analogy cannot be fairly ignored away. A second, is a first repeated. Thus the "second Adam" is as literal as the first Adam. The same may be affirmed of "the second birth, the second covenant, the second death."

The extracts from Prof. Hudson's work, quoted by C. M. Myers, were adduced by the Professor to prove the literal extinction of the life of the soul. He taught that the first and the second death both kill—one the body and the other the soul. Fire is only death the same as the sword or poison because it kills the second time. It has been the first death of millions.

4. The phrase, "the rest of the dead," includes all the dead left in the earth, sea, or the death state, when the righteous dead shall have been selected or shall live. An eclectic resurrection will take out a part, leaving the rest in the graves. All the wheat must be in the bin together before you can take out a part, leaving the rest in the bin. All the dead are in the graves together—a part live again, and the rest remain dead. The phrase, the rest of the dead, cannot refer to living men when the first class are raised from the dead, much less to men who had not been born.

The fulfillment of this prediction shows that all the dead left when the righteous live will live again. The sea delivers up the dead in it. This does not leave a dead man in the sea. The unburied dead delivers up the dead in it. This will not leave a dead man in the death state. Hades delivers up the dead in it. This does not leave a dead man in the grave. The general declaration is that "the dead small and great stand before God," [illegible] language could convey the [illegible] universal destruction if [illegible] dog does not [illegible] If the [illegible] earth [illegible] used terms in the Bible expressive of the smallest minorities, then indeed is the Bible like an old fiddle upon which designing men can play any tune. It is not safe to swerve these most enlarged Bible terms expressive of numbers, from their uniform Bible use, (1) because they are some times used in a limited sense, or (2) because there may be exceptions to the general rule in reference to all reliving, the same all dying. This the Adventists have done; and thus they have figured away the Abrahamic covenant in reference to the blessing of all nations through Abraham and his seed.

Every word in the Bible, the same as all other books, should be always understood according to its obvious import, if possible. With this old Protestant rule of interpretation we may all agree on this mooted question of resurrection, the same as on most other points. It does seem to me that some of our brethren go ahead of the so-called orthodox expositions in figuring away those texts which do not agree with their views. This reminds me of an actual occurrence. A believer in the literal rule of interpretation of Scripture, aroused a Methodist preacher, when he exclaimed, "I will not give up my views because the Bible don't agree with them."

Plain Facts, No. 4.

Is it to be re-established? Most assuredly. Amos ix, 11, plainly declares, "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old. And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations." Isaiah lxi. 4-33-20-21.

Lord will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel. Acts i. 6. Let Luke the evangelist answer this all-important question. Luke i. 32, 33. —"The Lord God shall give unto him (Jesus) the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written. After this I will return, (after what) after the last Jew and Gentile has obeyed the Gospel in this age or dispensation that will, then Jesus who sits at the right hand of the Father will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up. Acts xv. 16. The Lord shall inherit Judah, his portion in the Holy Land, and shall choose Jerusalem. Zec ii. 12. Cry yet, saying, thus saith the Lord of hosts: My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem Zec i. 16, 17.

Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come, Amen, Ps. cii. 13. Brethren, it looks very much as at the present time, and all eyes are turned eastward, looking as it were, for some great event to take place soon.

5th. The kingdom of God to be established on earth will be the ancient kingdom of Israel restored, as I will attempt to prove by the word of truth. Obadiah xiv. 20, 21. But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness: and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions. And the captivity of this host of the children of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites, even unto Zerephath: and the captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepherad, shall possess the cities of the south. And savior's shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's. In that day will I assemble her that halteth, saith the Lord, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted. And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever: And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem. Micah iv. 6-8.

6th. The establishment of the kingdom of God by the restoration of the kingdom of Israel, will involve the gathering of the Jews from their [illegible] of the earth. He names the nations outcasts of Israel and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. Isaiah xl. 12. Hear the word of the Lord: O ye nations, and declare it to the isles afar off, and say: He that scattered Israel, will gather him, and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock. Jer xxxi. 10; Psa. cvii. 3. Behold I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country, and I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness. Zec. iv. 4. And say unto them, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: And I will make them one nation, in the land upon the mountain of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall no more be two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all. Ezek. xxxvii. 21, 22.

E. O. NELSON.

Galena, Ill.

Discourse to the Church in Amerieus Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the Crowning Theme and the Pre-eminence of the Coming One.

The Prophetic Conference in New York, and the late like conference in London, asserted the doctrine of the Savior's second coming. This assertion was based on more than three hundred texts of the New Testament, that teach and enforce it. On the plain exposition given to these prophecies by the publishers of our Bibles in England and in America, in their headings to the pages and chapters that contain them. Matt. xxiv. and xxv.; Mark xiii.; Luke xxi.; 1 Thess. iv. and v., etc. In this exposition the formulas of faith, by all the chief churches of Christendom with the best modern critics concur; however they vary in minor matters.

Indeed so vital is this truth to the New Testament system, that it is embodied in the blessed name. Thus, "He that shall come (the coming One) will come." Heb. x. 37. This, then, is the crowning theme of "the glorious gospel of the blessed God."

We notice next his paramount pre-eminence over all angels, patriarchs and prophets, priests and kings, apostles and martyrs in the Christian system of "truth and grace."

"He is the head of the body, the church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence"—the first place. Col. i. 18. This appears

1. In his transcendant titles. "The Son—the only begotten Son of God—God hath highly exalted him and given him a name that is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father." John iii. 16; Phil. ii. 9 11; Heb. i. 3-6. He is "God manifested in the flesh." 1 Tim. iii. 16. We see it further.

2. In the homage rendered to him by Simeon, by the angel's anthem, by John the baptist and by "the voice from above; this is my beloved Son. Hear ye him!" Luke ii. 29-32; John iii. 27-36; Matt. xvii. 5.

3. The terms that express this pre-eminence are, themselves, pre-eminent! They are here used for this one purpose to set forth this pre-eminence. The root of the word here used expresses first in rank, and this is superlative!—making the idea of his supremacy superlatively strong! The word is used this once, and belongs only to him!

4. This is also evident if we notice the most honored names of the past. Adam, though the head of the human race, and having dominion, was placed under law and the liability of death. Abraham, though the friend of God, was honored as the head of the patriarchal age, and the ancestor of the promised seed, to take the gate of his enemies. Moses was the man of God, but was only the prince of the prophets of that age, which was but "the shadow of good things (yet) to come" under Christ.

5. The old covenant was mediated by Moses, and it opened to the wilderness and to Canaan under the law "which worketh wrath;" and while he was faithful it was "as a [illegible] contradistinction [illegible] new—the everlasting covenant, and the power of an endless life, (Heb. 8-11; iii. 5, 6; vii. 16, 18,) and the institution of all things spoken. Acts iii. 19-21. This is surely superlative pre-eminence!

6. The primal and profound event on which this grand distinction turns, demands notice. "He is the first-born from the dead, that in all things (all relations) he might have the pre-eminence." This resurrection brings immortal life to light, and is also the new covenant pledge of the deliverance of the creature (creaturehood) from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Rom. viii. 19-23.

7. These facts shed a flood of light on the doctrine of man's mortality and the reality of his personal need of the resurrection. Nay, more, it opens the plenitude of the promise to all in "the obedience of faith"—in the acceptance of "the cross after Christ. For, on seeing our sin and subjection to death, the necessity of a resurrection follows, of course. All which is embodied in the believers baptism. It identifies him in mind, in heart, in taking the cross, and in his opening destiny, with that of our exalted Lord above all principality and power, and might and dominion, and every name that is named, in this world and that to come." Eph. i. 16-23,

Let all hear and know that promotion with the Lord Almighty lies only on this line! How low and lacking then is the faith that insists on climbing up some other way—only to fall! Let all enter by the door and walk in the way that ends in "glory, honor and immortality." JOHN.

A canoe recently left Loma Loma, in the Fiji islands, with twenty-five natives on board, bound for Toviova. They were going about when a sudden squall sent the sail against the mast, capsizing the canoe. The unfortunate passengers clung to the canoe, and might have escaped with consequences no worse than those which would have attended discomfort and exposure, but for the fact that the capsize occurred in a locality infested with sharks. These ravenous monsters seized their victims one by one, devouring twenty-three out of the twenty-five unfortunates whose lives were thus placed at their mercy. Of the two who escaped, one is a woman; but her situation is very critical, the whole of the flesh having been taken off one leg.

The Quarterly Conference Meeting will be on the Friday evening after Conference, and Communion on Sunday.

We have the sad news that sister J. F. Eckhan, of Louisville, Ky., is dead. Many of our readers will remember her by giving her name before her marriage—Miss Mary Stamps. We vividly call to mind her words of encouragement when we first entered upon the arduous responsibility of editing THE RESTITUTION. Sister probably have more definite particulars soon.

WHY cannot our indebtedness all be paid off by the commencement of another year? The amount is probably not more than $350. If 350 of our friends would donate one dollar each to the cause this object would be attained. Some could do more and others not able to do much could still do something. Let us all bear a part, and not only free the paper from debt, but insure its weekly issue through term without any suspension. In a financial view the condition of our paper slowly improves. We will do what we can.

THE December Number of our Rest has come to hand. It is the last for the current year, and is a good number indeed. Brother Wilson intends to make the January number more attractive than any yet issued. We are exceedingly interested in the topics upon which this periodical especially treats. Its articles on the Great Pyramid are instructive, eclectic, astronomical, and, we think we may safely add, chronological lessons of wonderful import have been built into that stupendous monument. The January number may be had for five cents, as many extras will be printed. Brother Wilson's address is 158 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

The Eclectic Resurrection.

If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Phil. iii. 11.

The resurrection contemplated in this passage is the same as the special [illegible] to which our Lord alludes in [illegible] Savior's discourse to Martha [illegible] Only [illegible] to come, but [illegible] also those [illegible] worthy of the [illegible] of the resurrection, the one out from the dead. Greek, [illegible] Paul's discourse is concerning himself as one enduring privations and sufferings to reach a prize which could not be gained without making the most strenuous exertions. As the final outcome of a most wearisome race his ardent desire was to "come to"—literally into—the outstanding from the dead-ones. Greek, [illegible] In the Latin expression the preposition is separated from the noun, and in Paul's it is prefixed to it so as to make a single compound word. The two expressions differ in this way, using the English letters anastasis, or,—the upstanding out—and exanastasis the out upstanding, using the nominative case.

The English language has no exact equivalent for the compound word exanastasis. The German language is richer in its compound expressions, and the idea is literally given in the translation of Luke xx. 35: "Die auferstehung con den todten"—"the outstanding from the dead-ones." In the Low Dutch this same expression is rendered in this way, "de opstanding uit de dooden," in which any of our readers can discern our literal English rendering—"the upstanding out from the dead-ones."

We will now give Phil. iii. 11 in the translation of the Latin Vulgate: "si quomodo occurram ad resurrectionem, quæ est ex mortuis." This, literally rendered, reads: "If by any means I may come unto the resurrection which is out from the dead ones." As the New Testament has been translated into Hebrew for the benefit of converted Jews, we felt a curiosity to see how this Greek expression of Paul would be carried back into this oriental language. We accordingly find that the Hebrew rendering signifies that Paul was most anxious "to come into the resurrection from among the dead-ones." Heb. מֵעִם הַמֵּתִים. The compound preposition here employed occurs Ruth iv. 10, in the Hebrew before the word for brethren, and is translated from among in our authorized version.

We possess a copy of the Peshito Syriac in the original. As this version dates back almost to the times of the apostles, and is also an oriental language, we made a lesson of this text, although we have but the slightest acquaintance with this tongue. Taking our grammar and lexicon we worked out a translation of this text which we found literally to read: "if possibly I can come to the uprising which is out from the dead ones." Gutter defines the two prepositions min and leith by the Latin words a, and ex. In English from, and of, and the translation is then had of "out of among the dead-ones." We have traced the exanastasis of the many from the sleepers as [illegible] as Daniel gives us the special idea into the Greek, as employed by our Lord and the Apostle Paul, when they would express the same eclectic resurrection. We have also illustrated this exanastasis of a part of the inhabitants in the deluge story as referring to several veracious, and the best we know we could make Dr. Peshitta's theology any plainer so far as the construction of the language is concerned.

Bloomfield says in his notes: "by exanastasis is denoted not simply resurrection, but the resurrection of the just, in order to be received into celestial glory."

The apostle chooses himself as one who runs a race. In the Olympic games, to which allusion is made, the prize was placed at the end of the course, and the athletes strained every nerve and exerted every muscle to grasp the prize.

So the apostle pressed to the mark where the race would end.

Let us now, in conclusion, see in what this resurrection of the just results. Daniel says: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

Our Lord says: "Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

The end that Paul would attain was to have his vile body re-fashioned into the likeness of the glorious body of the Lord Jesus Christ himself. What a glorious company the redeemed from death will form. Alas, how few of that host even now will ever shine among the morning stars. Paul's crown of life, and the glorious diadem will circle his temples when he emerges from the dark to receive it from the hands of the glorified king at his coming. Still we hold our hands and act our part differently, with a resurrection to deathlessness, and a crown of glory at stake? The resurrection morning [illegible] will [illegible] in all its heavenly splendors. Take heed that no man take the crown.

The Romanian Chambers have passed an act naturalizing eight hundred Jews who took part in the war of independence. Many more have petitioned for the same privilege.

A handsome and thrifty hickory tree over one hundred feet high, in Madison, N. J., was a sapling planted on the day of the inauguration of James Madison as President, and in honor of the event.

A native King in the Gaboon, educated at the Roman Catholic mission, and now a good French scholar, has sent a skeleton of a gorilla to the Society of Anthropology of Paris, with an offer to forward any scientific documents that may be required.

Mr. W. M. Linney, of Harrodsburg, has recently shipped to Frankfort, a section of a tree known to our people as yellow wood. It can only be found on the banks of the Dix and Kentucky Rivers, in the space between Baker's Mill on Dix River and Oregon on the Kentucky River. It is a very hard wood and is susceptible of the highest polish. The remarkable fact connected with this wood is that it supposed to be the identical shittim wood of which the ark of the covenant and the altars and tables of the tabernacle were constructed.—*Harrodsburg (Ky.) PECULIAR PHOTOGRAPH.

The London Lancet says: "A remarkable phenomenon with reference to the photographing of a church weather-cock at Tenby, Wales, is reported. At the time nothing was observed by the artist but the object upon which he was engaged; but on the development of the plate the image of a boat, with colors flying fore and aft, was distinctly visible about two [illegible] above the [illegible] in a reverse position. The photograph was taken at a quarter past six, and about that time two gunboats were launched at Pembroke Dock. It is thought to be a mirage of one of the gunboats soon after launching."

French History in the past hundred years exhibits three women who have perhaps experienced more splendor and more bitter grief and mortification than any other three women in the world—Marie Antoinette, Josephine, and Eugenie.

The shrinking of the water in Tahoe Lake, Cal., has uncovered a prehistoric settlement, stone buildings, traces of canals once bordered with planted trees, and other evidences of occupation by an unknown race, being clearly denied as the water subsides.

Vesuvius is not as it used to be, and presents a very striking aspect at present. Around the great cone three craters launch steam and incandescent lava, which loses itself in the deep valley between Vesuvius and Mount Somma. At the end of October two small craters opened, blowing off portions of the mountain which obstructed the issue of lava. This is flowing slowly in a northeasterly direction, and is visible to the naked eye from Naples. In spite of the smoke, showers of pumice stone, scoria, and red ashes, curious visitors do not hesitate to approach the edge of the crater. The heat is bearable there at a distance of 20 to 30 metres.

The growth of London in all directions continues marvellous. A number of new towns have sprung up within the last three or four years. No longer ago North Wind Hollow was a rural district of fields and market gardens. The underground railway opened a new line to Hammersmith, with a station at the north end, which changed its name to Kensington, and to-day the surrounding area is covered with streets of well-built houses and high rents. Similarly, at the other end of London, increased facilities of locomotion by railway and tram car have led to the erection of many thousand of small houses in South Bermondsey or Rotherhithe. The same process goes on steadily at Edmonton, on the north and at Sydenham, on the south of London.

The late inundation of the [illegible] plain of Murcia, in Spain, [illegible] away fourteen of the surface [illegible] into houses, [illegible] orchards, buildings, vineyards, [illegible] cultivated [illegible] have been placed Monday evening under the rails at a point over which the Imperial train would pass just before entering the Moscow railway station. The Czar arrived safely, however, at 11 Monday night, and the explosion occurred on the passage of the baggage train, half an hour afterward. The house whence the mine was exploded has been discovered, and search is making for the perpetrators of the outrage. The Czar will arrive in St. Petersburg to-morrow.

FRENCH EXPLORATION IN AFRICA.

PARIS, Dec. 4.—The French government has directed the governor of Senegal, Western Africa, to send an expedition to explore the region lying between the Upper Senegal and the Niger Rivers and report on the feasibility of the construction of a railway between the two rivers.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—The famine in Upper Silesia has become so serious that in many villages over one-third of the population are starving. Famine distress is appearing in Saxony among 130 peasants and weavers.

VIENNA, Dec. 7.—A telegram from Cettinje announces that 300 Montenegrins, stationed at Velika, were yesterday attacked by several thousand Albanians. The Montenegrin garrison was being closely pressed when it was reinforced by five battalions. The Albanians were finally defeated, but with great loss on both sides. Two more battalions of Montenegrins have since been sent to Velika.

LONDON, Dec. 8.—A Berlin correspondent estimates that 150,000 persons are suffering from famine in Upper Silesia, mostly Poles. The Government is working energetically for their relief.

Dispatches from Pesth report that the Koros river has risen rapidly in consequence of the severe snow storms, and has inundated the city of Crosswardein, Hungary. Thousands of inhabitants are fugitives in need of shelter. Many houses have been destroyed. The neighboring villages are threatened with destruction. The general distress in Hungary is increasing rapidly.

FEARFUL STORM WAVE.

Personal Regeneration.

WILEY JONES.

Ye must be born again. Jno. iii. 7.

This great and essential process is three-fold, mental, moral and physical. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." Mark iv. 28. As in nature so in grace, this process cannot be dispensed with, reversed, or transposed. The physical and completing part of the process takes place at the resurrection, when the believer who has been "faithful unto death," is "born of the Spirit."

The mental and moral parts of the process must be attended to in this life; and, to see how this kind of regeneration is brought about, let us go back and gather a lesson from the generation of all things. Yonder, "in the beginning," the first recorded command was, "Let there be light." So too, in the regeneration of man, light is the first thing in order. But how is that light obtained? "The entrance of thy word giveth light." Psa. cxix. 130. Paul employs the primeval command: "Let there be light," to illustrate this very subject, saying, "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts." 2 Cor. iv. 6.

We should feel thankful for the light of sun, moon, and stars. But more thankful for the light of God's word: for that word is an instrumentality absolutely essential at every stage of mental and moral regeneration. Thus, at the first stage, characterized by the earliest perceptions of gospel truth, "of his own will begat he us with the word of truth—the gospel of your salvation." Jas. i. 18, with Eph. v. 13. At the second stage characterized by the quickening in our hearts of a new [illegible] hath quickened me. . . . I will never forget thy precepts, for with them thou hast quickened me." Psa. cxix. 50, 93. At the third stage, characterized by yielding active obedience to the gospel and becoming, literally, "a new creature." In being "born of water,"—"being born again, not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, by the word of God. . . . And this is that word which by the gospel is preached unto you. 1 Pet. i. 23.

And having thus, at baptism, been born into the household of faith, we next proceed, "as new born babes," to partake of "the sincere milk of the word" prepared for us in the Old and New Testaments. 1 Pet. ii. 2. Thus the same word which is instrumental in regenerating, is instrumental in building up; as the mother of the child is also its natural nurse. And as every one, all through life, even in temporal matters, has more or less need of advice and counsel; so especially the child of God, whose spiritual and eternal interests are so vast. And all that advice, admonition, and counsel, are provided for him in the word "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee." Psa. cxix. 11. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Jno. xvii. 12. "Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel and afterwards receive me to glory." Psa. xxiii. 24.

How perfect and wonderful are these great analogies, commencing at the words "let there be light!" Such analogies are not accidental, but Providential, showing that the same Divine being who planned the works of nature, planned the works of grace also.

Why suppose that some influence apart from the word is necessary to produce faith and conversion, when the Bible so plainly teaches that "the law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul," and that "faith cometh by hearing," and that when persons believed under the Apostolic ministry, it was "through their word?" Psa. xix. 7; Rom. x. 7; Jno. xvii. 20. If the Holy Spirit fell on them it was after they believed, not before. Jno. vii. 39; Ac. viii. 15-17 and 19-2. They greatly err who imagine that the word is not sufficient to enkindle the converting flame of sacred love in the cold heart, or to soften and subdue the heart of stone; for, "is not my word like a fire? saith the Lord: and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Jer. xxiii. 29. "Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?' Lu. xxiv. 32. "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation" for, "where the word of a king is there is power." Rom. i. 16; Eccls. viii. 4. What more powerful influence then can we expect, than the Lord's words? Those words "are spirit, and they are life." Jno. vi. 63. "The spirit is the truth." 1 Jno. v. 6; Hence, when one is converted by the truth, and not before, he is converted by the spirit; and when one resists the truth, whatever his religious profession may be, he "resists the Holy Spirit," like the Sanhedrin who, in spite of Stephen's eloquence and holy witness of his cause, rushed upon and killed him. The Lord's word, then, is not "a dead letter," but it "liveth and abideth forever;" and this is that word which by the Gospel of the Kingdom has been preached among men, as the Savior commanded His Apostles. Matt. xxiv. 14.

Pleasantries.

"You just take a bottle of my medicine," said a quack doctor to a consumptive, "and you'll never cough again." "Is it so fatal as that, gasped the consumptive."

During an election in a certain locality a temperance candidate called upon a rumseller and solicited his vote. "I would rather vote for the Evil One himself than for you," was the savage response. "Yes, I know," said the candidate; "but, in case your friend should not be nominated, might I then count on your assistance?"

Bayard Taylor: These are the rules I have always accepted: First, labor; nothing can be had for nothing; whatever a man achieves, he must pay for: and no favor of fortune can absolve him from his duty. Secondly, patience and forbearance, which is simply dependent on the slow justice of time. Thirdly, and most important, faith. Unless a man believe in something far higher than himself; something infinitely purer and grander than he can ever become—unless he has an instinct of an order beyond his dreams of laws; beyond his comprehension of beauty and goodness and justice, beside which his own ideals are dark, he will fall in every loftier form of ambition, and ought to fall.

How people deceive themselves when they think those around them do not know their real character.

POETRY.

It Doth not yet Appear What we Shall be.

BONAR.

The gems of earth are still within
Her silent unexplored mine;
There hide they, all unknown, unseen;
No sparkle upward shines.

The stars of heaven, how few and wan
Are all we see below,
Compared with what remains unseen
Beyond all vision now.

Who knows the untold brilliance there,
The wealth, the beauty bright
Like sparkle of a lustrous eye
Beneath the eyelid hid.

So with the heaven of better state
Of which these are but signs;
So with the stores of wisdom hid
In everlasting mines.

For what we shall in that day be
It doth not yet appear;
But when we see him as he is
We shall his likeness wear.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I send you two dollars in payment for THE RESTITUTION addressed to Mrs. Lizzie W. Smith. I believe it has been the first time I have been delinquent in paying up for THE RESTITUTION when due and I hope it won't occur again. I did hope to be able to do more for the paper, than merely to pay one subscription. We hoped to have sold some property ere this, but we have not succeeded yet. I cannot express to you how much I value the paper; it is my preacher, and next to the Bible to me. I long to be where I can have the unity of brethren and sisters. Direct THE RESTITUTION to Lizzie W. Smith, Del Norte, Colorado. She is my daughter, we live together.

Yours in Hope,
DRUCILLA WARDRITTON.

Del Norte, Col.

Editor Restitution:—I believe my subscription expires the 10th. I wish to renew for three months. I do not wish to be without it. I so much love to read the letters from those I hold so dear. Seventy-nine is nearly gone, and many of the dear ones have passed away with it; but I look forward with great interest to the time when the blessed Jesus shall come and unlock the tombs and bring them up from their dusty beds to a glorious immortality. O blessed day; may it soon come; may the Lord bless all your efforts to get the truth before the people, and crown your labors with success. Yours, in hope of eternal life, when the Life-Giver comes.

C. SOUTHWICK.

Winslow, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar, to apply on my subscription to the paper. It is all the preaching I have. My time expired the last of September. I have neglected to remit, but with no intention whatever of giving up the paper. I hope to be a subscriber to it as long as it exists if I live; it is now about fifteen years since I first received the precious light of truth, and was immersed by Brother Stephenson. How much I wish that I could say, that during all these years I have lived close to Christ; when I look back I can see where so many times I have let the cares of life—and I regret and say, its pleasures too, draw me for a time away from our dear Lord, but with these vain regrets I am happy to say comes the blessed assurance that faith has triumphed, and to day. I believe that God's promises are sure and that Jesus will return to all those who love him and are looking for him, and I thank God for the blessed light of truth. I know that if I watch and pray, I shall not enter into temptation. It is our own fault if we are drawn away from him. There is naught in this world like the peace that passeth understanding which is sure and comes to all who live for Christ, and his kingdom. May all who seek obtain the blessed reward is the prayer of your sister in the faith.

MRS. WALLACE HUNT.

Nash, Wis.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find two dollars to apply on RESTITUTION. In your paper of Oct. 22, I saw an address by Rev. G. A. Brown on resurrection. Is it necessary to a future life.

The article though short, appears to me is worthy of further notice. Can it not be published in pamphlet form, for further circulation. Would contribute two or three dollars towards publishing and circulating. Please say through the RESTITUTION what can be done. I. A. MORGAN.

Newburgh, Ohio.

[We have no means to publish tracts. Should a few brethren feel an interest in having the article in tract form they will have to join Brother Morgan in defraying expenses. Our business agent informs us that an edition of 500 can be furnished to interested parties for $6.60.]—ED.

Editor Restitution:—You will find enclosed fifty cents to apply on my subscription. I feel sorry that I cannot send a larger amount, but I am poor in this world's goods and have to labor with my hands for the support of myself and family; it has been five years since I first heard the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and was baptized into the Christ, and have been trying to walk in newness of life. There are none of the one faith in Vernon county that I know of except my own household. We have opposition on all sides, but are earnestly contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints. May the Lord help us to endure unto the end that we may receive that crown of life which is prepared for all those that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth. Yours in hope of eternal when Jesus comes. Amen. O. M. MITCHELL.

Doctrine and Duty.

Is not doctrine the life of duty? Is it not its motive, its strength, its reward? It is only another word for the events and facts of the gospel; it embraces also the promises (yet unfulfilled) which are matters of hope to the believer. I would ask whether unfulfilled prophecy be not in its varied details, the great theme of hope and consolation to the church which is the body of Christ? Whether a single motive to duty, a single solace to misfortune, a single reference to responsibility, can be brought to bear upon the understanding and the will, but through the medium of unfulfilled prophecy? Is the present condition of the church any other than one of dependence upon the unfulfilled promises of God?—represented in the Scriptures as a waiting position.—"Waiting for God's Son from heaven." "Occupy till I come," says Jesus, which comprehends the doing of his will; "The world passeth away and the lusts thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

The doctrine of "eternal life" resulting from the death and resurrection of Christ, is beautifully set forth in the ordinance of baptism, which is the mould or type of gospel doctrine. In becoming obedient to that form of doctrine, we express, in that symbolic death, burial and resurrection, our death unto sin and our rising to newness of life; thus, emblematically dying and rising with Christ. "Through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead," we are to seek those things which are above, when Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. "Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. For ye have died, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Read the third chapter of Colossians carefully.

Can we conceive of a single doctrine to stand by itself, apart from the practical sympathies and relations of life, occupying an influential place in the framework of the social system, and connected with all the strict obligations of duty, if, with regard to ourselves we should find the coming reign of Christ upon the earth to have no practical tendency, to have no salutary bearing upon the practical sympathies and duties of life? It would then appear more like the barren speculations of a curious imagination than a system of revealed truth. We might almost as well be classed among the scoffers who say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" "But we, brethren, are supposed to do well by taking heed to the sure word of prophecy as a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn and the day-star arise."

Peter, in both of his epistles, "stirs up our pure minds by way of remembrance, that ye may be mindful of the words spoken before by the holy prophets."

Thus, we see that unfulfilled prophecy in its varied details, is the great theme of hope and of consolation to the believer. If, then, the whole stress of practical religion already be found to rest upon Scriptural predictions yet unfulfilled to the church, should not the contemplation of the mode in which some of these assurances are to be accomplished, become a subject of deep interest and earnest enquiry to the called out ones? Is one part of the Scripture dangerous, and another part safe? All Scripture is profitable, says Paul. In the first place (according to the record) it is profitable for doctrine. From this we see the importance of understanding doctrine, in order to be made wise unto salvation—in the order of God, this being the first on the list.

It is well to bear in mind—the Old Testament is now referred to—which, by the way, is thought very little of by the moderns; but we believe that the Old Testament and the New Testament are the two "lips" of God; both are indispensible to the proper understanding of the great purpose of God in Christ Jesus, with which also the calling of the saints, or the elect church, is intimately connected. "Christ, the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." Wonderful relationship! "Members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones." We well know the relationship which every member of the human body sustains to each other; so we, brethren, make up the fulness of the Christ, and, therefore, are joint partakers with him in inheriting what God has promised; for he (Christ) is the heir of all things by God's appointment. On this principle "all things are yours (says Paul) and ye are Christ, and Christ is God's" heir. At the last passover Jesus says to his disciples: "I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father has promised unto me." And, again, "Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

In view then of our future destiny, our heavenlike calling—to be manifested in the coming age of divine interposition, when that spiritual house or temple (composing the aggregate of the saints) shall become the habitation of Deity—ought not the present to be accounted specially a school of moral discipline, intended not merely to qualify us for heavenly happiness, but to train us to the direct habits of beneficence and zeal and kindness, in order to fit us for the high and glorious office of ruling the world in righteousness, under the eye and glorious presence of the great Redeemer? In this connection of the future government of the world, with what deep interest ought we to listen to the counsels which remind us of diligence, activity and usefulness, self-denial and sympathy? How opposite to our habits ought to be those of selfishness, indolence and worldly ease? How stimulative to our efforts ought to be the example of our Lord? How forcible to our love of justice, rectitude and truth, the personal appeal to conscience—"Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" To be found in the path of duty when the Ruler comes, ought to be the paramount desire of our hearts, and the expectation would give to us a solemnity and a gladness greatly auxiliary to its accomplishment; it would lead to that habit of mind, which connects responsibility with all the conditions of life.

It was a direct reference to the victory over sin and death associated with the first resurrection to eternal life, which drew forth from the apostle that noble and practical exclamation, (1 Cor. xv. 58): "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, inasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." "Looking for that blessed hope (the one hope of our calling); the appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," is the subject interwoven with every part of revealed truth, in connection with which, and equal in importance to us, as individuals, is personal godlikeness. God "predestinated us to be conformed to the image of his Son." "Jesus gave himself for us." What for? That he might redeem us from all iniquity and purchase or purify to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works.

God has been, during the past ages, gradually unfolding his great purpose concerning the world. The present broad and swelling river of "truth" had its rise from the little spring contained in the first promise, (the foundation of all promises), "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpents head."

This promise has unfolded and expanded until we have come down to the present—a period when we may expect the woman's seed to come and complete his work of conquest. This is no idle dream, no cunningly devised fable. The prophetic rays of prophecy give unmistakable evidence that we are living in the close of this dispensation—we have line upon line and precept upon precept in this direction—verging, as we are, upon the crowning consummation of all prophetic declarations, "What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godlikeness, looking for, and hasting unto (earnestly desiring) the coming of the day of God." "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless." Let us remember, dear brethren, that "truth" cannot be separated from holiness of life. "Sanctify them, O Father, through thy truth; thy word is truth." It is by works that faith is made perfect.

Why Will You Die In Your Sins?

Jesus, our great and good teacher, the light of the world, the sinners best friend, our Savior, prophet, priest and King, came into our world to save sinners, to call sinners to repentance, to die the just for the unjust, to die for sinners. What amazing love! In this was manifest God's love toward us, that while we were yet sinners Christ died for the ungodly. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have eternal life."

Behold him on the cross! Look at the one that was innocent, the fairest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely! Now see him, agonizing—dying amid the scoffs and jeers of a blind and wicked rabble! Look again. The sun is veiled in darkness, the earth quakes, the rocks are rent. Jesus, the Son of God, is dying. His kind Father above, whose heart is full of tenderest love, cannot longer endure the heart-rending scene. His Son is dying, and that for sinners. Hear his dying cry: My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Sick and dying sinners, will you look to Calvary and live? He died for you. All nature moans the death of our world's Redeemer. Can you remain cold and indifferent? Is your heart still passive and unmoved? Listen to his voice! He calls you. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, and you shall find rest to your souls." Will you suffer him to call in vain? If so, you will surely perish, for his word cannot fail.

"Hear ye him!" "I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins; for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." Sinner, where are you tending? Will you stop and think before you further go? Just think of dying in your sins! What a death that must be! You had far better sicken and die away from home and kind friends than to die in your sins. Yes, you had better starve to death in some lonely nook of earth than to die in your sins. You had better die in a terrific hail and thunder-storm, than to die in your sins. You had better plunge down deep in old ocean, and there die amid the surging billows, than to die in your sins. Yea, you had far better wander an exile from out in the burning desert, or climb the cold mountains wild and bleak, and there perish without one friend to pity, than to die in your sins. But, the very best of all, you had better come unto Jesus and be saved on his terms. Then why will you die? "For if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." "But now he commandeth all men everywhere to repent," and that, because the judgment day is coming. "He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be condemned. In that great day, the judgment day, when the heavens and earth will shake. How do you expect to stand, having slighted offered mercy, and neglected the great salvation offered in the gospel? Sinner, Jesus still pleads with you, saying, "Come unto me and be saved." The Father pleads; turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways and live, for why will ye die?

Conference Report.

According to notice, the first quarterly conference of the church of God, of Northwestern Kansas, was held at Fairview school house, in Mitchell county, November 21, 1879.

Bro. Lott Clover was elected president, and Henry Messimore secretary. There was no business of much importance brought before the house: the propriety of Church Organization was discussed some; and then referred to the next quarterly conference, which will be held at Pleasant Ridge school house, in Jewell county, Kansas, on the 21st of May, (next). Bro. Clover was appointed evangelist.

Quite a number of brethren and sisters were in attendance, representing the counties of Cloud, Jewell and Lincoln. No preaching brethren were there from a distance, hence, Bro. Clover addressed the people during the meeting, with some remarks occasionally from Bro. Potter, of Jewell center. Large congregations were assembled, and perfect order prevailed.

The meeting closed on Sunday evening with harmony throughout. Brethren and sisters were strengthened and encouraged in the promises and each heart thrilled with joy upon talking of those things which God has in store for his people. Monday morning we parted with our good and faithful brother and sister Clover and started for our several homes. Your brother in love of the truth.

HENRY MESSIMORE.

Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Begin with modesty, if you would end with honor.

God has promised forgiveness to your repentance; but he has not promised a to-morrow to your procrastination.

He who spends his younger days in dissipation is mortgaging himself to disease and poverty, two inexorable creditors, who are certain to foreclose at last and take possession of the premises.

"The sea is like a human life,
It breaks upon the shore
Of Time with a resistless might,
And, when the wreck is just in sight,
Dies—to return no more.

"And all along the shores of Time
Full many a wreck doth lie;
The pangs of many a mad career,
Of blasted hopes and broken vows,
Of happy days gone by."

Let us carefully observe those good qualities wherein our enemies excel us, and endeavor to excel them by avoiding what is faulty, and imitating what is excellent in them.

We go on through our life comforted in our troubles, strengthened in our trials, and elevated in our joys, by the wondering and expectant hope of that day of glad surprise when the sealed package shall be opened, and we shall know what the Lord hath prepared for them that love him.

Sir Humphrey Davy: Life is made up of little things, in which smiles and kindnesses given habitually are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort.

Not almost, altogether Thine,
Help us, O Lord, henceforth to be;
To give ourselves a sacrifice
Holy, acceptable to Thee.

The eye of true faith is so quick-sighted that it can see through all the mists and fogs of difficulties. The faith of man that is grounded on the promises of God, must believe that in prison there is liberty, in trouble peace, in affliction comfort, in death life, in the cross a crown, and in a manger the Lord Jesus.

The life of Jesus has sanctified sorrow. Where would you go to find the most beautiful stones? Where the waters are calm? No. Where the waves come and go we find them. The person who has the most sanctified sorrows is the happiest.

We thread the thorny maze of life,
Through shady walks and paths of strife,
But not alone.

Offtimes we're called to bear our part,
With aching heads and sorrowing hearts,
He gives us grace.

Prof. Tyndall: If asked whether science has solved, or is likely, in our day, to solve the problem of the universe, I must shake my head in doubt. Behind, and above, and around us, the real mystery of the universe lies unsolved, and, as far as we are concerned, is incapable of solution. The problem of the connection of body and soul is as insoluble in its modern form as it was in the pre-scientific age.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready to command;
If you can not toward the needy
Reach an ever open hand;
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep;
You can be a true disciple,
Sitting at our Savior's feet.

THE SUN FOR 1880.

The Sun will deal with the events of the year 1880 in its own fashion, now a pretty well understood by everybody. From January 1 until December 31 it will be conducted as a newspaper, written in English language, and printed for the people.

As a newspaper, The Sun believes in putting all the news of the world promptly, and presenting it in the most intelligible shape—the shape that will enable the reader to keep well abreast of the age with the least unprofitable expenditure of time. The greatest interest to the greatest number—that is, the law controlling its daily make-up. It now has a circulation very much larger than that of any other American newspaper, and enjoys an income which it is at all times prepared to spend liberally for the benefit of its readers. People of all conditions of life and all ways of thinking buy and read The Sun, and they all derive satisfaction of some sort from its columns, for they keep on buying and reading it.

In its comments on men and affairs, The Sun believes that the only guides of policy that should be common sense, inspired by genuine American principles and backed by honesty of purpose. For this reason it is, and will continue to be, absolutely independent of party, clique, church, organization, or interest. It is for all, but of none. It will continue to praise what is good and reprobate what is evil, taking care that its language is to the point and plain. To expel the possibility of being misunderstood. It is uninfluenced by motives that do not appear on the surface; it has no opinions to sell, nor does those which may be held by any purchaser with favors. It hates injustice and cruelty even more than it hates unnecessary words. It abhors frauds, plots, trusts, and frighters whose purpose of every species. It will continue throughout the year 1880 to chastise the first class, instruct the second, and discountenance the third. All honest men, with honest convictions whether sound or mistaken, are its friends. And The Sun wishes no better or kinder telling the truth to its friends and about its friends whenever occasion offers hopeful speaking.

These are the principles upon which The Sun will be conducted during the year to come.

The year 1880 will be one in which no patriotic American can afford to close his eyes to public affairs. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the political issues which will be then before us, or the necessity of resolute vigilance on the part of every citizen who desires to preserve the "atonement that the founders gave us. The debates and acts of Congress, the judgments of the press, the exciting contests of the Republican and Democratic parties, now nearly equal in strength throughout the country, the varying drift of public sentiment, will all bear directly and effectively upon the twenty-fourth Presidential election, to be held in November. The Sun will be on hand to chronicle the facts as they are developed, and to exhibit them clearly and faithfully in their relations to expediency and right.

Thus, with a habit of philosophical good humor in looking at the minor affairs of life, and in great things a fixed and purpose to maintain the rights of the people and the principles of the Constitution against all aggressors, The Sun is prepared to write a truthful history for 1880.

The Sun is sold by newsmen at 2 cents a copy.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AKRON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 22, 1879.

Elder Restitution:—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and future its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $1.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brethren, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for our moments are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $2.00, and tell they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 42 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $1.00 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

POETRY.

The Evergreen Shore.

"We are joyously voyaging over the main,
Bound for the evergreen shore!
Whose inhabitants never can sigh nor complain,
And never, oh death any more!"

CHORUS:
"Then let the hurricane roar,
It will not affright us we know,
We will weather the tide, and land at last,
Safe on the evergreen shore."

"We have nothing to fear from the wind and the wave,
Under our Savior's command;
And our hearts in the midst of the danger are brave,
For Jesus will bring us to land."

"Both the winds and the waves our command control,
Nothing can baffle his skill;
And his voice when the thundering host came roll,
Can make the loud tempest be still."

"In the thick murky night, when the stars and the moon,
Send not a glimmering ray;
Then the light of His countenance, brighter than day,
Will drive all our terror away."

"Let the high-heaving billows and mountainous waves,
Fearfully overload our ark;
There is one by our side who can comfort and save;
There is one who will never forsake."

—Selected by Mrs. L. D. Covey.

Report of Travels.

J. T. WETHEE.

Editor Restitution:—Being at home again, and having time for a few thoughts relative to the visit, now ended, allow me to express, through your interesting journal, my most sincere thanks to our brethren for the kindness shown me in every place where I was called to labor. One thing I regret, that my sojourn with you was too brief to render the cause or myself any degree of justice.

I was absent three weeks and gave only nine talks, distributed to four localities. In this age of telegraphic hurry, and surfeit of business, two weeks are consumed in persuading a community that you have anything worth hearing, and a month in listening to what you may please to say.

The religious topics of our times require close and protracted investigations. Ordinary subjects do not belong to our age. Men are running to and fro, and knowledge is increasing. Persons must have time to think; and as the daily press of business will allow but few spare moments per day, they have to be given more days—a [illegible]

Our conference at Argos was, to me, a meeting of special interest. It was the first general gathering of our brethren that I had attended, since I left Huston in 1852. Though the audiences were composed of personal strangers, still, their language was familiar.

Their sermons, their exhortations, their songs, called up the buried past, and I lived anew the scenes of the past quarter of a century. To those brethren who meet every Sabbath (rest day) in their own comfortable meeting houses, I am not understood, but to those who, in little groups of two to six, are scattered from the foot of the Hitronian highlands of Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, and from Nova Scotia to California, my feelings can be appreciated.

The brethren, residing at Argos are very hospitable, and are quite well informed in the Scriptures. They have some little of this world's goods, yet they tax themselves liberally to sustain the truth. At this conference I became acquainted with Brother J. M. Stephenson and C. C. Ramsey, two distinguished and successful laborers.

Should the Argos church keep their first love, the cause of our soon coming King, will prosper abundantly in their hands. One thing is worthy of special note, since to me the like was never seen before: In the church at Argos, is a father with seven sons, neither one of which has ever tasted spirituous liquors or tobacco.

I spent one week at Brother Chaplins (the editor) at Plymouth. His kindness, with that of his family, caused the hours to pass very pleasantly. Brother Barnes, my old Cincinnati friend, I found here. I spent pleasant hours with him. I visited the public schools, now under the superintendence of Prof. Chase. They are called the pride of Plymouth; and justly so; for, with an experience in school teaching of more than thirty years in the eastern states and in Ohio, I have never seen schools under better discipline. There were nine departments, and each under very excellent government.

Praise to whom praise is due. Many of our public schools during recess are little else than a pandemonium. Here the five hundred pupils or more, were as quiet as if retiring from a Presbyterian meeting.

While at Plymouth, I visited a flowing electric well. This was quite interesting. A tube thirteen inches in diameter flows constantly full of pure water or at least clear. There must be an underground river flowing over impervious iron or rock to prevent such a result.

On Saturday and Sabbath evenings I spoke on the Coming Age. Our audiences were attentive. Could I have spoken every night for two weeks I should have been better satisfied.

The congregation at Plymouth is rather small in numbers, but it possesses some choice spirits. The congregations which I visited seemed better taught on the questions involving man's nature and destiny, than on those scriptures which show the near coming of the Messiah.

So intimately are we associated with this age, its rumors, cares and its pressures, that we find it as an incarnation to avoid the secular subject of the age—the coming of the Messiah.

My third week was spent at Pierceton and vicinity. I spoke one night at Pierceton in the Methodist church. We had good attention. If circumstances would have allowed me to speak there two weeks, I think that we could have awakened much interest.

On Thursday evening I commenced at Gospel Grove meeting house, seven miles from Pierceton. The nights were dark and unpleasant, and our congregations were not large.

We continued our meeting till Sunday evening at 3 p. m. when we returned to Brother Wheel's. Our brethren at Gospel Grove are few, but full of work. They have just completed a new meeting house, and paid for it. I was treated, while there, with great kindness. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of my third week I spent at Brother Wheel's. A more welcome and comfortable home can not easily be found. Brother and sister Wines are devoted to the cause, more than usually devoted. No drink of any kind is used at their family table, unless for company.

On Monday I left for home, and on Tuesday I arrived at my own quiet cottage.

My visit has been short and pleasant. Our brethren had no notice of my intended trip, and, consequently, no preparation was made. Still my treatment was uniformly, liberal and Christian. I hope, my brother, that you will continue to edit THE RESTITUTION as long as you can.

Report of Quarterly Assembly.

The quarterly assembly of the Church of God, met, according to announcement, on Timber Ridge, Frederick county, Va., and it was truly encouraging in this day of small things when the hour of meeting, which the brethren in that locality had fixed on arrived, to see them with their children assemble together and Brother Speid with his pile of living oracles, and, after distribution, it was like apples of gold upon pictures of silver to witness the morning service conducted by the brethren, each standing up and carrying out God's plan in this dispensation of enlightening the world, by each in turn reading a chapter of the form of sound words, until they read the Epistle of Paul, the apostle of Jesus Christ to the Colossians, much to the refreshment of the assembly and instruction of those interested, in attendance, after which the writer addressed the assembly from the third chapter of first Kings; and, after representing the little body there, and all of the One Faith who had met with them, both in person and by letter, as so many living witnesses for the whole truth in this cloudy and dark day, dwelt on the circumstance of the two women mentioned in the chapter. We showed first, as all Scriptures given by inspiration is profitable for doctrine, that the doctrine was, that the mother of the dead child represented the old mother of harlots who had given birth to a religious constitution of things which is twice dead, pucked up by the roots. We showed that, in this constitution of things there was, and are some who have faith, or who profess to believe the things of the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, but have never been baptized subsequent to having this one faith; that the dead child was a fit representative of such a faith, as it is plainly written, that faith without works is dead, it being alone; and the mother of the living child represented the true Israel or Zion of God, who being the pillar and ground of the truth has, thereby, given birth to a daughter that the prophet of God has commanded to arise and sing, speaking prospectively, for the glory of Jehovah hath risen upon thee. This daughter, or infant church, being composed of all who have the faith of Abraham, and have been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, and thus having obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name, Rom. i. 5, they truly have a living faith, are represented by the living child; and as there were some amongst us, who manifest the spirit of the mother of the dead child, by trying to divide or cut the living child or infant church in two, we urged the brethren to imbibe the noble example of the mother of the living child, by making every sacrifice that the law of the spirit will allow, to prevent a division in the household of faith; that the Master said a house divided against itself could not stand, and we, as an assembly of brethren in Christ, or church of God, should guard against some being for a Paul and some for Apollos, etc.; and that we let no man cause contention among us as to the division of the little local bodies, but that each little body take the word of God for the man of their counsel, and thus continuing one whole body, assembling together as oft as opportunity will admit, in order to build each other up in their most holy faith, and thus distinguish ourselves as a peculiar people to show forth the praise of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light on Sunday night.

The hope of the gospel being referred to in the morning service, it was made the subject of the discourse in which we showed that faith in the promises made of God unto the fathers constituted the gospel hope; and, instead of belief in Jesus Christ being the one faith as taught by the sects of the day, who bring in such testimony as Romans iv. to establish their position, we showed that the righteousness, alluded to in that chapter, is to be imputed, not to those who just believe on Jesus, but the word there, is, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus, that is, the faith must be in God's word or promise; for it was him who, on that, raised Jesus our Lord from the dead, and as the brethren had sung the soul-cheering words of the poet,

"I'll read the histories of the love,
And keep the law in sight,
While through the promises I rove
With ever new delight."

We purposed stepping back and roving over what God had promised, for he (Jesus) was himself one of the promises, which we did until the assembly could see clearly that the faith once delivered to the saints, and without which it is impossible to please God, consists in believing in God's holy word, and that Jesus, as our elder brother, preached the word of God—called the word of the kingdom—as it is written of him: "He went all about Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." For a full confirmation of the great ruling and governing truth that the faith of Abraham must precede baptism, all were, and were called upon in this report, to read the fourth chapter of Paul, the apostle of Jesus Christ to the Romans, beginning at the tenth verse; and the conclusion was, that no honest inquirer after truth can fail to see that, as the father of all who believe, was required by Almighty God to have faith in his (God's) promises before he was circumcised; so, in order that we be his children, we must also have the same faith, as there is but the one faith before we are baptized; and, also, to prove that belief in a certain promise, constituted, and does now constitute this faith, read Heb. xi., and it will be plainly seen that it was land, and country, and a city, which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God; that all of the redeemed from among men being the first-fruits unto God and the lamb hoped to come to, and we must go into Christ in our baptism with the same faith and hope, before we can be said to have faith in him, or be heirs with them to the same promised inheritance. And, in conclusion, as it was fully established that the things of the kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ was what God had joined together that, just to accept either one alone for faith, was a full development of the spirit manifested in the mother of the dead child, who was willing to have the living child cut in two, and take only one part of it, of course death would be the result; and just so we showed to have only a part of what was revealed in the Holy Scriptures for faith, or to have faith without works, was suicidal, and would end in eternal death to all who build upon such a sandy foundation; but, as we were a people who are bound together in covenant, to be governed by the perfect law of the spirit which says: "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." The decision of the assembly was to stand or fall in the defence of the whole gospel, or the things concerning the kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ, which is the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone. The meeting closed on Sunday night with the understanding that our next quarterly assembly, in order, be held with the One Faith in the Manor, near Brownstown, Warren county, Virginia.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—Although being a subscriber to your paper for a considerable time, I have not trespassed much upon your columns, nor would I at this time, but for the reason that I have seen so much written you on the subject of the resurrection, or non-resurrection of the whole of the generations which have passed away, with a few exceptions, not very plainly defined. The writers on both sides of this question are clever men, and write well upon all the subjects which they set forth. I am satisfied, however, that the preponderance of evidence is in favor of the non-resurrection, and in offering a few ideas upon this great subject I think I can place it in a light, which I have never yet seen set forth, although ably contested by both parties.

In doing this, I may state that I have yet to find the first promise to raise an unbeliever, and knowing that the resurrection is the grandest and most glorious event set forth for the encouragement of the believing follower of Jesus, as an incentive to perseverance, and the highest reward of his faithful obedience, and without which glorious privilege everything else would be in vain. I cannot see, nor do I believe, that the unbeliever should be entitled to the same unspeakable privilege, that is, being raised as a Son of God, in the nature and likeness of Jesus, which glorious act will place us in the nature of God himself, which nature, Jesus now fully bears. It is promised by the spirit through John, 1st John iii. 2, that when Jesus "appears we shall be like Him." Where is there any such promise to the unbeliever to be found? I cannot find it. 1. Is claimed by the advocates of universal resurrection, that it would be unjust dealing on the part of Jehovah if all men should not be placed in a position where they would have a chance of being saved, but it may be distinctly understood, that there would be no injustice on the part of God, if he did not save a single mortal of Adam's race, nor is there the slightest obligation on him to do so.

I am aware of the passages which are taken hold of and made the stronghold of this universal chance, &c., the strongest of which is 1 Cor. xv. 22. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." I would just remark that there is not one word of this language belongs to or is applicable to unbelievers. The whole letter, and indeed every letter of Paul, is written to believing churches, and no part of them is written to the unbelieving world at all. The "all" here mentioned, applies to the "all" in the Corinthian church, to whom he wrote, this all were dead in Adam, and this same "all" were to be made alive in Christ, and of course the same language will apply to all other churches, but not one syllable of it belongs to an unbelieving, ungodly world, "who know not Christ, nor obey the Gospel." Their end is clearly set forth in 2 Thes. i. 7, 8, but it is said that there are some who have never heard of Christ, nor his Gospel; true; but we are told the end of these also. See Rom. ii. 12. "For as many as have sinned without law, shall perish without law,"—that is they will go out of existence, identity, and personality and return to dust, according to the original denunciation of Jehovah. Gen. iii. 17, 18, 19. Such will be under no disappointment, as they never knew the glorious promises, nor did they expect any fulfillment of them.

Furthermore, as I cannot see any promise, so neither can I see any plan laid down to raise unbelievers. I see a plan set forth to raise believers. See Rom. viii. 11—"If the spirit of him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, &c.," but does that spirit dwell in unbelievers? I know not; then if this be the power that raises the believer, how can the unbeliever be raised without it? I may be told that God can do all things; this I believe, but God has not told us all he can do. He has told us what he will do, and we have no authority to expect, or look for more. If Jesus is "the resurrection and the life," and the unbeliever has no interest in, or union with him, I defy mankind to show how he can be raised. There is no information in the book to show it; it is only fancy.

It is claimed that the restitution involves the resurrection of the whole race, but a question arises, does the restitution belong to any, but the seed of Abraham? It was only to them that Peter spoke of it; Paul did not mention it to any of the Gentiles. A question also arises: Will the seed of the serpent be raised? between whom and the seed of the woman God put enmity, which remains to this day; and still another question: Will the Holy Spirit ever raise a flesh and blood body? According to the teaching of Jesus, he will not. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit." John iii. 6. And according to his teaching in Luke xx. 36, 37—all who are "raised cannot die any more—but are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Ergo, if the unbeliever is raised he is on a level with the believer. Few if any would allow this, but how can it be otherwise, according to the language used? I am aware that the second death is threatened in Paul ii. 11, 20, 14, 21, 8, but it is agreed by every commentator, and Bible student that no doctrine should be founded upon the Revelations, which is not plainly taught elsewhere in the Scriptures; the reason—because the Revelations are nearly all symbolical.

The first death seems to be that of the whole human family, except those who were in the Ark with Noah. The second death will be of the whole human race, who will be alive at the conclusion of the reign, excepting those who will be found in him, the Antitypical Ark. I deny that a denunciation of two deaths was ever threatened upon any one man. Jehovah knew the descent of sin and the full extent to which it would prevail, and has never changed the sentence pronounced upon Adam, nor has he ever authorized any one to change it, not even his beloved Son, for he understood that it was his in himself by faith, or the alternative, i. e. to perish. See John iii. 16, 18. In fact God cannot change what has once gone out of his mouth, without reducing himself to the level of one of his changeable creatures. Such a character, however, he disowns totally.

It is also strenuously claimed, that the promises to Abraham never can be fulfilled without this universal raising. It is questionable if they would be fulfilled even by it. We have no sufficient ground for supposing that they would bear any characters different to what they have borne; nor yet that the promises could be fulfilled in the one thousand years, i. e., the dust of the earth, sound of the sea, and stars of heaven, are the promises, all innumerable, and cannot be fulfilled, unless the one thousand years, should be found to be symbolical, like the most of this book. This I believe to be the case, which I will undertake to prove:

I find in Deut. vii. 9; 1 Chron. xvi. 15, and Psalms cv. 8, the following language—"The covenant and mercy of God will be kept with them that love him, to a thousand generations." Now any one of common understanding must be able to see that a thousand generations cannot be produced in a thousand years, it would allow only one year to a generation, which is an absurdity." But what is the extent of a generation; I believe it is the time allowed to man by Jehovah, seventy years. If men die before that period it is by the violation of natural laws, or accident, or war, and in the case of the young, by carelessness, or disease transmitted by ancestors. Am I not compelled then to extend the one thousand years, and if it be moved at all, we must allow it the same extension we allow to other prophetic numbers, i. e. year—day system, then we should have at least 70,000 years of Millenial reign! But if I take the idea of the promise made in Exodus xx. 5, 6, we shall have 30,000 years reign. Generations in the 5th verse is the antecedent, and, according to the laws of language, the thousands in the 6th verse should be Generations; upon this ground I extend the reign.

Yours very truly,

ALEX. KING.

SELECTIONS.

[Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.]

Coming Popish Struggles.

The church of Rome, has ever shown a consummate ability in her tactics to meet the ever-changing wants and tastes of each succeeding age. But in one respect alone we mark no change: she has been from the earliest period of her history the consistent and uncompromising foe of light and knowledge and intellectual liberty, and has never hesitated to use whatever weapon the times have placed in her hand to arrest the advance of truth and slay its apostles. Rome is ever wise in her generation: never scrupulous in the use of means, whether it be royalty or revolution, the domain of law or the camp of sedition, so long as it will minister to the revival of her power, she has been ever ready to seize the opportunities of the hour, and with consummate skill to turn them to her own account. Now she is seeking to establish her sway over the masses, not, however, with any intention of elevating them, but lending her aid for the suppression of law and order which stand in the way of her return to power.

Leo XIII., one of the shrewdest Pontiffs that have occupied the chair of St. Peter, has more accurately gauged the spirit of the times than the Pope who preceded him. Despite the stubborn resistance of Pius IX. no doubt served a purpose and confirmed the attachment of his own subjects, this defiant attitude could never advance the cause of Rome by a single step. The new Pope has reversed these tactics of passive resistance, and under his directing influence the church is everywhere resuming her activity. The adherents of the Papacy are no longer commanded to abstain from taking any part in the election of councillors and deputies, and this influence is beginning to affect sensibly the control of states and governments.

Already there are strong evidences of a revival and revival of the Papal power in the kingdoms of Italy and France. In the latter country the Ultramontanes are preparing to war on the question of education, and are raising successfully the old cry that religion is in danger. In Germany a new and unexpected power has been recently placed in their hands. The returns of the late elections show that the two great parties in the State are evenly balanced, and consequently the Ultramontane deputies have it in their power to turn the scale which way they please, and practically control the action of the Legislature.

It is very curious to watch the course Prince Bismarck has elected to pursue in this singular turn of events. Not much more scrupulous than Rome herself in the use of means, provided they will further his political purpose, it seems that he is about to strike hands with his old enemies and enlist them in his service. He will find that he is playing with an edged tool. The Jesuits are at least his equals in craft and design, and we may be pretty sure that the substantial advantages arising out of this strange compact will rest on their side. Probably when they have served his purpose he will seek (as he has done in more than one former instance) to dispense with their services, and may then discover that they have used their opportunity so well in strengthening their position in the Empire that they cannot easily be dislodged. So stubborn has been their resistance to the laws levelled against their ecclesiastical claims that even he has been fain to come to terms with the Papacy instead of continuing to wage open war with it. Rome has winning cards in her hands, and we may trust her to play them well.

Turning for a moment to our own land, we cannot conceal the melancholy fact that Rome is displaying increased activity and daily putting forth more daring claims in this the most Protestant country in Europe. Every year her standing army is largely augmented; the ranks of her priesthood receive new additions; new centres of power for aggression, convents, monastic buildings, homes of refuge are erected, and a steady stream of accession has set in toward her gate—hurling rank, wealth, fashion, and even intellect, as proselytes to her faith. No wonder Rome's hopes are high and her zeal revived when she sees this brightening prospect of a fresh lease of power in every land.

That the belief here expressed in the continued vitality of Rome is shared by the secular press, a brief extract from one of the leading daily newspapers will testify. It appeared recently in an able article under the title, "The Papacy in Italy":

"For many years past it has been clear that the power of the Papacy, so far from being dead or dying, is in truth the most permanently important of the elements which have to be reckoned with in shaping and in forecasting the future of Italy. . . . . The temporal power of which the Pope has been deprived is of comparatively small moment. It was material, and could be attacked by force of the commonest kind. But the spiritual power that remains to the Pontiff is endowed with this peculiarity, that it is much increased by the destruction of his merely temporal and material sovereignty. Moreover, it is not a power which could be readily measured, and yet to a more marked degree it is a power that could not be attacked by force of a common or easily applicable kind.

"The church of Rome has latterly shown a disposition to sever the ties which bound it to the civil governments of the world, and to ally itself with the dangerous and disaffected classes."

Thus we may look to see Rome more and more completely identified with the spirit and aims of democracy. With her ready power of adapting herself to the conditions of the ever-changing times, she will yet be seen courting the alliance and even wearing the colors of red-handed revolution. The book of the Revelation represents her to our view attired in this scarlet livery. And when the last days of this world's troubled history are rapidly drawing to a close, and the Anti-christ is revealed as the head and front of human wickedness in opposition to Jehovah, apostate Rome, then become the centre in which every phase of corrupted Christianity is merged, will be ready to ally herself to the man of sin, and will give her power to the maintenance of his lawless throne.

Her dreams of universal sovereignty will then be realized, but as a dream it will vanish away. Judgment swift and terrible is at hand for her and the partners of her dark apostasy. "The adversaries of the Lord shall be broken in pieces." Then shall He come "whose right it is to reign," and take to Him His great power, and execute judgment upon the ungodly in His fiery indignation. Purged from the defiling presence of infidelity and sin, the rod of the oppressor broken, and the triumph of rebellion forever ended, the throne of creation shall be restored to her rightful Lord, and "the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ." "Even so come, Lord Jesus." Amen.—C. H. Hamblin.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 24, 1879.

Annual Meeting of Stockholders.

The stockholders meeting will be held at the Christian Chapel, Plymouth, Ind., on Monday, Dec 29th, 1879.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec.

The Quarterly Conference Meeting will begin the Friday evening after Christmas, continuing over Sunday.

WE now bid our readers the good bye for 1879. Excuse all our errors—they have been many—and a Happy New Year to all.

QUITE a number of our friends are responding to Brother Pontious' proposition. How many will remember THE RESTITUTION to a New Year's present? The paper needs help.

BROTHER WILEY JONES informs us that he has 100 copies of his work entitled The Gospel of the Kingdom in paper covers, for sale at 50 cents a copy. It is a book of 264 pages, and a good work, and well recommended by different journals and by critical readers. These copies should all be taken at once. Address the author at Norfolk, Va.

FOR two years in the past we were only able to issue 48 numbers of THE RESTITUTION each year. For the current year we have been enabled to give 48 numbers, or four each month. Our room is limited this week, but we can announce to our brethren that our paper is slowly working into a better condition financially. The next issue will be on the first Wednesday in January after the meeting of the association.

MANY of our readers desire that the discussion on the resurrection or non resurrection of the wicked should no longer be continued in THE RESTITUTION. We shall discontinue our own articles on the Eclectic Resurrection for awhile, if not altogether. To relieve the minds of some of our readers, we will say, that we hold to a general resurrection. This general resurrection will consist of evils, of which the eclectic is only one order. No room this week to define our own position more fully. Let this topic rest awhile at least. It better go into the book form.

THE year 1879 nears its close, and the "times of the Gentiles" are, by this [illegible] their termination [illegible] 62 time, that ex[illegible] of Israel, is expand[illegible] buds, showing that the set time to favor Zion has almost come. Jerusalem, so long trodden under the foot of the profane, will soon be made a name and a praise in the whole earth. That land of promise, that has been so long a desert, will soon rejoice and blossom as the rose. The whole earth, over which the dark pall of sin and death have so long been spread, will soon be flooded with the resplendency of God's glory. The king is coming! are we ready to welcome Israel's Hope and Earth's Deliverer? Are we living so as to be found of him in peace without spot and blameless? Do we make any sacrifices for the cause of him who laid down his life for us? The time for labor in the vineyard is short. The signs of our times are portentious. The professed church is shorn of her strength and is no longer a power for good. The flood-gates of sin are broken down, and crime deluges the world. Judgment impends! Brethren be sober, be watchful, and work for God while the day lasts. The Gospel day is at the sunset. Beyond a short night of deepest gloom, now gathering over the world, the millennium, that glad day of God, will dawn. May it be ours to share in the restitution blessedness.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Mistakes of Ingersoll—Being a Review of a Lecture Delivered in Canton, Ohio, Nov. 10, 1879.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

The first mistake of Ingersoll manifests ignorance of the records of Moses. He affirmed that there was not enough linen and gold in the desert to make the tabernacle and vessels for the temple service. That said he sarcastically "is not a flax growing country, nor are there gold mines in the desert," nor did Israel have "flocks and herds to offer in sacrifice," neither could numerous "flocks and herds live on a grassless desert." It will be seen by reference to the records of Moses in reference to the exodus of Israel, that having favor with their Egyptian neighbors they borrowed, or begged, of them jewels of silver and gold, and raiments. Thus they had an ample supply of silver, gold and linen. Moses was careful to record the fact that they took their flocks and herds with them for the express purpose of offering them in sacrifice to their God. By reference to the map of the travels of Israel it will be clearly seen that Moses led them along the base of mountain ranges, where their flocks could graze on their grassy slopes and verdant plains. How could those millions of men, women and children exist without water? and where there is water there is grass. The only spot noted in Moses' journal of the travels of the children of Israel, where there was no water was Rephidim, where a stupendous miracle was wrought to furnish a supply of water. Thus all these charges with which to demonstrate the mistakes of Moses recoil upon the head of Mr. Ingersoll, and demonstrate the mistakes of Ingersoll.

Again Mr. Ingersoll represented the corpse of Moses as having written his own obituary. Where did Mr. Ingersoll get his information? There is no such an intimation in the brief history of the death and burial of Moses. It is a great mistake for Mr. Ingersoll to suppose that because the obituary of Moses was written by any anonymous author, that therefore it is not true. A false history may have the author's name affixed; and a true history may have an anonymous name affixed. If Mr Ingersoll would carefully read what Moses has actually said or written, he would not be so vulnerable to the charge of plagurism by repeating the old hackneyed charges repeated by a long line of infidels before he was born. Or if he had a high sense of truth or justice, he would have abrogate for himself, and thus screen for himself from the most culpable ignorance and the grossest perversions of what Moses said, and for which alone Moses can be justly held responsible.

Again Mr. Ingersoll accuses Moses with having written his history after the events had occured from the alleged fact that the events therein recorded did not occur for centuries subsequently. If Mr. Ingersoll will examine these records he will see if his eyes are open, that many of the events recorded by Moses were prophetic history. Moses set up the high claim of being a prophet of God, and gave as the test of a true prophet, that if the events foretold shall come to pass we may know he is a true prophet. According to Mr. Ingersoll's declaration these events did come to pass; therefore Ingersoll being the witness Moses was a true prophet. How does Ingersoll know that there was no such coincidence as those upon which [illegible] centuries subsequent [illegible] day? Even were it so there would be no evidence to-day by which it could be proven. Surely, we have a right to expect something more than cant and bold assumption from one of the ablest advocates who pleads before the bar of justice in this enlightened country. It is a great mistake for Mr. Ingersoll to suppose that he can convince the enlightened people of America by such ad captandum appeals as these to which we listened on the evening of Nov. 10th.

Another mistake of Ingersoll's was evinced in his assumption that Moses teaches that God created all things from nothing. He reasoned like a philosopher on the impossibility of something having been produced from nothing, or being reduced to nothing. In this he demonstrated his great reasoning powers when he has truth as the basis upon which to erect his superstructure. I take no issue with Mr. Ingersoll on this point. This issue is properly between Mr. Ingersoll and the so-called orthodox clergy, and not between Ingersoll and Moses. The Hebrew word Cearah rendered create and created in the Genesis's creation does not have any such etymology. Nor is it ever used in such a sense. It signifies to give proper form, to beautify, to adorn, etc., but never to produce something from nothing, or the reduction of something to nothing. There can be no possible transition from nothing to something, at which point it ceases to be nothing and commences to be something. Add nothing to nothing and nothing remains. Subtract nothing from nothing and nothing is the result. We may go back in the analysis of matter until we reach an uncreated, unaggregated, protoplasm. All beyond is eternal. This is as far as analogy can go.

Moses affirms that beast, bird, insect, creeping things and man were created out of pre-existent matter, and that death resolves them back to dust. He uses the words "create" and "form" synonymously and interchangeably. Moses says, "So God created man. And the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground." Thus, man was created out of dust. Again, Moses represents man's judge as saying "dust thou art; therefore unto dust shalt thou return." Thus, Mr. Ingersoll is in perfect accord with Moses in teaching that something was not created out of nothing.

Again Mr. Ingersoll argued that from the reference of Moses to water above and water below the firmament; that therefore he believed that the firmament was solid substance. The predicate from which he deduced this unnecessary conclusion was the assumption that Moses did not understand the fine process of evaporation. His premise being false his conclusion must be false. Moses says in the second chapter of Genesis, "But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground." Thus, Moses expressed as much in a few words as Ingersoll did in his nice little piece on the fine process of evaporation. Moses called the firmament heaven, and declared that the fowls could "fly above the earth in the firmament."

Did Moses believe that fowls could fly in solid substance that would hold own obituary. Where did Mr. Ingersoll get his information? There is no such an intimation in the brief history of the death and burial of Moses. It is a great mistake for Mr. Ingersoll to suppose that because the obituary of Moses was written by any anonymous author, that therefore it is not true. A false history may have the author's name affixed; and a true history may have an anonymous name affixed. If Mr Ingersoll would carefully read what Moses has actually said or written, he would not be so vulnerable to the charge of plagurism by repeating the old hackneyed charges repeated by a long line of infidels before he was born. Or if he had a high sense of truth or justice, he would have abrogate for himself, and thus screen for himself from the most culpable ignorance and the grossest perversions of what Moses said, and for which alone Moses can be justly held responsible.

Again, Mr. Ingersoll represents Moses as teaching that there was dry land, grass, and trees laden with fruit millions of years before there was a sun, without whose light and heat there could be no germination, no growth. With Mr. Ingersoll's glowing description of what was done on the third geologic day, no intelligent advocate of the Mosaic records of creation will take issue. But when Mr. Ingersoll declares that the [illegible] as taught by Moses, he does great injustice to Moses and his many intelligent advocates, who are the peers of Mr. Ingersoll in scholarship, research, ability, and everything except [illegible] eloquence.

In these asseverations Mr. Ingersoll has made two great mistakes, first, in representing Moses as having used the word days to denote periods of twenty-four hours each; and, second, that he affirmed that the sun, moon and stars were created on the fourth day. That Moses did not use the word day in a definite sense, is evident from the fact that he crowds the work of six days into one day in the second chapter of Genesis. He said, "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heaven."

Is it reasonable to suppose that Moses could have spoken of one day of twenty-four hours as numerically equal to six days of twenty-four hours each? Moses uses one large ring as the equivalent of six smaller rings. With all reasonable men this teaches that Moses used the word days for indefinite periods of time; and, if indefinite, they may as well represent millions of years as well as twenty-four hours each. The most cursory reader will not fail to have seen that Moses commences each of the six days with the evening, the night, or the darkness; these terms being used synonymously. Thus, the first day began with the darkness which preceded the light part of the day. When Mr. Ingersoll can furnish a measuring line to determine the duration of the darkness antecedently to the first ray of light that flashed upon earth it will then be time for him to strenuously urge the twenty-four hour day theory. Geology has furnished no such measuring line, therefore, geologists leave the question of data just where Moses left it six thousand years ago, to-wit: "In the beginning," without any date to mark that period. The results of processes which had been at work through unmeasured ages were presented in panorama to Moses, just as they appear to visual spectators upon earth to-day.

He has given a graphic description of these results as they appeared to him, in outline, without the remotest allusion to the direct causes by which these magnificent results were produced. He goes back of all dates, agents, and subordinate powers, and appeals to the first great cause of all other causes and effects. He ascribes the creation of this planet with all its wonderful phenomena to the same Almighty power by which universal nature, animate and inanimate, were created, and have been controlled and upheld. Infinite wisdom could devise the plan, and Omnipotent power could execute it. Before the acknowledged existence of an infinitely wise and powerful being who created and upholds all things, all objections vanish like mist before the rising sun.

Plain Facts.—No. 5.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord." Jer. xxxi. 27, 28.

"For thus saith the Lord; like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good I have promised them." Jer. xxxii. 42.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days and at that time, will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely, and this is the name whereby he shall be called, the Lord our righteousness." Jer. xxxiii. 14, 15, 16.

"I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for my holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went. For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land." Ezek. xxxvi. 22, 24.

"And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation, and the Lord shall reign over thee in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever." Micah iv. 7.

"For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer." Isaiah liv. 7, 8.

"And [illegible] as [illegible] of Zion a deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Rom. xi. 1, 2, 12 25, 26.

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts; In those days shall it come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all the languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, we will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you." Zech. viii. 23.

"And all nations shall call you blessed, for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts." Mal. iii. 12.

8. That the city of Jerusalem, lying between the Mediterranean and the Dead Seas, in the tract of country now known as Syria, will then become the queen city of the world, the residence of the Lord Jesus, the head-quarters and metropolis of the kingdom of God, whose dominion will stretch to the uttermost bounds of the globe.

Proof: "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart." Jer. iii. 14.

"The Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion, ... The kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." Micah iv. 7, 8.

"So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain; then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more." Joel iii. 17.

"Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv 23.

"And they shall call thee, the city of the Lord, the Zion of the holy one of Israel." Is. 14.

"And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." Zech. xiv. 16.

What language can express the restoration of literal Israel to Jerusalem, if the foregoing does not do it? The context from the beginning to the end shows, most conclusively, that the restoration of the Jews is included in Jehovah's grand and immutable plan of salvation. How can a sane mind deny this fact?

BREVITIES.

According to the Russian paper Rastel, the total number of Jewish farmers in Russia is now probably upward of 100,000.

The Globe of St. Petersburg publishes a letter from its correspondent in Odessa to the effect that a very ancient and interesting manuscript of the four Gospels, written on two sheets of parchment, has just been discovered under an old house in Bulgaria.

Among the many productions of California's fertile soil, the olive promises to be one of the most valuable. An intelligent Italian, who has been familiar with the culture from his infancy, says that, eventually, the California olive will surpass the best produced in France or Spain. It is now larger and of better flavor, and yields an oil equal to the imported article.

Archæological finds in Asia Minor are reported. An Austrian man-of-war recently left Smyrna with artistic spoils of inestimable value. In the ruins of Pergamus an engineer has disinterred, at the instance of the German Government, about 200 statues and sculptured pedestals belonging for the most part to the best period of Greek art. A beautiful figure of Eros, a colossal Lacoon, richly ornamented friezes, and many other fine pieces of Hellenic art have been dug up and sent to the Berlin Museum.

According to a Constantinople paper, the Phare du Bosphore, the commercial relations of Syria with the Turkish islands of the Archipelago and with Asia Minor have been considerably developed this year, the merchants of those places now preferring the Syra market to that of Smyrna.

An ancient writer, Ampellus, who is very little known, speaks of an altar at Pergamus decorated with sculpture. This attracted the attention some time ago of a few German scholars, and their hopes were raised to a high pitch, when, after a slight search, valuable fragments were found on the spot indicated by Ampellus. Application was made to the German Government to secure, if possible, the right of entering upon a series of extensive excavations. The Turkish authorities granted the desired permission, and Herr Conze, the director of the Berlin Museum, lost no time in proceeding to Asia Minor, where he is still hard at work. The [illegible] maintained by those acquainted with what has been going on; but the arrival of vast boxes at the museum and the incessant labor of a number of officials in closed rooms have begun to excite considerable curiosity. It is asserted by a Berlin journal, which seems to have special sources of information, that the marbles which have been received surpass the most sanguine anticipations of experts. Especial mention is made of a frieze in high relief, representing the war of the gods with the Titans and giants, which is said to be quite equal to the friezes from the temple of Phigalia and from the mausoleum of Halicarnassus in the British Museum, and to be in much better state of preservation.

REVIVAL OF INDUSTRY IN ASIA MINOR.

A correspondent, writing to the Levant Herald, under date of Sivas, November 8, says:—"It is two months since the writer returned to this region after an absence of several years. Meantime, insurrection, war, famine, an inflated, and then a collapsed currency, have in turn and together done their best not only to weaken and paralyze the government, but more utterly to impoverish and demoralize the people. It was, therefore, with no little surprise, on disembarking on Samsoun, and commencing the journey into the interior, that I met repeated and accumulated evidences of returning prosperity among the people. Grain was in process of transportation to the seaboard on mules, on horses, on camels, on donkeys, and on ox and buffalo carts. The price of every kind of beast of burden has doubled since the war; a horse, costing ten liras, will pay for himself and his keeping during one season at present rates of transportation. A bushel of grain has been given for carrying a bushel seventy miles. Wages are far higher than before the war. All sorts of farm produce command prices from 50 to 100 per cent above what is common. The collapse of the caimo appears to work in the most favorable way for the farmers, in whose hands no great amount of any kind of money is found at any time, and who, therefore, lost little when the change came. If the people can so far revive when the government administration is confessedly weak to a degree quite exceptional even here, and when travelling is insecure to the degree of serious peril even for foreigners, what might not be hoped from the recuperative power of agriculture and trade, and from the vitality and enterprise of the people, were the two great desiderata of the country once realized, viz. a just and vigorous administration of government, and suitable roads for the great currents of traffic?"—Standard.

REIGNING SOVEREIGNS.

The oldest reigning sovereign is William I., king of Prussia and emperor of Germany, born in 1797, became king of Prussia, January 2, 1861, and emperor of Germany, January 18, 1871. No other reigning monarch was born during (within) the last century.

The sovereign whose reign has been the longest is Dom Pedro, who became emperor of Brazil April 7, 1831. The next longest reign, except in two small German States, is that of Victoria, who has been queen of England since June 20, 1837.

Next in order comes Mussr-ed-Deen, Shah of Persia, since September 10, 1848, and Francis Joseph I., emperor of Austria (now Austro-Hungary) since December 2, 1848.

The youngest sovereign is Alphonso XII, born in 1857, and king of Spain since December 10, 1874. The last king crowned in Humbert I., who became king of Italy January 2, 1878.

Edward III. of England, was the common ancestor of all the present sovereigns of Europe except the Sultan of Turkey and the king of Sweden—and also the only emperor in the Western Continent. It is noteworthy that Dom Pedro of Brazil is more nearly related to Edward III. than any other ruler, being of the fifteenth generation, while Victoria of England is of the seventeenth, as are also Alphonso XII. of Spain, William I. of Germany, Christian IX. of Denmark, and Humbert I. of Italy. Lewis, king of Portugal, and Francis Joseph I. of Austro-Hungary, are of the sixteenth generation from Edward II., and Alexander II. of Russia, Leopold II. of Belgium, and George I. of Greece, are of the eighteenth.

The longest reign recorded in modern history is that of Louis XIV. of France, which was seventy-two years.

The longest English reign was that of George III. who ruled sixty years. The reigns of Henry III. and of Edward III. were each more than half a century.

Victoria of England and Kwanzu of China, rule over more than one-half the entire population of the globe.

Not only is the gracious [illegible] England connected by ties of consanguinity with all but two of the sovereigns of Europe, but also with several who would like to be kings, as Chamborg of France, who hides his time to be called to the throne as Henry V., and Ferdinand Philpe, duke of Orleans, who came to America and served for a while on the staff of Gen. McClellon during the late war.

In all America there is but one crowned head, Dom Pedro, ruler of the largest country in South America, and all who witnessed the opening of the Centennial exhibition, and the starting of the machinery in the great Machinery Hall, saw him standing by the side of the president of the great North American Republic, and both waiting the command of an American mechanic to unthrottle the steam arteries of the giant engine, and set in motion the many acres of looms, lathes, spindles, drills, saws, and hundreds of tools and machines, illustrating the industrial industries of the world. There the uncrowned Corliss was king. —N. B. Webster in Educational Notes and Queries.

NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The news from Afghanistan grows hourly more serious. It is feared that the tragedy of 1842 may be re-enacted, and the entire British force now in Afghanistan be annihilated. Gen. Roberts, with his small but gallant army, has taken refuge in Shirpur cantonment, two miles north of Cabul, and there are grave doubts whether he will be able to hold even this position unless speedily and strongly reinforced. He reports that the enemy in his immediate vicinity number 30,000 fighting men, and he is liable to be attacked at any moment by overwhelming numbers.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—The state of feeling at the War and Foreign offices today is one of almost utter consternation. Lord Napier has been summoned from Gibraltar by telegraph to consult with the War Office. The opinion prevails that not only is General Roberts in danger of destruction, with his whole army, but a general mutiny may be expected in India.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 18.—General Bright reports that the hill tribes attacked General Gough on the 30th instant. General Bright is sending forward reinforcements.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Yakoob Khan's buried treasure, recently recovered at Cabul, was all in Russian gold. Some of the Afghan regulars were dressed in Russian uniforms.

A Bombay correspondent says the details of the fighting at Cabul show that the people of the city and villages vied with each other in murdering and mutilating stragglers and wounded men of the British army, some being actually murdered within 200 yards of the wall of Shirpur.

A Lahore dispatch says: "The Civil and Military Gazette asserts that General Gough's brigade has taken refuge in the fort at Jugdulluk. Several thousands of Ghilzais are threatening it, and are throwing up defenses on the hills. General Gough has only six days' provisions."

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The Russian press is very violent in its criticisms on affairs in Afghanistan. The Gazette de St. Petersburg says: "We most candidly confess that Russia would not break her heart in the probable event of General Roberts' column sharing the fate of Cavagnari's embassy."

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A Berlin dispatch says the famine-threatened territory of Silesia forms that part of the provinces wedged in between Austria and Russia, comprising the districts of Ratibor, Kosel, Rybnick and Pless, with a part of Gleiwitz and Bublinitz, covering an area of ninety-seven German square miles, and inhabited by 400,000 persons, of which 83,000 are destitute. Typhoid fever is also prevailing among the famine-stricken.

MADRID, Dec. 19.—Various circumstances have occurred within the last few days which caused great uneasiness in Government circles. Secret police employed by the authorities at the capital and principal towns have reported that evidences of a conspiracy against the life of King Alfonso exists, and numerous arrests of suspected persons have been made.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Details of the latest Chilian victory say that an allied force of Peruvians and Bolivians 11,000 strong marching northward from Noria to effect a junction with a reinforcement of 5,000 men under the command of the President of Bolivia, attacked on the 21st of November a Chilian advanced corps of 6,000 men, who occupied an intrenched position at Dolores, near Agua Santa. The Chilian heavy cannon made great slaughter among the enemy, whose cavalry charged three times upon the guns, and attempted to carry them off, but their efforts on each occasion were unsuccessful. In the evening the rear of the Chilian force came up and decided the day. The allied forces were driven back, and their camp was taken, in which thirteen cannon were found. Many wounded officers, including the Bolivian General Villegas, were taken prisoners, and another of the allied Generals was killed. The losses of the Chilian forces were heavy.

From the criminal statistics just published by the Government of Italy it appears that in the first nine months of 1879 there were no fewer than 2,600 murders or attempts at murder committed in the kingdom, being an average of ten and two-thirds a day. In the same period of three quarters of a year there occurred 1,900 cases of highway robbery, of the perpetrators of which as many as 260 had entirely escaped the hands of justice.

SELECTIONS.

The Late Prince Imperial's Uniform.

The Natal Mercury publishes the following communication received from its "own correspondent," who writes from near Ulundi:—"Colonel Villiers found the Prince Imperial's uniform, or, at least, an agent sent by him succeeded in doing so for him. Klaas, for such is the agent's name, was carefully selected and instructed by the colonel for this somewhat difficult task. He is a follower of Napoleon's, and has only one eye, with which he sees further than most people do with their usual allowance of two. He was brought up in a Boer family and speaks Dutch fluently. Klaas went to the neighborhood of the Kraal where the Prince was killed, here he discovered, by careful inquiry, that Natango, the man who slew him, had been killed at Ulundi; he was of the Bonarabi regiment. Klaas had some difficulty in discovering the relatives of Natango, who had the uniform of the Prince, but by various means succeeded in finding the different parts of the uniform in different kraals. He brought a patrol jacket, riding breeches, leather waistcoat, shirt, belt, revolver, an ammunition pouch with 21 rounds in it, and a small bag with some coins. All the clothes, except the breeches, were pierced in front with numerous assegai holes. There was a satisfaction in this, to be able to show the Zulus that no holes were found behind; he fell like a soldier and a brave one, his back to the field and his face to the foe.' The revolver is smashed. It appears he was wounded first by an assegai, thrown from a distance of about 10 yards. He emptied his revolver at his enemies, who closed too quickly to allow him to reload, so he abled the revolver at his nearest assailant and drew his sword to defend himself. The Prince's what I may call 'historical watch' has not yet been discovered. The Zulus deny ever having seen it. They have also given up the arms and ammunition belts of the men who were killed with the Prince. There can be no doubt about the identity of the uniform, except the shirt, which I believe belonged to one of the escort. Klaas interviewed one of the party who attacked the Prince, and it is wonderful how any of the white men escaped at all. The Zulus discovered them approaching long before they reached the kraal; before they had off-saddled the Prince and his party were hemmed in on two sides, and affairs were brought to a climax by the Basuto discovering the Zulus in the long grass; had it not been for this none would have escaped. The Zulu stated that the Prince's horse bolted and broke away as he was trying to mount."

Money.

Money seems to us now so obvious a convenience, and so much a necessity of commerce, that it appears almost inconceivable that a people who created the Sphinx and the Pyramids, the temples of Ipsamboul and Karnac, should have been entirely ignorant of coins. Yet it appears from the statements of Herodotus, and the evidences of the monuments themselves, that this was really the case. As regards the commercial and banking systems of ancient Egypt, we are almost entirely without information. Their standard of value seems to have been the "talent" or "tale" of copper (94—98 grammes), which circulated like the as rudis of the Romans, by weight, and in the form of bricks, being measured by the balance. It was obtained from the mines of Mount Sinai, which were worked as early as the fourth dynasty. Gold and silver appear to have been also used, though less frequently. Like copper they were sometimes in the form of bricks, but generally in rings, resembling the ring money of the ancient Celts, which is said to have been employed in Ireland down to the twelfth century, and still holds its own in the interior of Africa. This approximated very nearly to the possession of money, but it wanted what the Roman lawyers called "the law" and "the form." Neither the weight nor the pureness was guaranteed by any public authority. Such a state of things seems to us very inconvenient, but after all it is not very different from that which prevails in China even at the present day. The first money struck in Egypt, and that for the use rather of the Greek and Phœnician merchants than of the natives, was by the Satrap Aryandes.

As regards the Hebrews, Mr. Poole tells us there is no distinct allusion to coined money in the books of the Old Testament before the return from Babylon. Shekels, of course, are often mentioned, but the word, like our pound, denotes a weight as well as coin, and in the older Scriptures it appears to have been used in the former sense. The earliest distinct mention of coins in the Bible is supposed to refer to Persian money, the word "drachæ," which appears in our version, being a mistake for "darics." These "darics" have on the obverse the king kneeling, holding a bow and arrow. The reverse shows a rude incuse. They were probably struck in the fifth century B. C. At a much earlier date, indeed, were Abraham's "thousand pieces of silver" in expiation of his treatment of Sarah; and, again, that Joseph was sold to the Ishmeelites for "twenty pieces of silver." But in both these cases it will be observed that the word "pieces" is in Italics, and there is much doubt about the word: in the Septuagint it is "shekels." One type of the ancient shekels has on the obverse, in Hebrew, "Shekel of Israel, year 4," above a chalice; on the reverse, "Jerusalem the Holy triple city." Some numismatists ascribe these coins to Ezra. The first Jewish coins were apparently struck by Simon the Maccabee, under a grant from Antiochus the Seventh.

The earliest coinage in the Western world is generally ascribed to Pheidon, the king of Ægina, who has also the great merit of having introduced the weights and measures. According to Herodotus, however, we owe this invention of money to the Lydians probably in the reign of Gyges, about 700 B. C. The question turns very much on the date of Pheidon, in reference to which there is great uncertainty. Some writers have carried him back to 895 B. C., which seems to be certainly untenable, while others have endeavored to bring his date down to 600 B. C. The claims of the Lydians have recently been advocated by some eminent authorities, especially Rawlinson, Barclay Head, and Leonormant. Lord Liverpool also, in deference to the authority of Herodotus, inclined to the same opinion. In either case the honor rests with the Greek race. The early coins form an interesting transition between the metallic ingots which previously performed the functions of currency and true money. Those of Lydia are not round, but oval, with an official stamp indicating their weight and giving their legal value: the Æginetan silver staters also imitate the elongated form of the earlier period, and are even more irregular than those of Lydia. Still they possess more of the character of a true coinage, in having been struck on a block.—Sir John Lubbock.

The White Stone.

In primitive times, when traveling was rendered difficult by the want of places of public entertainment, hospitality was exercised by private individuals to a very great extent. Persons who had partaken of this hospitality, and those who practiced it, frequently contracted habits of regard and friendship for each other; and it became a well established custom, both among the Greeks and Romans, to provide their guests with some particular mark, which was handed down from father to son, and inasmuch hospitality and kind treatment wherever it was presented. This mark was usually a small stone, or pebble, cut in half, and upon the halves of which the host and the guest mutually inscribed their names, and then interchanged them with each other. The production of this stone was quite sufficient to insure friendship for themselves or their descendants whenever they traveled again in the same direction. Now it is evident that these stones required to be privately kept, and the name written on them carefully concealed, lest others should obtain the privileges, instead of him for whom they were intended. How natural, then, is the allusion to this custom in the words: "I will give him to eat of the hidden manna;" and having done so, having recognized him as my guest, my friend, "I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it—a pledge of my friendship, sacred and inviolable, known only to himself!"

We have occasionally referred to the movements in Russia to encourage and develop trade with China, and especially between Siberia and the Celestial Empire. It is now stated that a contract has been obtained by the Motala Shipbuilding Company of Sweden to construct a steamer, 100 horse power, of Motala Bessemer steel, for this trade. The vessel is to be shipped in pieces at Gothenburg, and will be barried by the Nordenskjold route round North Cape, and then up the Yenessei to Yenoseisk. The last stage will be travelled on sledges, and it is hoped that the steamer will begin her trips on Lake Baikal in the spring of 1881.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To lecture, I will commence meetings at Pennington on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in the present month. The first and second Sundays in February, 1880, in Edgar county, Ill. Am first available at Paris. The third and fourth Sundays in January at Georgetown and at the Lake. J. H. HARCH.

DIED.

EYCHANER—Of heart disease, Sister Lizzie Eychaner, wife of Bro. Milton Eychaner, aged forty-six years and thirteen days.

She leaves nine children and a kind and loving husband to mourn their loss. Sister Eychaner was a believer in the truth before the baptism is concerned has never obeyed the form of doctrine. She is in the hands of Abraham's God and he will do right, and we can only say the will of the Lord be done. The writer spoke to an attentive audience on the subject of death, showing that reason and Revelation both taught us that death was an enemy. Text: "There shall be no more death." Glorious thought. May we all be permitted to see it for time. AMOS. J. T. FINN.

Correction.

In my address on "What is man?" in issue of Nov. 20th at Nos. for "Sirs," read "Sirs" [illegible] beginning and be at rest," read "then, why did I [illegible] in the beginning and have been at rest."

J. M. HARLAN.

In my article in last week's paper, in first line of first column instead of "masters" read "masters;" in same column 30th and 36th lines from bottom for "proposition" read "propositions." Second column, 37th line, omit the words "the rest of," and it will read "the receiving of the righteous dead."

RESTITUTION FUND.

AKRON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Editor Restitution:—With your permission I will make an appeal to the Brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and assist its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $2.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment: are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $2.00, and will it, please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 62 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 20 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $2.00 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to visit you all in that coming kingdom. Be faithful.

POETRY.

The Entrance of Truth.

MRS. M. F. A. CROZIER.]

The entrance of thy word giveth light.—Bible.
Calm, pitiless, in silence lies
The cold and dewy earth,
Waiting the coming back of day
To give her still life birth;
The stars fade out,—the sun is up,
His light streams up the skies;
Quick throbs her heart, her pulses thrill,
And flash her waking eyes.
She opens wide her soul to take
The wondrous glory in;
It strengthens, warms and purifies,
As Christ's love conquers sin.

Still, dark, and dank the human heart
Lyeth beneath his fall
That error with her chilling hand
Has thrown above us all.
Soon science new truth breaks up the east,
And scatters night and cloud,
And warm new life begins to stir
Within the cold heart's shroud;
'Tis morning to the soul—it wakes
To gladness—soul to soul,
And in his rays traces of its beams,
Grows free, and brave, and strong.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Resurrection of the Wicked to be Punished Again.

JOEL A. SIMMONDS.

Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.—John v. 28, 29.

This passage is the stronghold of the doctrine of the resurrection of the wicked to be punished again. It is claimed that it should be understood in its literal sense; that it teaches the unconditional resurrection of all the wicked that have lived and died since the world began, to be punished again; that, after the wicked have suffered all that is demanded of them, by any known law, up to the date of this passage, they will be raised from the dead to be judged and punished again; that, after a lapse of more than 4,000 years, during which time, no mention is made of this additional punishment, this doctrine is revealed in this passage. It is claimed that this punishment, now for the first time made known to the world, will be inflicted not only upon all that come after its announcement, but upon all that have gone before.

Now, is this the sense of the passage? Does it teach that which is so revolting to our sense of fitness, and of justice? Does it teach a doctrine no where mentioned in the Old Testament, and which Christ does not mention in Matthew, or Mark, or Luke? Before we accept such a blind conclusion let us examine this passage carefully, and compare it with the Scriptures of the Old Testament and with the sayings of Christ.

Now, lest any should think that the New Testament is of higher authority than the Old, I will state right here, what I have said before: That the New Testament did not come to amend the Old, or to correct its mistakes. It is subordinate to the Old. The things done in the New Testament, were done in fulfillment of the predictions and promises of the Old. If Christ was born it was according to the Scriptures. If he died, it was according to the Scriptures. If he rose again it was according to the Scriptures. The things taught in the New Testament, were according to the Old. Paul spake none other things, than those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come; and those who taught were enjoined to speak "as the oracles of God." The Christ of the New Testament, was the promised child of the Old. The Gospel of the New Testament, was the Gospel preached to Abraham. The kingdom of the New Testament, was the kingdom of the prophets, which was prepared when the world was made. The authority of the New Testament was derived from the Old. "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up of your brethren like unto me, him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." The New Testament does not censure the Old, but the Old the New.

Therefore the New Testament must be in harmony with the Old; any interpretation of the New that conflicts with the Old cannot be correct.

Does the Old Testament teach that the wicked will be raised from the dead to be punished again?

The law that was given to Adam required only one punishment; "Thou shalt surely die." It is claimed that this new law found in the New Testament, requires that the wicked, after having suffered this one punishment, shall be raised from the dead to be punished again.

The first punishment under the Gospel, which has passed upon all men, is only one punishment, and nothing beyond. It is claimed that the new law requires that the wicked, after having suffered the whole of this punishment, shall be raised from the dead to be punished again.

The flood was only one punishment, and nothing beyond. This new law requires, as it is said, that those who were drowned in the flood, must be raised from the dead to be judged and punished again. The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, were to be destroyed only once, and nothing more. This new doctrine requires, that after those cities had suffered the vengeance of eternal fire, and after they had been completely destroyed as was threatened them, they must be raised from the dead and suffer another punishment.

The judgment of Egypt consisted in a series of judgments terminating in the overthrow of the Egyptians in the Red Sea. But according to this new law, they must be raised from the dead to be destroyed again.

The Lord judged Israel in the wilderness, and said unto them, "Because ye have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice, your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness, and in this wilderness you shall die." This is God's judgment of Israel. It was executed upon them. They were wasted in the wilderness, until they died. But this new law requires that they shall be raised from the dead to be judged and punished again.

These judgments all related to the first death. They did not contemplate or intimate any other punishment. They were all examples of judgment, for all that should afterward live ungodly. There were no resurrected ones among them.

The general tenor of the Old Testament recognizes these punishments as being sufficient, and it does not recognize anything beyond. But this new law is not satisfied with these judgments, and requires that all those who have suffered these punishments, shall be raised from the dead to be judged and punished again.

These judgments are described as being final. But the interpretation claimed for this new law, denies that they are final, and requires that these judgments must be set aside, and those who suffered them must be raised from the dead to suffer an additional punishment.

All the judgments in the Old Testament terminate in the first death, and no mention is made, nor intimation given of any punishment beyond.

Thus, it is that the claims urged from this new law, conflict with the whole of the Old Testament, and therefore, cannot be the correct sense of the passage.

The sense claimed from this passage is also in conflict with all that Christ said elsewhere on the punishment of the wicked.

"Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." This destruction is the same as the destruction in the Old Testament. It ends in the first death. But the new law requires, that, after this punishment has been fully suffered, all that walk in the broad road must be raised from the dead to suffer another punishment.

"As therefore, the tares of the field are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world," with the wicked. This judgment was upon the living world. It was only one punishment. It will be by fire, as was the judgment upon the cities of the plain, and will terminate in the first death. But the new law requires that, after this punishment has been suffered once, those who have suffered it must be raised from the dead to be punished again.

"Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." This is the judgment of the living world, and is therefore the first death. It is only one punishment, like that of Sodom. But this new law allows of no exception. All that have suffered this punishment must be raised from the dead, to be punished again.

"It is better that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he drowned in the depth of the sea, than for him to offend one of these little ones that believe in me." This was the judgment of Christ. He thought this a fit punishment for those great sinners who offend them that believe in Christ. It was the first death by drowning. It was one punishment, and nothing more. But this new law requires that, those who have been drowned, shall be raised from the dead to be punished again.

"It is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes, to be cast into hell fire, where their worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched." This punishment is upon the living world. It is like the punishment described in Is. lxvi. 24, "and they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh," and is therefore the first death. But this new law is not satisfied with this one punishment, and requires that those who suffer it be raised up and punished again.

"He that seeketh to save his life shall lose it." This punishment is the loss of life. It is the first life. Our text seems insatiable for punishment, and requires that he who has lost his life, shall be raised from the dead to lose it again.

"Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." The tower of Siloam had fallen upon eighteen persons and slew them. This was their first death. They had already perished. Now, except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish. This is all the punishment mentioned. But this new law requires that all who suffer this punishment, shall be raised from the dead to perish again.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." To perish in this passage means the same, as to perish, when the tower of Siloam fell on them. It is therefore the first death. It is only one punishment. This new law is not satisfied with this punishment, but after having suffered this punishment, they must be raised from the dead to receive another punishment.

"This is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all that he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day." Not to be raised up at the last day is the punishment. But the new law denies this, and requires that those who are lost, by not being raised up at the last day, shall be raised from this lost condition to be lost again. This punishment is the first death in every case.

Thus, the sense given to this new law, conflicts with all that Christ has said elsewhere by the punishment of the wicked, and therefore, cannot be the true sense of the passage.

Unconditional resurrection is opposed to conditional resurrection.

This passage affirms the unconditional resurrection of the good and the bad. The resurrection of the righteous is conditional. "Enter ye in at the strait gate, for straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." This is resurrected life. It is conditioned on being sought. Not so with the new law. The good and the evil are brought forth alike.

"He that seeketh to save his life shall lose it; he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." The life to be found is resurrected life, but it is conditional. In our text the good and the bad come forth alike, without being sought.

"Every one that hath left father or mother for my sake and the Gospel's, shall receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come, eternal life." This is resurrected life, but it must be sought. The resurrected life in our text comes to all without being sought.

"Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." The resurrection here is conditioned on being just. But in this new law, the good and the bad come forth alike, without any conditions.

"The children of this world marry and are given in marriage. But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead." Here the resurrection is attained by being worthy of it. Not so in our text, the good and the bad come forth alike.

"Now that the dead are raised, Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, for God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." The resurrection in this passage, is conditioned on, the Lord being the God of those who will be raised from the dead. But the new law does not recognize any such necessity. It requires the good and the bad to come forth without any such condition.

"And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which believeth on me may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." Here the condition of being raised up at the last day, is to believe on Christ. And those who are not raised up at the last day are lost. But the resurrection spoken of in our text has no such conditions, and must, therefore, be understood in some other sense.

"Because I live ye shall live also." "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit down with me in my throne, even as I overcome and am sit down with my Father in his throne." The reason why Christ was raised from the dead, will be the reason why any of the dead will be raised. But there is no such reason in our text, why the dead should be raised.

Thus it is, that the unconditional resurrection in our text, stands opposed to the conditional resurrection of those who are worthy of it. Therefore, the interpretation claimed for this passage cannot be correct.

If some are raised from the dead because they are to be done away [illegible] raised from the dead who are not worthy. For the resurrection of the dead cannot be both conditional and unconditional. It will not do to say, that Abraham will be raised from the dead because the Lord was his God, and that his neighbor will be raised from the dead though the Lord be not his God.

It will not do to say that the righteous will be raised from the dead unconditionally, and the wicked unconditionally, as the resurrection must be wholly conditional, or wholly unconditional. It cannot be both.

I will now come to the explanation of the text. This passage includes all the resurrection of the dead every man as the parable of the rich man and Lazarus relates to the state of the dead, and the immortality of the soul. Our text is a very easy passage to quote to prove the resurrection of the wicked. As this parable is an easy passage to quote to prove the conscious state of the dead and the immortality of the soul. But we as a people have learned by comparing Scripture with Scripture, that this Parable does not relate to the state of the dead, or to the immortality of the soul at all. So we may learn in the same way, that our text does not relate to the resurrection of the wicked at all.

This passage was addressed to the Jews as representatives of the house of Israel, and, as without a parable spake he not unto them, this passage is parabolic. It represents that the time will come when the whole house of Israel, good and bad, will come forth from among the heathen into their own land. They that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.

The all that are in the graves, represent the living Israel at the time referred to. The graves represent the condition of Israel among the heathen. In this condition they can hear and obey. The coming forth, and the resurrection, mean the same thing, and represent the gathering of the people of Israel from among the heathen into their own land.

As the passage cannot be understood in this literal sense, without being in conflict with all that is in the Old Testament on the subject, and with all that Christ said elsewhere in the New, of necessity we must understand this passage in a symbolical sense. Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones favors the application we have made of the passage. The graves in that vision represented the house of Israel in a condition in which they could say, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are cut off from our parts." The coming out of their graves represented the house of Israel coming out from among the heathen into their own land. So the graves in our text represent the house of Israel in the same condition, in which condition they can hear and obey. The Apostle Paul seemed to use the same figure when he said: "If the casting away of the people of Israel be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"

Of what I have written this is the sum:

1. The doctrine claimed to be taught in the text, that all the wicked will be raised from the dead to be punished again.

2. That this text as well as all the New Testament, must be explained in harmony with the Old Testament.

That God's judgments in the Old Testament are all in harmony with the one punishment which has passed upon all men. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

That these judgments are examples of God's judgments to all that shall afterward live ungodly, and that they are final.

That for more than 4,000 years, during the times of the Old Testament no other punishment is mentioned, or intimated. Therefore, the doctrine claimed from this text cannot be correct.

1. Because, it is in conflict with the whole of the Old Testament.

2. Because, it conflicts with all that Christ has said elsewhere concerning the punishment of the wicked.

3. Because, the resurrection in this passage being unconditional stands opposed to the conditional resurrection of the righteous. Therefore the text must be understood in a symbolical, and not in its literal sense.

A recent discovery at Pompeii was that of a birdseller's house. The imbedded skeletons of numerous birds were on a cage; also, large quantities of carbonized millet seed, hemp seed and a species of small bean, which had been the dealer's stock of bird food.

A telegram from Sierra Leone states that two Frenchmen, MM. Zwilfel and Mounier, agents of the Marseilles house of Vermisch, discovered in the course of September the sources of the Niger.

[The Printer:

Soul-Sleeping.

The term "soul-sleeper" is used to-day only as a term of reproach; and those who are so-called would do well to carefully examine the Scriptures and see if they teach the doctrine.

1st. We believe there are few thinking people who are not soul sleepers.

Answer candidly and thoughtfully the following questions: What part of a man sleeps when he retires at night, and sleeps an unconscious, unbroken sleep? "The mind," says one. True, it cannot be the body; for every member of the body is at work at its proper functions. The heart is forcing the blood to the extremities; the veins carry the blood in its proper channel; the pulse pulsates; the arteries beat; the nerves intuite and exhale the air; the stomach digests food; and all members of the body are busily engaged. But when man at night sleeps and dreams, who part sleeps? We say the soul. Are we wrong? If not, then soul-sleepers have reason and common sense on their side. But give a "thus saith the Lord" for your doctrine. To the law and the testimony. Let us "search the Scriptures," only for the purpose of learning the truth; and may the Spirit guide us in our investigation.

Our first position is, the soul is in the grave. In Psalm xlix. 15 we read: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." I ask, will God redeem anything else from the power of the grave except the soul? A queer place this for "an immaterial, thinking substance," (Dwight's Theology), an immortal soul. When will God redeem "my soul" from the power of the grave? Read the whole verse: "for he shall receive me." Now if we can find when we are to be received we can decide this point. "I will come again, and receive you unto myself." John xiv. 3. Then we see the soul lies in the grave until the coming of Christ the second time. Again in Psalm lxxxix. 48, we find this question: "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death?" There have been only two exceptions in the history of the race, from the time of Adam to the present. "Death is passed upon all men." Rom. v. 12. "In Adam all die." 1 Cor. xv. 22. Then we can all agree in our answer to the question asked by the Psalmist, and say, without a dissenting voice, "There is no man that liveth and shall not see death." But how about the next question, Psalm lxxxix. 48, "Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" Would the Psalmist speak correctly if death (spoken of in the preceding question) did not deliver the soul to the grave? Strange doctrine, this, for theology of modern times says the soul is before the throne or wailing in torment. Again, in Psalms xxx. 3, we have this declaration in prayer; "O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave; thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit." This can only refer to the resurrection, for then the righteous shall be kept alive, "live for ever," and not go down to the pit and die the second death. What a consolation! "They shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6.

Again, in Isaiah xxxviii. 17, we read: "Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption." Here was good king Hezekiah, who had been very sick, and was now sound and well. He was a perfect man; and now God in love to his soul delivers it from the grave. Bible writers were surely very ignorant of modern theology, for they seem to weep bitterly and not to understand that "death is the gate to endless joys," or "the voice that Jesus sends to call us to his arms." In Psalms xvi. 10, we read: "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell." If modern theology is true, either David's or some other person's soul went to hell and was not left there. Can any one suppose that at the general judgment some immortal soul, who to-day gnashes its teeth, will be taken out of hell and not left there? But what says the Bible? Peter explains that it is the soul of Christ which was not left in hell, (Hades, the grave)." Acts ii. 25-33. The soul of Christ was offered for sin, Isaiah liii. 10, and was not left in the grave.

Our second position is, the soul is said to die. "They (Israel) smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them." Josh. xi. 11. This does not look as though "death is the kindly frost that cracks the shell, and leaves the kernel room to germinate." These souls were utterly destroyed. Was the body only destroyed, and the immortal soul released from its prison-house? "Utterly destroyed." No room for mistake here. God declares the souls were smitten by the edge of the sword, and utterly destroyed. The people in those days surely had no idea of "a never-dying soul to save," for they utterly destroyed them all. "My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life." Job vii. 15. How would you go to work to kill an immaterial soul? How could an immortal soul choose death when that which is to be slain cannot alive, since it has not the principle of liberation? "As I live," (here is an oath,) "saith the Lord God... the soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek xviii. 4. Will it? "None can keep alive his own soul." Psa xxii. 29. Then it surely will die, How strongly the Bible tells! But, thank God, Christ has once for all conquered death, and against the church "the gates of hell (the grave) shall not prevail."

Thirdly: That which goes to the grave is said to be asleep. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers." Deut. xxxi. 16. This is a good witness, for it is of whom it is written "it is impossible for God to lie." We have seen the soul goes to the grave, and now death is referred to as a sleep. This begins to look like soul sleeping, in the Bible. The prophet Nathan, speaking "the word of the Lord" to David, says: "And when thy days be fulfilled and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers," etc. Are David's fathers in heaven? Has, they are asleep, and David is sleeping with them. Let us see. In Acts ii. 29, Peter says David "is both dead and buried," and in verse 34, "he is not ascended into the heavens." Where is David then? Dead and buried. And xiii 36, "David fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers and saw corruption." Then sleeping with his fathers means death and corruption. "the sleep of death." Psa. xlii. 3. No mistake here, "Some are fallen asleep," 1 Cor. xv. 6. And we learn that they also "which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "If Christ be not raised," "if they were in heaven or paradise, they would not have perished in any sense; but all depends on the resurrection of Christ, and so the apostle shouts the victor's song: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Mark the language, the first fruits. Christ's soul was not left in the grave, and the heaven will [illegible] in due time. But "we shall all sleep," or die. "But will be some alive at the coming of Christ and these shall be changed." There will then be no more sleeping, for "death is swallowed up in victory."

How long must men sleep in the grave? "As for me,...I shall be satisfied when I awake (in) with thy likeness." Psa. xvii. 15. The awakening time is Dan. xii. 2—the resurrection at the advent of Christ.

And now we have seen from our investigation that the Bible teaches soul-sleeping. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go that I may awake him out of his sleep. Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." John xi. 11-14. Let us rejoice when we are counted worthy to bear a name given in reproach because we believe a Bible doctrine.

The Figaro has just published a further installment of Count de Semelle's report on his travels in Central Africa. He was highly delighted with the Sultan Amrou, who resides in a fortified city, and who can place in the field 60,000 horsemen and 100,000 foot soldiers. The greater portion of this force, however, is only armed with bows and arrows, the rest having flint muskets. The Sultan, says the Count, exercises absolute power, and treats travelers with the greatest hospitality. Theft is almost unknown in this country, probably owing to the manner in which it is punished. The accused is brought before the Sultan in presence of the people, and the prisoner, if guilty of a first offence has his [illegible] cut off and is paraded through the [illegible] piro; a second offence is followed by the gouging of the left eye; and [illegible] entails the pain of death with torture.

Bishop Utillery, of California, [illegible] Christian Convention recently held in Glasgow, Scotland, thus spoke of the work being done by the Church in the South: "Its agents everywhere saying to young men of intellectual promise, 'Come with us and we will clothe, educate, and bring you at our own expense, and bring you out scholars.' My people are willing to learn, and are making considerable progress. No fewer than 200 colored men are now in Rome studying for the priesthood, and in the schools of the United States the children are being educated by the Roman Catholics. These will by-and by come forth with their blades made keen by the memory of the treatment which they received at the hands of the Protestant churches."

Coming Age—Its Character and Preparation—No. 2.

A. P. WESTCOTT.

The unique exclusiveness of these extremes does not meet the point of issue. The question involved in this: Is the climatic arrangement of the earth, under its present constitution conducive to life, health, and endless happiness? If not, a new order of things is required, before the earth can be a perpetual home for a pure, happy and immortal family. Keep in mind what we contend for—a change in the earth's constitution and fixtures; second, that God has promised the change.

It may be true that some men, with vigorous constitutions may endure, for a short time, the extremes of climate; yet who has ever survived in health, the arctic winters? Are the natives of these ice-bound regions, robust, healthy, happy and intelligent? or has the cold dwarfed their bodies and crystalized their brains?

Who have been able to endure the climate of South Africa? All African explorers have finally yielded to the deadly power of its malarial climate. The expression, "acclimated," implies that the varied climates are naturally injurious to the human constitution; especially the extremes of heat and cold. Intellectual development follows the temperate zones.

If the earth is to be full of the glory of the Lord, if it is to sustain a dense population of happy immortals, it must have a uniform climate adapted to its people. To secure such the earth must be radically changed in its constitution and in its revolutions also.

4. The soils of the earth, in its present state, are not adapted to man in his immortal nature. Since the removal of the Garden of Eden the earth has exhibited marked features of the curse, unproductiveness. Three-fourths of its surface are still and water. Vast ranges of barren mountains, spread over the other fourth. Immense sand deserts occupy other districts. The productive portions make but a small fraction. These mountains and deserts are kept by laws still operating. There must be a change in the existing laws of nature, before fertility can spread over the earth. No great moral change can convert frigid zones into Gardens of Eden, or make the deserts of Cobi and Arabian deserts and the great African Zahara, or the Andes of America, or the Himalaya of Asia "Bud and blossom as the rose."

6. The Right of this age to equality family. It has evidently [illegible] to suit an inferior probationary [illegible] of man. The alternations of day and night, and their relative duration; the changes of seasons are [illegible] ments to suit the peculiarities of the earth's open, only for the first Adam and his family. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 11, 1880.

From papers just come to hand, from which we have neither the time nor the room, to make extracts, we discern that the outlook for continued peace is far from assuring. The current year will probably be eventful. Truly we are living in a grand and awful time. Practical Christianity is our great need, embracing both meekness of heart and of life.

Our paper is now ready to go to press, and our time at this season of the year must be given to its financial arrangements, and, as a consequence, some other matters must be temporarily postponed. We thank the friends of the cause for all the aid so kindly sent, and assure them that it is not only needed, but, also, that it shall be most carefully and economically used to cancel indebtedness and to furnish the paper as nearly without any weekly suspension as possible.

The Regeneration of Palestine.

From a late number of "The Age to Come Herald" we extract the following interesting items of intelligence respecting Palestine and Jerusalem, presuming that all our readers will take pleasure in every piece of detached information regarding that land and city, as it is in this land, as a territory, and in this city, as a metropolis, that a divine monarchy is soon to be established that will be, not only a universal, but also, an eternal kingdom. When this kingdom is organized the Eastern Question will be solved and not before. Prof. Rosedale, a learned Jew, has just returned from a visit to Jerusalem. He entered the city on the 11th of November last, and, in his notes of travel, speaks as follows of the City of the Great King:

"I found many changes and improvements had taken place outside the walls in my absence of two years from the city; and strange to say that, although troubles were continually spreading from the bereaved Moham[illegible] through the war with Russia, [illegible] not impede the Jews in [illegible] to their country, and [illegible] day I left I was [illegible] Jaffa, [illegible] arriving Jews. [illegible] temporary accommodations [illegible] they procure for themselves homes. The Rothschilds already have immense buildings there for that purpose. This will certainly be an encouragement to the Jews abroad, especially those long anxious to return to the land that always belonged to them. The city within the walls has undergone no improvements whatever, and seems to stand as a heap of witness, reminding us that God is able and will make it yet a place worthy of His people, the people he always had pleasure in; so this ought not to be a discouragement to the believers."

In another column of the same paper we find the following in regard to opening up lines of internal communication in the lands where empires and kingdoms have risen, flourished, and fallen, and where desolation has been so long enthroned. There will yet be "highways in the desert" and the deserts themselves shall yet "rejoice and blossom as the rose." Prophecy will receive a most literal fulfillment:

THE PALESTINE RAILROAD.

There is a company organizing and about to get incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, having for its object the building and operating of a railroad in Palestine. Owing to the disturbed state of affairs in the Turkish Empire, it was thought best for the company to get incorporated under the Foreign Railroad Act of Massachusetts; then all the company would have to do before they commenced building the road, would be to get a right of way, and permit to build, of the Turkish authorities. This would make the company a Massachusetts corporation; but the railroad would be located in Palestine; thus giving the company the benefit and protection of the international law in case of a disturbance in the Turkish Empire, and making the United States an interested party. The Panama and several other railroads were incorporated in the same way, also the great Suez Canal Company, which was a French corporation, but the canal is located in Egypt.

It is proposed to build this railroad from some point in Egypt already connected by rail with the Nile valley, probably from Port Said at the mouth of the Suez canal, as that is apparently destined to become the great maritime city of Egypt, and has a good harbor. The road would then follow the level plain near the Mediterranean shore, through the city of Gaza, Ashdod, Ramleh, Lud, and the Carmel range of mountains, with branches to Jaffa and Jerusalem. It would cross the Carmel range of mountains by the Megido Pass thence running northeasterly through Damascus to the Euphrates valley, where it is proposed to connect with the Euphrates Valley Railroad, to be built by the English. It is unnecessary to say, that this road would become one of the best paying roads in the world.

How you [illegible] to see in the [illegible] in which we [illegible] to [illegible] prophets is about commencing. Where paradise was lost paradise will soon be restored. In the [illegible] restored to Abraham and his seed [illegible] once blessed, and as in coming ages [illegible] will again restore the good graces of God with its blessings trees and rivers. The profane feet of the infidel and the ages-blind will soon cease to trample down Immanuel's [illegible] Our extract now will show that Israel's Sons are hopeful, and that the exiled nation of sad heart and weary face will soon go home to the loved fatherland.

"Palestine, now lying low in the dust, may be restored to more than its pristine grandeur and glory. It is a land of mountains, and plains, and valleys. It has within itself almost every variety of soil and of climate. The productiveness of the soil is amazing, wanting only water and culture. The olive and the fig and the vine grow luxuriantly upon the mountain sides, and without artificial irrigation. When thus adorned with verdure, the scenery will be most picturesque, and whether seen in the sunlight or by the pale light of the moon, under a clear Oriental sky, it is not difficult to realize in imagination what it once was under a high state of culture, or what it will be in the future, 'when the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.'

"The maritime plain is a natural wheat field, the plain of Esdraelon is not only fertile and easily watered, it is a line prepared by the hand of nature for a railroad across the Peninsula; the Jordan Valley is tropical, and will bear tropical fruits, and with irrigation from the mountain springs and from the Jordan river, it will yield large exports of untold value, for which the markets of the world are waiting. There is wanted only a beneficient government, and patient industry, and all these things shall come to pass. The amelioration of the climate is dependent upon the education and moral, spiritual, and physical elevation of the people who inhabit it.

"Man's mission upon earth is 'to dress it and to keep it,' to subdue it, and to make it subservient to his interest. Its reclamation, after having been degraded, is by a return to normal conditions, so that soil and air and temperature and water may conjointly and harmoniously work for the highest good; for until now, the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain, waiting for the promised Redemption. In view of the broadest generalization of facts, it is not a mere figure of speech or an Oriental symbol, that the desert and the whole inferior creation is in correlation with man, the exalted superior and head.

"Of all the mighty sights Rome ranks as the [illegible] for things eternal. Thus says, Arnold. Not Rome, but Jerusalem, is to be the eternal city. Then religion restored to its birthplace, will bring with it every other blessing; industry, thrift, enterprise, good government, art, commerce, order, and general prosperity, not of the people only, but the soil and climate also; no amelioration of the conditions of man's environment; grateful shades for the summer, protection from the rude blasts of winter, the rains in their seasons, and abundant harvests. The dew shall descend on the moor, Carmel shall rejoice, and the Cedars of Lebanon shall clap their hands. The old abundance is yet sleeping in the soil of Palestine, and it needs no miracle, but skilled industry and the blessing of God, to bring back the beauty and the wealth of the early ages of the Hebrew Monarchy."—Prophetic News, (London.)

Glory to God that earth's golden age is in the future and will last forever. Groaning creation sees its deliverance. The curse will be removed, and the thorn, the thistle, and the brier, will soon give place to the box, the fir-tree, and the myrtle. The cedar shall soon wave its branches in triumph over the mountain height, and the feathery palm spread its grateful shadow over the sunny levels. Sharon's plains shall soon be redolent with incense from the rose-gardens of a land renewed, and the lily shall soon rise up and smile in smiles of flowery enchantment. O Palestine, land of the Psalmist and the Seer, Land of the Cross and the Throne, we wait thy regeneration.

RICHES IN THE TIBER.

Treasures Found in the Bottom of the River—An Ancient Seal—Sterlings and Flintlocks—Statues—The Golden Candlestick not yet Found.

ROME, November, 1879.

We begin already to know some of the results of the recent excavations in the Tiber. The latest number of the Archæological Bulletin of Rome contains an article from the pen of Signor Carlo Visconti, on a bronze seal or stamp found in the bed of the river near Ripa Grande. It was secreted by a workman and sold to one of the small dealers in antiquities who are always on the alert to avail themselves of such neglect of the guardians. It was however recorded by Commander Fiorelli the superintendent of excavations, and now fully illustrated. It is a round bronze disk seven centimetres in diameter, with a handle on the upper part and an inscription in two [illegible] Visconti [illegible] which consists of the name of a woman in Latin and in Greek.

This "Celia, daughter of Marcellina," lived during the reign of the Antonines, as is argued from the perfect form of the letters, and the seal with her name was used to mark bricks. These seals were in common use among the ancients, and many inscriptions are found upon the bricks of the monuments of Rome. They were more frequently, however, made of some hard wood, the material upon which they were to be used being soft and cold. The rarity of this bronze seal is therefore greater.

"EXCAVATIONS IN THE TIBER."

The complete results of these long-desired excavations are anticipated with curiosity by the learned of all nations. It is believed that treasures of all the centuries of the existence of Rome will be found stratified and imbedded like fossils in the mud. The populace had a saying in the Middle Ages that the "Tiber was lined with bronze;" and the broken statues, the arms, the coins and seals that have already been found there prove that there was truth in their belief. Among the traditions on this subject the most conspicuous is regarding the gold candlestick from the Temple of Solomon, brought to Rome as a trophy by Titus and represented in bass-relief upon his arch in the Via Sacra, which it is said was thrown into the Tiber. What a commotion there would be if the dragse should bring it to light bright as in the ancient days when it adorned the glorious Temple of Jerusalem.

It is not strange that so much is expected from the excavations of the Tiber. Cities of later foundation and inferior importance have gathered important collections of antique objects from the researches made in the beds of the rivers which run through them.

At Lyons, near a column of the bridge over the river, was found a collection of twelve thousand coins.

At Paris the Cluny and the Sevres Museums have each important collections from the bed of the Seine, and the chief marvels of the British Museum are the objects of Anglo-Saxon origin found in the Thames.

The Minerva, a beautiful bronze statue, in the Museum of Turin, was found in the Po. The "Tiber had already yielded, even previous to these researches, as bronze statue called the [illegible] or Castle Saint Angelo and [illegible] by the Pope to Frederick the Great, and the Barberini Faun, now at Munich.

Unfortunately the works on the banks and in the bed of the river were begun by the engineers appointed for that purpose without previous concert with the Archæologists. From this want of union has resulted great confusion and the loss of many valuable small objects which, like the Marcellina seal, were concealed and sold by the workmen. The greater part of these lost articles have, however, been found, and as a commission of nine Archæologists was afterwards appointed, the other excavations will be made with care. But the first inexpert researches proved that the clay bed of the stream is stratified as it were with treasures. First came to light the coins of Pius IX; then those of Gregory XVI; and as the drags descended to the inferior strata, the coins were of remoter date.

The objects were not carried down by the current but remained where they fell, one era above that which preceded it. "The history of Rome and almost of the world" says the Honorable Bucelli, in treating of this subject "is stratified in the bed of the Tiber."

The dyags have injured many marble sculptures in bringing them to the surface. Near the Ponte Sisto a triumphal arch, which had formed one of the sides of the ancient bridge, was found in the water almost in its original form. It was erected in the era of Valentinjano, but the sculptures had belonged to a similar arch of previous date, and had been used again like the beautiful bass-reliefs in the Arch of Constantine, which were taken from the Trajan Forum. The bases of four bronze statues were found but only one of the statues could be recovered, and that was in numerous pieces.

"INUNDATIONS OF THE TIBER."

The inundations of the Tiber have been a source of peril and loss to Rome from time immemorial. It is estimated that every twenty-five years the river god rises from his low bed and stalks into the city. The history of these inundations is known and the record of the height to which the water rose at different periods, may be seen near the Ripetta bridge and also on the Church of the Minerva. The Pantheon, temporarily the tomb of Victor Emanuel, is looked at every rise of the river. The entrance of the Roman Government in Rome was [illegible] last of [illegible] which [illegible] [illegible] city. The first visit of Victor Emanuel to the Capitol of his Kingdom, was during this inundation, when he drove through the Corso as soon as the waters had subsided. The clericals did not fail to say as they usually do when any misfortune occurs, that it was the "finger of God," and a worthy punishment to the Italians for having possessed themselves of Rome.

The British Protectorate Over Syria.

The hopes of the Jews as to the enfranchisement of Syria and Palestine from Turkish oppression and misgovernment have been reawakened by the unexpectedly firm and decisive demand of the British ambassador that the Turkish Government shall effect promised needed reforms in the government of Asia Minor. The Jewish Chronicle says:

"If subjected to rigid tests, it may appear unreasoning that scattered millions of the Jews, inhabiting all climes, speaking all languages, and subject to all forms of government, should yet turn toward the East with the utmost solicitude, and feel for the Holy Land a reverence and affection which centuries of exile are incapable of eradicating. In this, as in some other respects, the Jewish mind is peculiarly constituted. Other races have been expatriated, and have forgotten the land from which they sprung; other races have colonized lands and have founded distinct nationalities, or have only hung on to the parent stem by the slender ligatures of language and custom. It is not so with the Jews. Citizens of all countries they are Jews, and through each and all there runs a sympathetic chord which vibrates to the touch of the skilled player. For us, then, the question of reforms in Asia Minor is one of the deepest interest. Individually we may be content with our surroundings, but neither reason nor the philosophies of the schools can induce us to forget that Asia Minor is the cradle of our race, the home of our religion, and that at some future period it will witness the culminating grandeur of our spiritual mission."

It is not then surprising that the official announcement in 1878 that England had assumed the the Protectorate of the Turkish provinces in Asia should have produced a thrilling sensation amongst the numerous Asiatic Jews who "have," as we are told, [illegible] Jewish Herald recently published a letter from a well-informed correspondent, in which it is said, "Official corruption in Turkey has proceeded to such an extent that the whole body-politic appears to be tainted, and there are depths of iniquity here which are unfathomable." This forcible description of Turkish misrule in Asia Minor is not new. It is language with which the English Government has long been familiar; whilst successive Consuls and Commissioners have reported that nothing human could exceed the abnormal greed and rapacity of the pashas and official classes. "It is not the Sultan who reaps the full benefit of the oppression of his subjects, for only a small proportion of the taxes gathered come into his hands; the sums raised filter through several grades of officials, each reserving for himself what his superior will permit, and a small residue alone reaches the Imperial Treasury at Constantinople."

After waiting more than a year for the execution of promised reforms, the English Government lately commissioned Sir Henry Layard to proceed to Syria and make investigations. What Sir Henry Layard has reported we do not know. On this point Lord Beaconsfield in his Guildhall speech was silent. The energetic action of the British Cabinet on the Porte is, however, sufficient to guide us to the conclusion that Sir Henry Layard found the Asiatic provinces of Turkey much in their old condition, and that there was the danger that the promised reforms would become dead letters unless some extreme pressure was brought to bear on the authorities at Constantinople."

"Every year," says the Jewish Chronicle, "increasing numbers of Jews emigrate to the Holy Land, to live or to die there. Wise reforms properly carried out would, without doubt, change the conditions under which the great mass of our brethren live in the East, and greatly lighten the anxiety and labors and pecuniary responsibilities of the Western Jews. If education were encouraged, stability secured, tenures settled and permanent, it would be less difficult for the Anglo-Jewish Association, the Alliance Israelite, and for other kindred institutions to deal effectually with the complex questions of Jewish education and interests in the East than at present. Apart, then from general principles of humanity, we, as Jews, are directly interested in the carrying out of the reforms in Asia Minor."

The generous eloquence of Lord [illegible] in the English House of Com[illegible] given of the condition of the population in the Northern provinces of the Kingdom of Naples, where fever is epidemic. Of the large districts, in a population of 62,000, the sick amount to 35,000 and the deaths from July to December, 1879, numbered 3,423.

The process of serving is violently resisted in Kilanan, county of Galway, the parish priest leading in the resistance, and caused the chapel bell to be rung to give warning of the approach of the servers.

A dispatch from Cabul announces that small-pox has broken out in that city.

There is no longer any doubt that Prince Bismarck is in a very dangerous condition and that his death within a few days is not improbable.

It has been agreed between Sir Austin Layard, the British Ambassador to Turkey, and the Porte that the Mohammedan Priest, Ahmed Tewfik, shall be removed to an island having a Christian population. The affair is now completely arranged.

THE POCASSET MURDERER.

BOSTON, Mass., January 1.—A flaw has been discovered in the information of the grand jury drawn to indict Charles Freeman, the Pocasset religious fanatic, of murder in the first degree. The case was to come up in December, but it is now doubtful if it is tried before the last of this month, and maybe it will be considerably later.

Nothing is more calculated to quiet the mind in trouble than viewing all things in the hands of God; and that God as my friend.

If books do not make one good or bad, they at least make one better or worse.

"Blessed Bible, how I love it,
As I read its pages o'er;
Every golden thought I cherish,
Words of truth my heart adore.

"Precepts pure and priceless wisdom
I may glean from words of love,
In the Book which God has given,
Telling of the home to come."

"Working Christians are the happy Christians. You never hear the lark sing sitting in its nest; it sings when out on the wing; so if churches get nestled down on easy cushions, satisfied with hearing one or two sermons a week they'll not sing much. No wonder if they are not very happy. Let them go to work for the Master."

How deeply rooted must unbelief be in our hearts, when we are surprised to find our prayers answered, instead of feeling sure they will be so, if they are only offered up in faith, and are in accord with the will of God.

Each thought resentful from thy mind be driven,
And cherish love by sweet forgiveness brought,
Thou soon will need the pitying love of Heaven.
The time,
The time is short.

Where summer winds, aroma-laden, hover,
Companions rest their work forever wrought;
Soon other graves the moss and fern will cover.
The time,
The time is short.

GOD'S PLAN OF YOUR LIFE.

"Never complain of your birth, your employment, your hardships; never fancy you could be something if you only had a different lot and sphere assigned you. God understands his own plan, and he knows what you want a great deal better than you do. The very things you most deprecate as fatal limitations or obstructions, are probably what you most want. What you call hindrances, obstacles, discouragements, are probably God's opportunities; and it is nothing new that the patient should dislike his medicines, or any certain proofs that they are poisons. No; a truce to all such impatience. Choke that envy which groans at your heart, because you are not in the same lot with others; bring down your soul, or rather bring it up to receive God's will, and to do his work, in your lot and sphere, under your cloud of obscurity against your temptation, and there you shall find [illegible] that your [illegible]

POETRY.

No God.

N. S. RICHARDSON.

Is there no God? The white rose made reply,
My spotless robe was woven in the sky.
The bluebird warbled from his shady bower,
My plumage fell from hands that made the flower.

Is there no God? The silvery ocean spray
At the vile question startles in dismay;
And tossing wild against earth's impious clod,
Old ocean thunders, Yes! there is a God!

We publish God! the towering mountains cry;
Jehovah's name is blazoned on the sky;
The darting streamlet and the guided grain,
The lightning gleam, the thunder and the rain;

The dew-drop diamond on the lily's breast,
The tender leaf by every breeze caressed;
The shell, whose pearly bosom ocean tarns,
And seaward bowing to a troop of waves;

The glow of Venus and the glare of Mars,
The tranquil beauty of the lesser stars;
The eagle, soaring in majestic flight,
The morning bursting from the clouds of night;

The child's fond prattle, and the mother's prayer,
Angelic voices floating on the air,
Mind, heart and soul, the ever-restless breath,
And all the myriad mysteries of death.

Beware, ye doubting, disbelieving throng,
Whose sole ambition is to favor wrong;
There is a God; remember while ye can,
"His Spirit will not always strive with man."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I have read a few of your numbers of THE RESTITUTION that I borrowed, so I thought I would send you one dollar to start my paper for the present, and I will send you the other dollar in a few days. I am in the Faith, and there is a large field here in Peoria county, Illinois. There never has been any one that give the people the truth in this county till Brother Geo. W. Foster came in here, and we have had to battle hard for the truth. The field is a large one, and Brother Foster is an old man, and it is hard on him, but I am doing all I can to push the truth forward, but you know it is hard at this age, for they will turn their ears from the truth, for they have followed cunningly devised fables so long it is hard to get them out of the old beresies. There is a big interest started near where I am living, and as soon as we get through we shall go to Peoria city, for there are more infidels in that city than any other in the Union, of its size. I should think seven-tenths of the population of that city are infidels outside of the Catholic church in Peoria. If you have any one near Plymouth, or any one that reads THE RESTITUTION that is a good soldier to battle for the truth, and wants to see some of Illinois, come and help battle for the truth. I will guarantee they shall have enough to eat while they stay near me; but we want a man that can pull down strong walls and make the callings shake, for Peoria has been the home of Robert Ingersoll for a long time, and it wants power to carry the truth forward to the front.

Please find, enclosed, one dollar for your most valuable paper for six months, and I will send the rest of the subscription price in a few days so as to have it one year. I will close for this time. You will hear from me again when we get in Peoria to work.

I remain yours till we meet in the kingdom. SAMUEL BLAKE.

Kramers Station, Ill.

P. S.—Question: If all men die on account of Adam and are raised on account of Christ, will they not be improved on this account, no matter as to when they are raised? S. S.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed, please find $5, to be applied to the cause of truth. Apply it as you think best. It ought to be with deep solemnity that we enter upon the NEW YEAR. Will we see the close of it? Will the dawn of a new age cast its glorious beam o'er this sin-laden earth before another New Year's? Can not our faith discern the faint light in the east of a coming morn, that shall dissipate earth's gloomy night and usher in the golden morn? "Lift up your heads and rejoice, for, behold, your redemption draweth nigh." Already the distant hilltops of Judea's gleam and sparkle in purple and gold, and our weary hearts rejoice at the coming of him "who is our redemption." "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye forth to meet him." "Blessed is the servant that the Master shall find doing his will."

W. J. B. FENNIMORE.

Allen, I.-T.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find postoffice order for five dollars for subscription for 1880 and three dollars for Bro. Pontious' fund to set THE RESTITUTION on it its feet. I was surprised to learn the condition of the paper after all that has been done to keep it on its feet. I fear the brethren and sisters do not prize THE RESTITUTION as I do or they would see to its necessities by paying their subscriptions regular and make some sacrifice. My brethren and sisters, we ought not so to be; let us come to [illegible] we profess to be follow- [illegible] lowly Son of God who suffered on the cross that we might live. Let us make some sacrifice and not let our paper die. It is not using the weed as Bro. Pontious seems to think; the fashions of the day has more to do with it than the weed. I think there is too much litigation on subjects that pertain to no good, the "resurrection" for instance, it had better be dropped and dwell on subjects of practical christianity: we are tending to the tomb and sooner or later must fall. Let us be prepared for that event when Christ who is our life shall appear we may be ready. Oh, Lord, hasten the day, is my prayer. I must close. Oh, if I could have been in Plymouth at the meeting of the Stockholders, but the road is a long one; hope to be able to go some time.

CHRISTINA JAMESON.

Exton, O.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find our remittance for the paper up to January 1, 1880, the balance to be applied on the incoming year, 1880. We wish it great success in its undertakings to build up the cause and kingdom of Christ, and may the Father of light, wisdom and truth, give and impart the same to its managers, patrons, and those who indite, form and matter to its progress, and the salvation and eternal life of the world, if possible.

Yours, as ever, looking for the bridegroom, as methinks the bride is almost, if not quite ready to go into the marriage feast.

EMMA AND ELI STUCKER.

Kalama, Kansas.

Editor Restitution:—I am thankful to you for sending me the dear old paper so long while I am so much in arrears. Business continues to be very dull with me yet; I am in hopes it will brighten up soon so that I can send you some money. I would not blame you to stop sending the paper any more, but I hope you will continue to send it, as I would be very lonely without it. I am highly pleased with your manner of editing the paper, and am sure you have been very patient and tried to do justice to all. If you could only make your little pint cup hold a gallon, of course you could crowd a good many more articles in it. Perhaps I may offer a few thoughts on the Resurrection question some time. It is well to study our lessons thoroughly befor we recite them. I am well pleased with the piece in the last paper taken from the Rainbow. It seems very reasonable and Scriptural. I always did, and do now, hold to a "general resurrection." I hope brotherly love will continue, and no hard feelings be indulged in by anyone. May God bless our editor for the new year, whether it be Bro. Chaplin, or someone else. Dear brothers and sisters, let us watch and be sober, for the end draweth nigh. I expect that 1880 will be an eventful year. Let us get ready for the Master's return.

Your brother in Christ,

C. H. FANNING.

Flint, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—I trust that the year 1880 will find the patrons of THE RESTITUTION still firm in "the faith once delivered to the saints," and uncompromising, yet full to overflowing with that charity which is "the bond of perfectness;" that which "suffereth long and is kind;" that, in short, which is the loveliest grace which can characterize humanity. By it, and by no other grace can we be assimilated to our "heavenly Father," and to Jesus Christ our elder brother. We have been cautioned by the conductors of THE RESTITUTION to avoid controversy, i. e., not disturb those who are constitutionally sensitive. Perhaps this is all well enough, and yet I have yet to learn, of any who have been very keenly sensitive on any subject controverted.

It is certain we do not all "see eye to eye," yet, and we shall not until the Lord shall "bring again Zion." But I rejoice to know (or at least, to believe,) that the writers and many of the readers are well pleased to have all the doctrines or subjects well ventilated, especially when they are, and as they have been, for the last few years, conducted with that charity, which seeks not its own exclusively, but another's good. I trust we have not (many of us, at least,) been so long in the school of Christ without learning something. We may, and, undoubtedly, do regret, that we have not made higher attainments. For myself, I have learned that I know but little, comparatively, of what I ought to know, so that I humbly trust, I am not puffed up with vain glory, or knowledge already acquired. In reading the correspondence, under the heading of the "Letter Drawer," I find many "words fitly spoken," which are "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." A feast, indeed, of fat things. Indeed, I think it is second only to that which will transpire [illegible] that, soon, on the "mountains of Israel."

Of one thing, however, we shall do well to take heed, and that is: not to indulge in emotional exercise, only as it is guided and propelled by that "faith which is the ground of confidence of things hoped for," and that hope which is as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and entereth to that within the veil, where Jesus our forerunner has for us entered.

Charity, to be efficient for our salvation, must be preceded by faith and hope. Without the former, we are taught, "it is impossible to please God," and the latter seems to be inseparable from the former; both imply intelligent worship.

Your brother in Christ, waiting for the establishment of the kingdom,

M. I. LEWIS.

Riverdale, Wis.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar to renew my subscription. In helping to settle up the estate of my deceased husband—and other duties resting upon me—I find myself almost overcharged with the cares of this world, yet I would not forget THE RESTITUTION, for without its weekly visit I would be quite lonely. I would not find fault, nor flatter you, for it seems to me, one needs to have the patience of good old Job to be an editor. We, as a little flock, are doing what we can to spread the truth, and learn more of Him who are long will come and restore to us our loved ones that sleep in Him.

Blessed Jesus, then come quickly,
Wake thy saints that they may sing;
Where, O grave, is now thy victory,
And, O death, where is thy sting?

M. A. BOICE.

Odell Grove, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find five dollars, of which two dollars you will apply on my subscription, two for the paper, to be sent to Mrs. Sarah Westcott, Wolcott, N. Y., and one for the "Free Will Offering." I intend to send for another soon, to be sent to another place. I hope they will be as welcome visitors to those receiving them as they have ever been with me, and I know if they read them carefully together with the Bible at the end of the year they will say they have learned more truth than they ever new in all their lives before. I speak from experience; by reading them I have been led to study the Scriptures myself, and I find there is a great difference in studying for ourselves, and letting some one else study for us, and taking that word for it. There are so many that have a way of spiritualizing away the literal meaning of the Bible; anything they can't make apply just to their creed or rule of faith, why it don't mean what it says! Now let us be diligent that have learned the blessed promises of God; to hold up the banner of light. Supposing we are not gifted in in the way of teaching isn't there something else we can do? we can work and help those that can, and even in our every day life we often meet with some that we don't feel backward even to undertake to teach, for God has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise. 1 Cor. i. 26-29. I myself feel that I am the most incapable of any to do the least bit of good, still I often find myself reasoning with those that are far my superiors in worldly knowledge of which I am willing to be ignorant. We must be as wise as a serpent and as harmless as a dove. I have resolved that what my hands find to do I will do it with my might; I only regret that I can't do more.

I am glad to see so many ready to respond to the call for funds to sustain THE RESTITUTION. I hope more will feel it a duty as well as a privilege to pay a certain amount often in doing something for the work of the Lord. There are so few that understand the Gospel of the kingdom and reign of Christ on the earth, that it behooves us to be about the work. The more I learn the more anxious I feel to have others learn this good news.

I am glad the subject of the "Resurrection" has been dropped to a certain extent. I think too much of that that kind of reading crowded out matters of more value. It would be well enough to put the subject in pamphlet form and each one study and investigate to their satisfaction; as for me, I want to be in the first resurrection for over such the second death hath no power. Such subjects as the "Keys of the Kingdom," by B. Wilson, is the kind of reading I like to give my neighbors to read. I have been in the habit of lending my paper to unbelievers until late I have kept them at home for no other reason only this discussion. We don't want to give them a chance to make light if we can avoid it.

Of course the editor wants to give each correspondent an equal chance to express their wishes; but, wouldn't it be better not to trouble him with it, for a while, at least? Perhaps I may be wrong in feeling as I do about it, but I must say I don't think it is the right subject in the right place. I think there are many of the readers of THE RESTITUTION that will agree with me. There are a few believers in Syracuse who are looking for the return of Christ and the gathering of Israel. We meet every First Day and expound the Scriptures. We can seldom get an outsider to come in. If we had a fine church, with cushioned seats and tall spires, we would have no trouble in getting a crowd at any time. The truth is unpopular as it was in the days of Christ and the apostles. They take to themselves teachers having itching ears. They would not believe though one should rise from the dead; but woe unto them when the King of glory comes to rule the world with a rod of iron, to sit up his kingdom and reign triumphantly forever and ever. Sad, sad day for those that have shook their heads in derision at God's Word, and say, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning." Read 2 Pet. iii. And, remember, the apostles spoke as they were moved by the power of God. These are not the sayings of man now, but let us all, that are of the day, work while the day lasts, for the day is far spent and the night is at hand. God grant that we may at that day be found with our wedding garments on waiting for the bridegroom.

Yours, hoping to gain an entrance at the marriage Supper of the Lamb.

MRS. M. A. FINK.

Syracuse, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:—I have just received a letter from my dear mother. She writes she was buried with Christ in baptism; also two sisters, namely: Martha F. Starkey, aged 38, and Lulie Starkey, aged 16 years, mothers age 40 years. She had formerly been connected with the Campbellites. Two years ago when I visited her she had never heard the truth; she writes she visited my sister that lives at Richill, taking with her some copies of THE RESTITUTION to pursuade her to look into the truth. My dear mother is a lady of superior education and culture which gives us much joy, and some expectations; through her others may be enlightened. For the prophet Daniel says, "They that be wise shall shine as the firmaments and they that turn many to righteousness shall be as the stars, forever and ever." Oh what [illegible] when the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout and voice of an archangel, the dead in Christ will rise first before the living are caught away; so shall we ever be with the Lord.

Your sister in hope of life,

MRS. LOU BUTLER.

Mason, Texas.

Editor Restitution:—Please find enclosed two dollars for RESTITUTION for present year. It would perhaps be wrong were I not to say that the paper under your editorial care I have been greatly pleased with. The "get up" has been generally good, and above all, has been excellent. Every subscriber should at the very least say "thank you." I hope you will be long spared to wield such a wide influence for good as the conducting of this paper affords. We are evidently nearing a crisis in the world's history. All the channels of human thought and action indicate this unmistakably. Great events come like a boom every little while, these stagger those who know not that "he who will come shall come," and whose tread shall be on the dust of empires. The way is being prepared, premonitory omens thicken and soon the desire of all nations will come bringing joy and salvation to those who are looking and waiting for him.

May we all be enabled to hold fast our confidence to the end and be welcomed into his everlasting kingdom

Fraternally yours,

JAMES FORMAN.

The Nursery is a very valuable magazine, and well calculated indeed to fill the place for which it is designed—to supply young readers with pretty pictures, fresh and attractive reading, and poetry adapted to the comprehension of childhood. Published by John L. Shory, 36 Broomfield street, Boston, Mass., at $1.50 a year, or 15 cents for a single copy.

The Western Farmer's Almanac for 1880 is received. It contains, in addition to the usual ephemerides, forecasts of the weather for the entire year, as well as original articles on a variety of practical subjects. The inquisitive farmer will find sterling information regarding stock, fruits and fruit trees, poultry, our new sugar-plants, and many other topics of interest. Better pay four prices for it than receive a quack advertisor gratis. Send 10 cents to John P. Morton & Co., Louisville, Ky. 2t

A Gift to the Cause.

I have just published four thousand copies of a large, handsome, double-column tract, entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom, briefly stated in a series of Bible lessons." A zealous Christian brother in New York donated the cost of publication, and so they are offered to the brethren at twenty-five cents per hundred, with no extra charge for postage. Let all who feel able, send at least twenty-five cents worth of postage stamps and get one hundred copies for distribution, and we cannot estimate the good that may be done. Send orders to

DIED.

SUMMERS—Charlotte Ann Summers, daughter of Jackson and sister Rachael Summers, in Whitley county, Ind., Jan. 2, 1880, of spinal disease, aged twenty-two years, eight months, and twenty-five days.

She was sick only four days, and bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude and died in peace. Lottie, as we called her, was a very pleasant young lady, and to all appearances bid fair for a long life. Her father and mother, sisters and brothers are sorely afflicted at their loss.

The writer was called upon to attend the funeral, which was largely attended, and was requested to speak from 2 Cor. v. 1. Hope good was done.

"When blooming youth is snatched away,
By death's resistless hand,
Our hearts the mournful tribute pay,
Which pity does demand."

RESTITUTION FUND.

ALBION, Fulton Co., Ind., NOV. 29, 1879.

Elder Restitution:—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and insure its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $3.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who can not or will not pay the $3.00, and will they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 60 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $300 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

Amount published previous to this $222 65

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing, I will commence meeting at Rexington on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in the present month. The first and second Sundays in January, 1880, in Edgar county, Ill. The third meeting to Paris. The third and fourth Sundays in January at Burgess corner and at the Cox.

J. B. HAYES.

TO RESTITUTION—Please say to my old brethren that I am located at Dallas, Polk co., Oregon, and I would like to hear from one and all of them.

P. PLUMMER.

The quarterly assembly of the Church of God will, if the Lord will, commence near Brownstown, Warren county, Va., on Saturday night before the second Sunday in February, and will continue over Sunday. All of the one faith as revealed in the Holy Scriptures are respectfully invited to attend, irrespective of differences of opinion on any subject that does not form a feature in the faith once delivered to the saints.

J. N. MORGAN.

Notice,

I would like to have the address of all the brethren in Barton county, Kan., and adjoining counties.

Ingersoll's Lecture on the Mistakes of Moses, at Canton, O., Nov. 19, 1873.

BY M. CRAPSER-ON.

Another mistake of Ingersoll was the presumption that Moses teaches that the sun and moon were created on the fourth literal day versus a geological day. The record reads thus: "And God said let there be lights in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth." Moses does not say that the celestial bodies were created the fourth literal day. [illegible] the testimony of Moses they have always been considered as [illegible] which manifestation with other means, gave the inhabitants of the earth and moon the power of every day in the year. Time of position [illegible] much, and, therefore, cannot be [illegible] It proves that no man living understands that the earth revolves on its axis, rolling up its surface [illegible] to cast in the light of the sun and moon, causing the side of the bodies apparently to travel round the earth every twenty four hours. To language so plain proves the ignorance of Moses or the [illegible] of the earth upon its axis proves the ignorance of Mr. Ingersoll relative to the [illegible] of the Universe, the earth being the standpoint of observation.

Mr. Ingersoll has a right to [illegible] against others an objection which rests with equal force against what I conceive to be true. The solar system results of processes which has been at work for immeasurable ages were presented to Moses in panorama the same as the beautiful picture of the Universe. He simply described the relative position and movement of these sides. Bodies as they would appear to a visual spectator upon earth—and just as all men to-day describe them. I repeat, to a visual spectator the sun moon and stars apparently rise and set; and if the earth should stand still, the sun and moon would apparently stand still also. It is admissible to represent a man as walking if in reality he is [illegible] Just so [illegible] to say in vain, or figuratively moving body. It is admissible to represent the sun and moon as moving instead of the earth revolving upon its axis, then it is quite admissible to represent the sun and moon as standing still. We must abandon the former or admit the latter. In reference to the allegation of the sun and moon apparently having stood still, I would observe, that all that devolves upon a respondent to allege difficulties, is to suppose a hypothesis. I by which the [illegible] section can be reconciled with the [illegible] fically reconciled. This I will do. And be it remembered that this appeal is made to a man and nature. Just accord to the Great Mechanist who created all suns and systems of revolving worlds, the supe wisdom of design to place within or upon a mainspring or a motor, to control the workmanship of his own hands, and bring it to a state of rest without any disastrous consequences ensuing; and all difficulty vanishes like mist before the sun. If I should wish my watch to stand still, I would place my finger upon the balance wheel and command it to stand still, and it would obey. When the design for which it had been stopped should be accomplished, I would raise my finger, and all the machinery would move on, each part performing its legitimate function without destroying the purpose of the whole. Joshua, when he [illegible] Robet would settle the question as to who had the right to rule this planet, the great Creator, or the false gods of the heathen, he [illegible] his eye upon the mainspring which within the earth up its axis and at about noon, causing the sun and moon apparently to stand still until the grand design for which it had been stopped [illegible] accomplished. The book of God has [illegible] glorious [illegible] to light the allied armies of earth. God raised his finger from the great ballroom where earth and it started upon its eternal career without having disturbed the equilibrium of the solar system.

To an infidel, who can see [illegible] dom of design, or intelligent [illegible] in the great machinery of nature, there would be insuperable difficulties to encounter. But to an humble, [illegible] mind who can see perfect wisdom and design brought to [illegible] exception, all difficulties and doubts [illegible] the shadows of night before the risen sun. Scientists, during [illegible] of years [illegible], may report the [illegible] of fossils, believing that the earth is old and that the sun, moon and stars have [illegible] for [illegible] years, but [illegible] with Ingersoll, [illegible] of Moses, [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] section [illegible] reconciled. This I will do. And be it remembered that this appeal is made to a man and nature. TO CORRESPONDENTS.
THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Coming Age—Its Character and Proximity.—No. 4.

J. P. WELTHER.

And after many thousand years of its duration are numbered with the finished epochs, and its evening shadows are lengthening, the regal promise is accomplished, and man steps into being in the image of his Creator and is put in charge of the visible creation. The earth soon smiles in the freshness of its Eden beauty, smiling in its green old age. Adam and Eve walk through the groves of Paradise vocal with all the varieties of feathered songsters. Adam's dominion is peaceful till he violated his law of life, when his dominion terminated. Fallen from his purity, nature, adapted to his obedient state, is not now adapted to his fallen condition. When man is driven out of the bowers of Eden, the earth is cursed to be adapted to men in his lower state. Adam and Eve were now condemned to labor in sorrow, as the soil became unproductive.

No sooner is Paradise lost, than the promise is made of its restitution in a new and seventh age, in which the earth, by fire, shall be melted, purified, and fitted up and adorned as the dwelling place of another Adam with a pure and holy family selected from the choicest members of the family of the first Adam. Time rolls on till the sixteenth century finds this dilapidated earth so full of violence and blood, that God brings upon it a flood of waters, destroying its entire population, one family excepted. Where now is the promise of the restitution? Man swept from the earth, one family alone floating upon the bosom of a devouring ocean.

The waters retire, but the heavens (atmosphere with its countless millions) and the world of living beings have perished. Such are the changes in the earth's atmosphere and in the earth itself that they are "perished." Noah and his family walked forth to re-people the heavens and the earth which are now. Now, and from the flood, have been enunciated two promises—a Restitution and a conflagration. Both promises are heard, as revolutions follow each other. The promised Restitution assumes to Abraham the form of a land, then of a kingdom, but the earth comes under the domination of wicked nations, who oppressed the heirs of the promise. Such empires have been Babylon, Medo, Persia, Greece and Rome. Under the fourth monarchy, one is born that assumed to be the Prince of the new and promised age. But he was crucified and his disciples persecuted and slain. Still the proclamations of a Restitution and the dissolution of all things by fire continue. Centuries pass, seasons continue; the earth and its surroundings give no special signs of its physical catastrophe, when the cry is made that the Prince of the coming age is about to return, to raise the dead and introduce the preliminary movements of the long promised Restitution. Six thousand years since the original promise of a new age, and no evidence of its accomplishment. It rests on the veracity and power of Jehova. We hear again the words of the scoffers. All things continue as they were since the beginning of the creation. The Lord is slack concerning his promise. The earth is immutably fixed, its melting is an impossibility!

God originally constructed the earth, shaped, and built up its ages, increased its size, and adapted it to the various types of life, during the five ages of unknown duration; and will he fail to carry out his promise of the crowning age? or shall an age of moral principles be earth's drowning epoch? The elements of the conflagration are in the earth itself. Let us see what materials are kept in store. Some well-known chemical changes, would be all that is required for the promised catastrophe.

According to Peter and Paul, the consuming fires commence in the atmosphere (heavens), and from the atmosphere the fires are communicated to the combustible element on and within the earth, the earth being enveloped in such an intense burning, melts after the manner of hillocks by streams of burning lava. What chemical change in the atmosphere and in the water is required to produce such a conflagration? Simply their decomposition. Air is a chemical compound of two elements, one (oxygen) which is the supporter of combustion, the simple suspension of the law of chemical attraction, would suddenly envelop the earth with a flame forty-four miles deep, that burning oxygen uniting with the hydrogen of decomposed water on the earth and in the air, would produce heat sufficiently intense to melt the most refractory metals, the earth then would be melted with fervent heat. Not annihilated, but melted, since heat only melts and dissipates. Jehovah, then to produce the results, would be required to suspend one simple law, called chemical attraction. As a natural law is the mode of God's continued action, he would be required to suspend his acting power, in the two compound elements, air and water; and the results would follow.

Having fully known that Peter's description of the conflagration is truly literal, and, consequently, the new creation that takes its place, we design to establish the identity of the new earth and the old.

1. It is called a Restitution, which would not be true, if it be formed of new materials; but if the old is restored and refurnished, then it is properly named.

2. The old earth is not annihilated, since fire can only melt and dissipate masses, and the earth is here said, simply to be melted, the works only being those of man, are utterly burned.

3. It is made for the abode of "righteousness," (not the abstract principle, but persons having that element).

4. Those righteous persons are evidently a selection from the family of the first Adam since the faithful of the human family only could be called righteous.

5. The promise, made first to Christ as the second Adam, then to Abraham and his seed by faith, requires the earth to be their future and endless abode; and that the earth be so changed as to be adopted to that highest type of life.

Let us trace that promise in its progressive development. Peter says: "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," 2 Pet. iii. 13. This promise, under the title of the "new heavens and a new earth" is found only in Isa. lxv. 17 and lxvi. 22. But those passages simply give an explanatory name to a promise uttered many centuries before, to which we direct attention.

"And the Lord appeared to Abram, and said, to thy seed will I give this land." Chap. xii. 7. A land is promised to a seed. The seed is Christ. Gal. iii. 16. The promise, being to a holy seed, is unconditional. All who are Christ's are "joint-heirs." The promise, therefore, can be repeated to any joint heir. The heir, Christ did not receive the land promised, neither while here did he claim any. It is very evident, then, that the promise included a land in another state, beyond his resurrection.

In the second enunciation of the promise Abram is included. "To thee (Abram) and to thy seed (Christ) forever." Gen. viii. 15. It is plain that Abram understood the land to be in the immortal state since it was an eternal possession. Abram claimed no land in Canaan by virtue of this promise. "He looked for the city having the foundations whose maker and ruler is the God." Heb. xi. 10; xii. 22; Gal. xiv. 26; Rev. iii. 12; xxi. 2. The New Jerusalem which seems to belong to the new earth. Still, the words of the promise require the land of Canaan to be the typical land, and, consequently, the anti-typical land and city must be identified with this, though it be in the new earth.

Isaac and Jacob are joint-heirs with Abraham and Christ. Of the twelve places where the promise is repeated, a land is promised in all, first, to Christ as the seed, then to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as joint-heirs—the land to be an everlasting possession. These all died, not having received the accomplishment of God's oath, and must, therefore, receive it in the resurrection.

In the days of David, the promise assumes the form of a mighty kingdom erected on the territory—which kingdom was to be established by one of David's sons (the Christ). 2 Sam. vii. 12; xiii. 10, and Luke i. 32, (see Psa. ii. 8 and lxxii. 7, 8). While here, he established no kingdom, but went into a far country to receive the kingdom after finishing the office of high-priest and return in his kingdom, (see Dan. vii. 14,) clearly demonstrating the earth to be the location, since it is "under the whole heavens."

Let us now hasten to view the promise, named by Peter, through the telescope of the prophets. Through it we shall see the King (his seed) in his beauty, and his kingdom in all its elementary grandeur, located on the new earth, as the great and holy mountain. Dan. ii. 35, 40. Omitting Isa. ii. 2-4, xi. 4-10, and Isa. xxv. 8, explained, 1 Cor. xv. 51-54, allow us to dwell on Isa. lxv. 17. "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth." Isa. lxvi. 22. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me."

The land promised to the seed (Christ) and the joint heirs, has here another name—"new earth." For, since Peter refers to some particular promise in the Old Testament, (as the new was not then in existence,) which includes a land, and that is the only one thus named, we are forced to the above conclusion.

Ezekiel sees the morning, and the glories of the noon-day of Messiah's age—a river, trees of life, a city, and other surroundings of the earth in its bridal vesture.

Daniel has a view of the same, as a mountain, filling the whole earth; and as a kingdom "under the whole heavens." Its universality, and perpetuity are fully declared; so also, is the location of the reign.

Christ's model prayer fixes the location on earth, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth." The same idea is taught in the parable of the Nobleman that went into a far country to receive for himself a king and to return. Luke xix. 12. So likewise in Luke xx. 34-36. Peter calls the coming age in Acts iii. 21, the restitution, and clearly shows that the earth, cursed by the fall, is the location of the restitution.

God promises to the heir and joint-heirs, a land as an everlasting possession—and gradually develops—that promise, till the seed comes and is rejected; then his return—in his kingdom's promised—to restore all things. This is truly the promise of the Bible. Has that promise been accomplished? The hope of its fulfillment is the blessed gospel hope, which Paul and all holy men anticipate and desire.

Irenæus says: "It is fitting that the just, rising at the appearing of God, should, in the renewed state, receive the promised inheritance which God covenanted to our fathers, and should reign in it; and as God promised him (Abraham) the inheritance of the earth, and he received it not during his life, it is necessary that he should receive it, together with his seed; that is, with such of them as fear God and believe in him, in the resurrection of the just.

For, as neither Abraham nor his seed—that is, those who are justified by faith—had enjoyed any inheritance in it "they will undoubtedly receive it at the resurrection of the just." "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." He quotes to this effect. Isa. xxvi. 19; vi. 11; xxx. 26, 29; xxxi. 9; xxxii. 1; liv. 11-13; lviii. 14; lxv. 17-28; Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 14; Jer. xxv. 7, 8; xxxi. 10-15; Dan. vii. 27; Luke xii. 27, 30.

Such will be sufficient to establish the identity of the new heavens and the new earth, with this earth made new. Peter describes two states of the earth in such language as to authorize the belief that he understood the third to refer to this also, viz.: 1. Heavens and earth of the flood. 2. Heavens and the earth which are now. 3. [illegible]

The Original, Irreconcilable Enmity between the Seed of the Woman and that of the Serpent.

"And the Lord God said . . . . I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed." Gen. iii. 14, 15.

The doctrine here asserted has been demonstrated truth by the conflict of ages. Between these two classes there has been mortal enmity. The reader is referred to the context and general subject as it reaches through the Bible from Gen. iii. to Rev. xii 17; xx. 3. "The Dragon (in the spirit of Cain killing Abel,) was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed which keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus." This war was relentless and deadly from the first. Cain killed his brother because of this enmity against him, as a righteous or godly man. 1 John iii. 12. There has been no truce in this conflict, except in appearance, while the Cain-class may have been waiting opportunity to wage their war to the extermination of the seed of promise.

The grand stages in the conflict have made and marked the leading crises in the history of our race; and there can be no real rest or peace till Babylon, the beast and false prophet, the organized forces of the old serpent, shall have been destroyed, and he himself bound in the abyss. Rev. xviii. to xx.

The sum of human affairs centers in the history of this unceasing and still unabated enmity. Now, instead of a prolonged fusillade to make a show of the force of a whole broadside argument, allow me to state that this uncompromising enmity has been commensurate with the curse of briars and thorns, with woman's augmented sorrow in her suffering sphere, and with Adam's race drudging to get the earth's reluctant harvests all through the world's great week of toil and sweat—of sin and disappointment and death—of war and pestilence and famine and earthquake, which is the prelude to the final catastrophe of judgment that is to "shake not the earth only but also the heavens." Then those things wrought of God in Christ that cannot be shaken, will remain, the trophies of his triumphant conquest over the enemy—over death and him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and thence on he will give the world its great and notable day—the sabbath—the restitution of all things spoken. Acts ii. 20; iii. 19-21; Heb. xii. 18, 20; Rev. xix. to xxi.

These portions of prophecy, have become, thus far, demonstrated truth, by their terrible realities throughout our world's sad history. But the evidence of this unyielding enmity between the two classes, is, if possible, still more signal, because the mighty power of God has shown out in all the grand crisis of earth. Then "the seed of evil doers" has been as tow, and stubble and thorns and chaff before fire. Gen. vii. 6-23; xix. 24; Isa. i. 31. At the deluge and the doom of Sodom—at the overthrow of Pharaoh and his hosts—at the fiery judgment on Korah and his company, (Num. xvi. 24-35,) and on the Jews and Jerusalem. This profound subject will culminate only at "the harvest of the Gospel age." Matt. xiii. 39-49. The tares are then all to be burned, while the righteous will shine as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

The rulers of this world have tried to pluck up the tares, but in every trial they have mistaken, and pulled at the wheat. It remains then for the righteous Judge to decide.

My aim is to aid some who seem indeed to be scattered in every society, to get a definite view of the origin of evil—its general range through time, and the ultimate victory and reign of the righteous—the Lord, Christ, and those embraced in his high and holy calling. Gal. iii. 26-29; Dan. vii. 18; Luke xii. 32.

Most people fail to see that God recognizes these two classes—the seed of the woman and that of the serpent—while time reaches on to the judgment of the great day, and victory crowns the right. Psa. lxxxii. 16-20. There has been no judgment crisis in which God, with his "called and chosen and faithful" have "looked back" to recover those who had perished and been "blotted out." Gen. vi. 7; vii. 4, 23. (Hebrew and margin chap. vii. 4.) Aaron held his peace at the doom of Nadab and Abihu. Their brethren did "not uncover their heads, lest they too should die." Lev. x. 1-6; Deut. xix. 13; xxi. 9.

Dear blessed brethren, let us fear God, "justify God, for his way is perfect;" and to him we must give account. Scores within my sphere have indulged a theoretic spirit in "looking back" to recover the objects of Divine judgment, as if the Judge of all the earth had not done or would not do right. If you could undo God's righteous judgment, you would unhinge heaven and earth. Beware.

JOHN.

The Victory.

But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Cor.

Allusion is made to a literal deliverance from the grave. For as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive. The all who die in Adam does not include those who are alive and are changed in a moment when the Lord comes. Nor does it imbrace the wicked who are remaining alive at that time. The all who are made alive in Christ are the all who die in Adam. But we shall all be changed. The all here evidently includes more than the all who die in Adam. But the nature of the change forbids any application to the whole race and confines it to those that are Christ's at his coming. Incorruptibility, glory, honor, immortality and victory is affirmed of the all who die in Adam. Of the all made alive in Christ, and of the all changed at his coming. Hence the resurrection of the dead is special and secures to all its subjects an equality with the angels in that they can die no more. It is glad tidings to all the righteous as it opens the door to a blessed dwelling kingdom; and to all the glory to be revealed in Christ. All the subjects of this resurrection are changed into the image of the Glorified Redeemer. O give us part in the first resurrection. Amen. A. B. WINGE.

BREVITIES.

The British Museum has acquired about 1,000 more tablets and fragments of inscribed terracotta documents from Babylon. Among them is a tablet of Samas-irba, a Babylonian monarch hitherto unknown, who probably lived about the time of Bardes, and was one of the intermediate rulers between Cambyses and Darius, B. C. 518.

Paris has now over nine miles of tubing laid down under the main thoroughfares for the purpose of unifying the time of all the public clocks and setting them all by observatory time. These pneumatic clocks will also be placed in private houses, and in future the time of day will be supplied just like gas and water.

DIPHTHERITIES IN RUSSIA.

The ravages of diphtheritics in Russia have been truly horrible. Originating in Bessarabia, this terrible disease has laid its grip epidemically upon thirteen of the Government districts, and in the Caucasus alone no less than 40,000 children have been slain by it.

AGE OF CLOCKS.

The water-clock was introduced at Rome about 158 B. C, and toothed wheels were applied to them about 140 B. C. Pacificus, archdeacon of Genoa, invented a clock in the ninth century, and clocks moved by wheels and weights began to be introduced into monasteries of Europe about the eleventh century. It does not appear that Europe is entitled to the honor of the invention, but that it is rather to be ascribed to the Saracens. Watches were used in the reign of Henry VIII. of England. Dante was the first author who mentions a clock that struck the hour; he was born in 1265, and died in 1321—so that striking clocks could not have been very uncommon in Italy at the latter end of the thirteenth century or the beginning of the fourteenth. But the use of clocks was not confined to Italy at this period; for there was an artist in England about the same time who furnished the famous clock-house near Westminister Hall with a clock to be heard by the courts of law out of a fine imposed on the chief justice of the King's Bench, in 1288.

The oldest paper of uninterrupted publication in this country is the Hartford Courant, which has already attained the hoary age of 116 years. In regard to last birthday it plaintively says: "We believe that, with the already-announced death of a New Hampshire paper recently, at the age of 110, we are left in a condition of absolute isolation. The last of our early contemporaries has gone."

FAMINE.

William Redfield Stocking, of Wisconsin, Me., publishes a letter from the pastor of an evangelical church in Asia, who says: "If these days stretch out more than four or five months, the year of Hamador, where famine in Persia raged so fiercely in 1870-71, will be repeated in Bohtan and Koordistan, and many hundreds will die from starvation." Mr. Stocking says that all the civilized world is looking at the distress in Ireland, and the mighty government of England is being aroused to come to the relief of her own people, but a few thousands of Christians and Moslems in Persia and Koordistan might all die of starvation and the world would hardly know it, were it not for the American missionaries.

Mr. Lawrence Oliphant tells the Constantinople correspondent of the London Jewish Chronicle that, with the unofficial approval of Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury, he has laid before the Sublime Porte a scheme for colonizing the fertile and unoccupied tract of land lying to the east of the Jordan now sparsely inhabited by tribes of nomad Arabs. This tract includes the ancient land of Gideon, a part of the plains of Moab, and the lofty and well timbered mountains of Gilead. The only revenue the Turkish government now derives from it is the small sheep tax paid by the Arabs. Mr. Oliphant's plan is to form a Turkish company for the purpose of colonizing this tract with Jews (though Moslem refugees from Bulgaria and Roumelia will be made welcome), who will become subjects of Turky. It also includes the building of a railroad to connect the colony with the seaboard.

THE PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

These two amazing documents (some anti-Jewish utterances) have just been supplemented by a third which summarily disposes of the Jews who have settled down in St. Petersburg, Moscow, and other large cities of "Great Russia." Some ten years ago an Imperial ukase was promulgated granting permission to such Hebrews. Russian subjects, as had acquired an educational diploma, or were members of a trading or handicraft guild, to establish themselves and fix their domiciles in the old and new Russian capitals, as well as in all the so-called "Home Governments" of the Muscovite Empire. Under this ukase a large number of well-to-do and a tolerable sprinkling of wealthy Jews set up their shops and counting-houses, exchange offices and banks in the chief commercial centers and trading emporia of Russia proper. By the latest anti-Jewish ordinance, bearing the Minister of the Interior's signature, all these financiers, merchants, tradesmen and artisans are forbidden to sojourn any longer in the towns wherein they have established their respective businesses—a prohibition practically equivalent to a sentence of absolute banishment. Such are the measures adopted for the persecution of intelligent, industrious people, at once loyal subjects and regular tax-payers, by a Power which, not three years ago, declared war upon and invaded Turkey "in the name of civilization." Governmental and Panslavistic organs in St. Petersburg have recently raised a cry against the Russian Jews, upon the pretext that they have taken an active part in the Nihilistic movement. As, however, Jews in other countries never conspire against the powers that be, but devote their faculties and energies to inoffensive and profitable pursuits, we see no reason to believe that the Russian Jews constitute a solitary exception to the rule exhibited by the rest of the race all over the world. A Russian proverb avers that "any stick is good enough to beat a dog with;" and certainly it would appear that any pretext is good enough, in Russia, at least, to justify the persecution of the Jews.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JAN. 28, 1880.

THE protest against any more articles on the non-resurrection of the wicked, comes from so many of our subscribers, and in such terms of disapprobation, that we conclude not to insert several articles that we have received from different parties on that subject pro and con. We had intended to write several articles on the resurrection of the "Orders" but forbear in compliance with the wishes of our friends. Let it go into book form.

WE clip the following from the last New York Weekly Witness. A day is near that will try the infidel's foundation. The true Christian can well afford to wait the divine vindication of the Bible which will soon be rendered by the Sovereign of the Universe:

LETTER FROM PRIVATE DALZELL.

To the Editor of the Witness:

The great American infidel, Colonel Bob. Ingersoll, at Zanesville, Ohio, where he had lectured recently, said in the presence of Dr. Bell, Judge Frazier, Mr. Southers and other gentlemen of great prominence there, "I have made more money out of my damned folly than I ever made in all my life by more serious and useful labors."

Is this not a verification of the old Scriptural saying: "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." I am responsible for the entire truth and accuracy of this statement.

PRIVATE DALZELL.

CALDWELL, O., Jan. 9, 1880.

WE have just printed an edition of the tract entitled "A Letter to a Friend." This is a pamphlet worthy of the most extensive circulation. It is one of the clearest and plainest exhibits of important truths in a small compass with which we are acquainted; and therefore the best calculated to hand out to honest inquirers asking what to believe in order to become obedient followers of the Redeemer. Our edition ought to be exhausted at once. Send for five or ten copies and circulate among friends and all anxious to know the gospel faith. Price ten cents a copy. We give the preface written by the original editor and publisher which is retained in the pamphlet:

The following letter was written a few months before the death of the lamented Authoress, Mrs. C. C. Woodruff, of Elizabeth City, N. J. It was, (as its title imports) written to a friend, with whom, for years, she had been on terms of close intimacy. To such a friend, of course, she would pen her thoughts just as they passed through her mind. She never dreamed however, that any other eyes than those of her friend's would see it. The reader must, therefore, accept this as an apology for any inaccuracies of style or grammar; or for any want of order which may be discovered in its perusal.

After the writer's death, it was thought advisable by her friends, to give the letter wider publicity, on account of the many important truths it contained; consequently, after obtaining the consent of her husband, Bro. J. O. Woodruff, an edition was issued, and sold. Since then numerous editions have been printed, and many thousands of copies have been scattered and read by honest inquirers after truth. It has proved to be a blessing to many, and we doubt not has won for our beloved sister many additional gems to her crown of glory, in the shape of obedient believers of the Gospel of salvation. That it may still be the means of enlightening the understanding, and converting the hearts of thousands more, is the sincere wish of THE EDITOR.

SELECTIONS.

[Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.]

The Tribulations of Scripture.

It will be quite apparent to the careful reader of the New Testament that our Lord and his Apostles speaks of several perfectly distinct "tribulations;" the confounding of which has been the occasion of not a little perplexity and confusion in many minds. We can, for ourselves clearly distinguish three tribulations as referred to in the New Testament, and to point out wherein these differ, either in time or character, is our object in the following paper.

I. In the first place, then, we find both the Lord Jesus Christ and the Apostles Paul and John referring to what we shall take leave to call:

THE TRIBULATION OF THE CHURCH.

Of this our Lord himself speaks when he says, "These things I have spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world" (John xvi. 33). And again, when, in answer to the statement of Peter, as the spokesman of the Apostolic band, "Lo, we have left all, and have followed Thee," he replied in these remarkable words: "Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for My sake and the Gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions" (Mark x. 28-30).

To which words of the Lord Jesus it is probable that Paul referred when he exhorted the disciples at Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch to continue in the faith, reminding them that "we must, through much tribulation, enter into the kingdom of God" (Acts xiv. 22). While John subscribes himself to the seven churches in Asia as their "brother and companion (or fellow-partaker) in the tribulation and kingdom and endurance in Jesus Christ" (Rev. i. 9).

This, "the tribulation in Jesus," or in other words, the Church's tribulation, is commensurate with her whole earthly existence. Its sources are obvious and constant. Consciousness of her own failure, the latent when not overt hostility of the world, the malignity of Satan and his hosts, and the gracious educative discipline of her divine Husband and Lord: these are ever more or less in operation, and serve to make the pathway of the church one of suffering and tribulation from her Pentecostal birthday to the time of her gathering together in the presence of her returning Lord, at the sounding of the last trumpet.

Nevertheless there have, doubtless, been special seasons in the history of the Church, when she has been called upon to endure tribulation of unwonted severity, when the furnace has been heated seven times more than it is wont to be heated, as when it is said to the church in Smyrna, "Ye shall have tribulation ten days" (Rev. ii. 10); supposed by some to have reference to the ten great Pagan persecutions through which the early church had to pass.

II. Of this tribulation of the church it is not our intention to speak particularly at present; and therefore, having thus briefly indicated its separate and special character, we may at once proceed to notice in the second place the tribulation of Israel,

This was most distinctly and emphatically predicted by the Lord Jesus in what is called "The Prophecy on the Mount," recorded in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters of the gospel according to Matthew, and also, more succinctly, in the thirteenth chapter of the gospel according to Mark, and the twenty-first chapter of the gospel according to Luke. In the first of these narratives, having referred to the "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place;" a prediction which certainly received, at least, an inchoate fulfillment in the planting of the standards of the Roman legions—the eagles upon which were objects of idolatrous worship to the Roman soldiers—in the lines of the besieging army under Vespasian, and their subsequent setting up on the site of the Temple after the taking of Jerusalem by Titus; our Lord who gives a warning to "them that are in Jerusalem to flee to the mountains;" a warning which we know the Jewish Christians actually obeyed by fleeing to Pella, a town on the northern boundary of Perea.

He then proceeds: "For there shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened" (Matt. xxiv. 15-22). Now the parallel passage in St. Luke's gospel—for that it is a parallel passage and a chronological parallel the most able commentators are now pretty well agreed—reads thus:

"And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies (—"When ye shall see the abomination of desolation"), then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Luke xxi. 20-24.

Here we are plainly taught that the period of Israel's tribulation extends from the events which led to and accompanied the destruction of Jerusalem to the close of the present Gentile dispensation. Nor is there any real contradiction or even inconsistency between the prophecy as recorded by the Evangelist Matthew and the Evangelist Luke. The tribulation of Israel commences and ends in a terrible crisis.

The commencing crisis was the siege and destruction of Jerusalem, accompanied by all the appalling sufferings of the Jewish people, of which their historian Josephus has left us so ghastly a narrative; and the closing final crisis is that which they have yet to endure under the last personal Antichrist. These two crises in their main features bear a striking resemblance to each other, and they alone seem to be referred to by Matthew. Luke, however, shows us that they are only the beginning and ending of one long period of tribulation, extending over many centuries of more or less severe suffering to be endured by the Jewish people during their dispersion among the Gentiles.

This interpretation of the narratives of the three Synoptists enables us to effect a substantial harmony between them, without having recourse to the arbitrary and unwarrantable assumption that while Luke describes only the events connected with the destruction of Jerusalem; Matthew, on the contrary, refers only to events to take place at the close of this dispensation.

Mark, it is immediately after and in obvious connection with the announcement that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," that Luke refers to the abnormal celestial phenomena which are to indicate the imminent "coming of the Son of Man with power and great glory." And surely it is difficult to doubt that the time, as well as the events themselves, are identical with those spoken of by Matthew, when he says: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light" (Matt. xxiv. 29-31.)

The point we desire clearly to bring out is this: Luke, as all admit, speaks of the destruction of Jerusalem as the days of Divine vengeance and wrath, to terminate only with the times of the Gentiles, and to be immediately followed by the predicted signs in the heavens, and the coming of the Son of Man. Matthew tells us that "Immediately after the tribulation of those days," these signs are to appear, and the coming of Christ is to take place.

But when he speaks of "those days," to what days does he allude? What days have been previously spoken of? Plainly, days commencing with the destruction of Jerusalem, and which must continue their course to the end of the present age, since they are to be followed "immediately" by its closing events. Therefore, according to both Matthew and Luke, the tribulation of Israel has already extended over more than eighteen centuries, and in this sense, as well as in that of the severity of its crisis, it may truly be called "a great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be."

The attempt, which has not unfrequently been made, to eliminate from St. Matthew's prophecy all allusion to the destruction of Jerusalem, seems to us absolutely hopeless. The occasion of the whole discourse was, as we learn from the commencement of the chapter, the disciples drawing Christ's attention to the massive strength and grandeur of the Temple, and His exciting their profound astonishment by His startling reply: "See you not all these things? Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." Revolving these strange tidings in their troubled minds, they on the first opportunity ask Him, "Tell us when shall these things be?" By "these things" obviously meaning "these things respecting the destruction of our glorious Temple." Is it possible to suppose, then, that in the discourse which the Lord thereupon delivers, He actually gives no answer, does not, in fact, refer to their special inquiry? Would not this be as though having selected one text, He preached His sermon from another altogether different?

III. The third tribulation, to which we may now proceed to refer, is distinguished from all other tribulations in the same way, and by the same inspired writer, the Apostle John, as the last personal Antichrist is distinguished from all preceding manifestations of the "Mystery of Iniquity;" namely, by the use, in the original, of the definite article. In his first epistle, the beloved disciple writes: "He is the Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son" (ii. 22); and in like manner in the book of Revelation (vii. 14) he speaks of the great tribulation; or, as it is literally, "the tribulation, the great one, now this tribulation though intimately connected with the tribulation of Israel, of which we have just spoken; being, as we apprehend, so far as Israel is concerned, identical with its closing crisis, will at the same time by no means be confined to Israel; on the contrary, it will not only embrace the then existing ten kingdoms of the Roman world, but spread the wings of its terror over the whole earth. It will be the darkest hour in this world's dark history, as it will be the last before the dawn.

In reference to the Jews, Daniel speaks of it as "a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people (the Jewish remnant) shall be delivered, every one found written in the book." (Dan. xii. 1). Jeremiah says of it: "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it. It is even the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it" (Jer. xxx. 7).

As regards apostate Christendom, this last great tribulation will be the period of Antichrist's tyrannical reign of three and a half years—forming the latter half of Daniel's seventieth week—concerning which we read in Revelation xiii. The dragon gave to him (the beast) his power, and his seat and great authority."

Again, regarding the false prophet who is to exercise all the power of the first beast before him, or in his presence, it is said: "And it was given him to give breath unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed" (Rev. xiii.). Hence the "great multitude whom no man can number" who, in the seventh chapter, are said to "come out of the great tribulation," are "out of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues,"—testifying to the extents of Antichrist's persecutions, akin to the Gentile church of Philadelphia, the gracious promise is given: "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from (or, out of the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth" (Rev. iii. 10).

We see, then, that the last or "great tribulation" differs from all others, not only in intensity, but extent. Other periods of Divine judgment have affected special classes of mankind, and particular nations, but this shall darken into a very noon of night over all the earth; the Gentile and the Jew, the rich as well as the poor, the righteous and the wicked, all will have to drink of that awful cup, in which will be mingled the fullness of God's wrath and Satan's rage.

Reader, ere we close these remarks let us ask ourselves this solemn question—supposing, as, indeed, there is much to lead us to apprehend, the awful hour of which we have been speaking to be even now near at hand, how will it be with us? Remember, before the flood came Noah and his family were taken into the Ark. Before Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed Lot had escaped to Zoar. And, in like manner, ere the "last and direst storm" bursts upon the world, Christ's ready and waiting saints will have been caught up to be with Him for ever. "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man" (Luke xxi. 36).—Wm. Maude.

The Approaching End of the Age.

Without being selfish, we rejoice and must rejoice for own sakes in the prospect of the near approach of the end of the age, notwithstanding its accompanying judgments.

For whatever the exact portion it may bring to others, whatever its immediate and precise effect on Israel, on Christendom, and on the heathen nations of the earth,—and there may be room for some doubts and differences of opinion as to these,—there can be no question whatever as to the portion it brings to the true church and to each individual Christian. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," the dead in Christ shall rise, and the living "in Christ be changed, the corruptible put on incorruption, and the mortal immortality, when the Lord Himself descends from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God; we shall be caught up together in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we be ever with the Lord. We shall see Him, and be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is; we shall go in clad in pure linen, clean and white to the marriage supper of the Lamb; we shall, as his blood-bought bride, sit with Him on his throne, and share his glory, according to his word, "the glory which thou hast given me, I have given them."

Simple, clear, abundant, and unmistakable are the predictions with reference to our portion at the coming of the Lord. "It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to those that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on those that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when He shall come to be glorified in His saints, and admired in all them that believe in that day." 2 Thess. i. 6-10.

Rest! that is to be one feature of our portion, rest with Christ, rest with the saints and martyrs that are gone before. Rest from conflict with the world, the flesh and the devil; rest from the life and walk of faith, in the more glorious life and walk of sight, for we shall behold his face and see Him, whom not having seen we love; rest of heart in love's fruition, to complete and eternal union with our Lord,—the marriage of the Lamb; rest of mind, in perfect knowledge, for then shall we know, even as also we are known; rest from the burden of this body of humiliation, rest from laboring in vain, and spending our strength for naught, rest from all care and fear, from all strife, and all pain and sorrow; and from the heartache produced by the daily sights and sounds of ungodliness. The day of Christ shall bring rest to the weary! Nor rest only, but fulness of joy, and pleasures forever more! The joy of seeing Him glorified and acknowledged by all, and the joy of perfect holiness, the joy of possessing a new and incorruptible spiritual body in which to serve Him as we cannot do here, and to enjoy his glory, as would now be impossible. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; but it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him for we shall see Him, as He is." Ours shall be the joy, not only of being like Him ourselves, but of beholding all those we love like Him also also—the joy of seeing eye to eye, and of having every feeling in perfect unison, with all the children of God, the joy of meeting the saints of other days, the patriarchs and prophets and apostles, and the noble army of martyrs, of seeing, crowned with crowns of life, those who loved not their lives to the death—the joy of unhindered communion and worship, the joy of perpetual and perfect service. And all these joys sweetened by the assurance that they are ours forever, that we shall go no more out from the temple of the immediate presence of God, that we are to be for ever with the Lord!

Such's millennium is to end, like all previous dispensations, in apostacy and judgment; but to the risen saints no change, no apostacy can ever come. Christ is their life; because He lives, they live also, in Him and with Him indissolubly and eternally one. Their eternal state begins at his epiphany at the Second Advent for which we wait. Men and brethren, are these things so? Have we a hope thus full of glory, and does our hope draw nigh, yea very nigh? "What manner of persons then ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" Ought not we to be persons filled with faith, even as the world is filled with scepticism? Ought we not to be moved with fear for the ungodly around us, and burning with earnest zeal for their salvation? If the day of Christ be so near, how should we employ the brief remaining interval? Many a task which it might have been wise and well to undertake in the earlier days of the dispensation, would be sadly out of place now.

This is no time for controversies about ecclesiastical organizations and obstruse questions of doctrine. To proclaim far and wide throughout the earth the everlasting gospel before it is too late; to lay hold of men and women and pull them out of Sodom ere the fire from heaven fall; to cry aloud as regards Babylon, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues;" to spend and be spent in seeking to rescue the perishing, this is the work that becomes us. To warn the world that the sword of destruction is coming, to explain to men that the long-suffering of God is for salvation, and that it is nearly over, and to live as though we believed these things—this is our plain duty.

When the destruction of Jerusalem, and the ruin of Palestine were approaching, when fearful judgments were on the eve of being poured forth on the Jewish nation, our Lord forewarned his disciples against laying up treasures for themselves upon the earth. He counselled and commanded them to lodge whatever treasures they had beyond the spoiler's reach. What the position of these early Christians in Palestine was such is our position now. The judgment of God is at hand; destruction is about to break forth upon Christendom. In the coming conflagration, the church and her earthly possessions shall be parted. What a burning up of hoarded wealth shall take place then! Let us be warned in time. Let us make haste to lay out all our buried talents in Christ's service instead of laying them up for condemnation and confusion of face. Let none of us imitate an unbelieving and selfish world. Oh, the obstinate folly of those who spend all their strength in gathering worthless fuel for the flames of that great day! Let every Christian bring forth his hidden treasures, if he has any, and use them as they are most needed, without delay, lest that day should come upon us as a thief, and our wealth become a witness against us. There is a deadly famine in the world. Men are perishing in every land for lack of that which we possess. We have, and they have not, the gospel. We have, and they have not, eternal life. Let us expend our means and lives in taking to them, or sending to them, that which has saved our souls, that we may be clear from the blood of all men, and by all means save some. Love to men and love to God alike demand it, and the example of an impoverished and crucified Redeemer points us to this path. Behold the footprints of Jesus! Let us trace and tread them till he comes! How much there is to be done for a dying world! How little time in which to do it! Let us up and be doing. It is the evening of this dispensation. The harvest—alas, how little is reaped—is red with the glow of the setting sun. Who will bring in these waiting sheaves? Let us reap while the light lasts. Bring in these golden sheaves! Now, or never, bring them in! Brethren, let us lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh. We see on every hand the signs, the predicted signs of the nearness of the advent. Let us not wait till it comes to rejoice in it. Let us rejoice now because the joy of Christ and of his church is near. Superstition's fall and error's flight, the casting out of Satan, and the coming of the King are nigh! Ye graves, how soon shall ye give up your prey! Resurrection, life and glory, how soon shall ye burst upon us! Children of the coming kingdom, this is no time for gloom, for mourning, or for tears, —let us rejoice for our redemption, long waited-for—our longed for redemption is at hand.

And you who neither desire nor dread that day—you who love not our Lord Jesus Christ—you whose busy thoughts, and whose warm affections are still in the world, whose motives and objects and treasures are of the earth, you whose minds are in darkness; whose consciences, when they speak at all, accuse; whose hearts and souls are indifferent to eternal truth, destitute of real holiness, dead to him in whom you live—dead to God—through the darkness and the death of your souls, let the light of the gospel you have heard but never understood, now shine at length!

Hear ye the word of the Lord God who is light and love, God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." Oh, glorious gospel of the blessed God! shine, shine in some dark heart through these most joyful words of saving truth! Jesus made sin for sinners! The Son of God suffering in the sinner's place! The sinner who believes,—who trusts in him justified and saved! The darkness is past, the true light now shineth. O thou who hast hated HIM without a cause. He takes thy place, he gives thee his!

O THOU who hast taken on thyself our humanity, that thou mightest bear our griefs, and carry our sorrows, and alone for all our sins,—Thou whose loud expiring cry upon the cross rang through the universe the triumphant truth that our redemption is accomplished, that its battle has been fought, its victory won; the foe vanquished; sin cancelled, made an end of, and known no more,—Thou whose tender sympathies and whose immortal love surpassing knowledge are with us still, whose sacred presence unseen but ever felt, guards and guides thy redeemed in all their pilgrim way,—Thou who art coming in the brightness of thy majesty, in the sweetness of thy grace, in the fulness of thy strength, to finish our redemption, and complete thy triumph over all our fears, and all our foes,—Thou whose unchangeable purpose it is to surround thyself with the spotless beauty of a new creation, whose voice shall yet proclaim the renovation of a ruined world, the completion of the conquest of our evil by thy good, the consummation of the moral movement of all these ages carried forward by thine unwearied spirit in the souls of men, the perfection of thy redeemed in the holy image of their Redeemer; whose faithful hand shall yet finish the true temple of Jehovah, the living temple of his fulness, and habitation of his glory forever and ever,—Thou whose latest promise and last recorded utterance is, SURELY I COME QUICKLY," and whose coming is now near at hand—Life of our life—Light of our light—God manifested—God with us—our everlasting ALL—we long, we watch, we wait to welcome Thee—come, as Thou hast said—COME SOON—EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS.—H. Grattan Guinness.

Notice.

The brethren will please not send any more orders for my tract described in RESTITUTION of January 12th, until a new edition can be printed, of which due notice may be expected. The four thousand copies went off rapidly. I have yet on hand however several hundred copies of my book, "The gospel of the kingdom, advocated in a series of ten discourses"—some copies of it in paper covers at 50 cents, and some in handsome cloth binding at $1.00. POETRY.

Resurgemus.

E. W. H. C.

It matters little where this weary frame
Rests on its final pillow. Whether laid,
With many tears, by gentle hands, beneath
The verdant turf, o'erblossomed by fragrant flowers,
Or cast to wither on the desert sands,
Or prisoned 'neath the ponderous marble's dome,
In vaults of gloomy silence with the worms;
Or in cremation's ashes urned and niched;
Or in old ocean's chambers vast and dark,
Amid its caves and coral wellering,
While ages write their records. All that once
Was human still abideth, and awaits
A final waking; since this mortal must
A glorious immortality put on.

Ask not proud Science how this thing can be;
She answers not, save only to affirm
The elements are indestructible.
In this path Reason falters and is blind.
Faith, leaning on the Word, alone can solve
The mystery and challenge—"It shall be."
There is a voice the very dust can wake,
And the death-mould of ages vocalize;
Find ears to hear in earth's sepulchral caves
Deepest and darkest, and re-animate
The ashes of the melancholy urn.
Vainly the monumental marble weighs
Above the silent sleeper; vainly, too,
The magnitude of waters presses down
In its far depths of azure quietude
The drowned and long forgotten; they shall past

The greasy billows back to life again,
Atoms unseen, that people all the air,
Shall run obedient, hasting to reform
Their pristine mass of human organ-ism,
The same, yet not identical.

So shall the glorious consummation come;
O'er the destroyer as shall triumph life,
And death be "swallowed up in victory."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—It is some time since I have let myself be heard, but it is my wish to write oftener if I had the opportunity or time, as I have written to you some time ago that we were but a few brethren and sisters here; but they all seem to hold to the faith that was once delivered to the saints; but there are a great many others here that seem to be deaf and blind to the teachings of the Scriptures. The Gentile times will soon draw to a close and the dear Master will come to set up his kingdom upon the earth with all his saints. But the people around here have his kingdom set up now! They seem to know all about it, and can't be taught the truths as it is taught in the Scriptures, for they think that they are going to heaven at death on flowery beds of ease! But thanks be to God that his purpose is plainly revealed; that in Abraham and his seed should all nations be blessed.

I will say a few words in relation to God's purpose in creating the world or arranging the ages. He, the Lord, created it, not in vain. He made it to be inhabited. The heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men; for our blessed Savior says: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth," and David adds, "And delight themselves in the abundance of peace." No statement of Holy Writ is susceptible of more positive proof than the one we affirm—that it was God's purpose to have the world peopled with a race of holy beings. But, the question is, will God's purpose be thwarted by the introduction of evil? I affirm, not in the least. But, if, as the Orthodox believe and teach, evil is to be eternal, then will this earth or planet, deeply impressed with the seed of divine wisdom and power, and goodness, prove to be a stain on one among the many mansions in God's house, which the lowly Savior has undertaken to restore and fit up for a home and an everlasting inheritance for the saints.

We would be very glad if some of the brethren would come and preach to us, but as we are so far out west we have to content ourselves with the Bible and THE RESTITUTION for our guide, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

But, in conclusion, let me say to all the brethren and sisters, let us all strive to hold fast our confidence in the faith without wavering, looking unto Jesus, who is our life, that when he shall appear, we may be like him, for we shall see him as he is. I will have to close, by wishing you all a happy New Year. Inclosed find $1.00 for THE RESTITUTION for six month's to come.

Yours, in the hope of the soon-coming of our Lord and Master.

D. M. SWEEDEN.

Springdale, Nebraska.

Editor Restitution:—We are very much pleased that you still occupy the editorial chair, though we know the position must be a very difficult one to fill, so as to suit the readers of the paper, yet you have given general satisfaction in the past, and hope that the consciousness of having done so may cheer and encourage you through the year upon which we have just entered. Sister and I tried to have our offering ready by the first of the month, but could not. Not because we believe the first of January begins the year only as a convenience, but because we know that the quicker the response, the more cheering the outlook for the present year. We are still trying to press onward, though at times our progress seems very slow; and we often feel discouraged because all with whom we come in contact seem to turn a deaf ear to the glorious truths of the gospel. We often long for the companionship of those of like precious faith, and long for the day when the family of the redeemed will be gathered home. "But who may abide the day of his coming?" Momentous question. May all who profess to know the truth ever be watchful, is the prayer of your sister in hope.

M. ROCK.

St. Joseph, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find five dollars, two from my sister, Mrs. R. H. Cobb, and three for myself. I am a poor girl and have to earn all the money I spend, but I love THE RESTITUTION and am willing to deny myself to help it. We have no preacher and I cannot tell you what the paper is to us. Yours in the one faith,

JOSIE GENN.

Editor Restitution:—With others who have been before me in spoken words, I feel to thank you for the kind and considerate course you have taken in managing THE RESTITUTION in the past. And I assure you I am truly glad you are to be retained as editor the coming year; the brethren could not have done better. May the dear Lord bless you and give you special grace and wisdom to act in the difficult position you occupy is my humble prayer.

Enclosed find one dollar to apply on my subscription for the year 1880. I will send more just as soon as I can. Your sister in faith and hope,

MISS R. BEARDSLEY.

South Haven, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—I will write you a few lines in regard to renewing my paper. We are not able to send $3 for we have had hard times and poor crops. I like your paper very much, and can't get along without it, for it is the only preaching we have of our faith. We let some of our neighbors have it to read and they like it very much. Enclosed you will find the money for the paper another year, and am sorry that we can't send more.

From your brother and sister in the faith of our blessed Lord and Savior.

JOHN and HULDAH LOOMIS.

Editor Restitution:—You will find enclosed fifty cents to apply on my subscription. I feel sorry that I cannot do something more for THE RESTITUTION, but I have not much of this world's goods, but have to labor to support myself and family, money matters are very close in this state, the poor class of people seldom ever get any, it will soon be two years since I first heard the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and was baptized into the Christ, and have been trying to walk in newness of life; there is none of the one faith in two hundred miles of here, that I know of, except myself and three sisters, the labors of Bro. Crockett; we have opposition on all sides but we are earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints; may the Lord help us to endure unto the end that we may receive that crown of life promised such, who love his appearing. Yours in hope of eternal life when the life giver comes.

Where they Stand.

Our Disciple friends claim to take the whole Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. Say nothing of practical Christianity and enquire into their faith, we will find that it falls far short of the faith; of the faith once delivered to the saints; of the like precious faith the apostle had; of the Bible faith.

As faith is the result of evidence and hearing and believing, the gospel will produce gospel faith, it follows that, as their faith is not a Bible faith, the gospel which produced it is not a Bible gospel.

Not long since I loaned to my sister, a member of the Christian church, Brother Jones' discourses on the kingdom with the request that she tell me of the errors when she had read it. I called for it, and found that she had read a little of it, but did not wish to read any more. During the conversation between her, her husband and myself I found, I thought, a good time to preach a short gospel sermon. Having gone over the gospel and kingdom as preached by Jesus, I went to the first sermon delivered after the Holy Spirit descended on the apostles—Peter's Pentecostal sermon—and passing hurriedly over the first part I dwelt long and loud on "David being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn to him with an oath that of the fruit of his loins he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne," they both suddenly exclaimed, "why, Ed, you're going crazy!"

Such is the spirit and superstition of some of the members of the Disciple church. While others seem to be honest enquirers after truth.

Will not some one who reads this, be led to see that he must believe in order to be saved, the whole gospel and not simply the death, burial and resurrection of our Lord; that he must believe the gospel as preached by the apostles; that he must believe the same as those who believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God as well as the name of Jesus Christ, yield obedience to the same, and finally gain a position in that kingdom?

SELECTIONS.

[Messenger.]

Jewish Anticipations.

The Jewish Chronicle, of 12th December, has another leader on "The Regeneration of Palestine," from which we quote the following:

"The idea that in our own days we should see Palestine re-organized, is sufficient to arouse the warmest interest in the minds of every Jew who has the least zeal for his race or admiration for its brilliant history. The practical ways and means of bringing this about are engaging the attention of many very good and earnest people, and it is not by any means impossible that this aspiration, which seems at first sight so visionary, may actually be realized within no very long time. The state of flux in the Turkish Empire and the absolute necessity of some improvement there, encourage the supposition, and we believe it is quite true, that the Prime Minister of England has received with approval the suggestion that, under the shelter of the English Protectorate of Asia Minor, arrangements should be made for settling industrial colonies of Jews in Palestine. Prosperous colonies of German Christians are already resident in two or three exceptionally flourishing parts of that country. We have ourselves published a letter from a Jewish colonist who is farming at some distance from Jerusalem; and the Jaffa Agricultural School, under the presidency of Mr. Charles Netter, is well-known to our readers. More recently, the subject was prominently taken up by the candidate for an English constituency, Mr. Cazalet, Liberal candidate for Mid-Kent. This gentleman has established manufactories with great success in Russia, and perhaps entertains the idea, which has occurred to many, of removing some of the large Jewish population which is known to be practiced in agricultural pursuits in Russia to the more favored country of the Levant. Mr. Cazalet, in a pamphlet which is before us, enlarges at considerable length upon the ways and means of accomplishing the restoration of Syria. He does not regard Palestine as distinct from Syria, but treats the larger area en bloc, a treatment which is justified by the fact that many Jews have settled in Damascus and other parts of the province. There was a chance, says Mr. Cazalet, for the regeneration of this country some years ago, when the Viceroy of Egypt conquered it from his auzerain the Sultan, It was England who interposed, and compelled Mehemet Ali to retire to the banks of the Nile. Lord Palmerston confessed to the French Ambassador that his purpose was to make Syria a desert in order to interpose an insurmountable barrier between the Sultan and his Egyptian vassal. So Mr. Cazalet states on the authority of Guizot's Memoirs. Whether or not this singular policy ever guided the English Government, it is certain that different motives now prevail.

"Discussing the means of restoring prosperity to Syria, Mr. Cazalet says, that if the regeneration of Syria is to be attempted it must of necessity come from without, and can only be brought about by an influx of an industrious and more enlightened people. The restoration of the Jews to their own land seems to him the only practicable means. This event need not prove in any way a strain on the resources of England. All that is required is that England should create the conditions under which a large number of Jews would gradually migrate of their own accord to Syria and Palestine. The first condition of such a movement is that law and order should be introduced under the English Protectorate. The greedy Pasha and the unjust judge must be got rid of. England must take the government of the country into her own hands. A second condition essential to the return of the Jews is that some great work, such as the construction of the Euphrates Valley Railway, should be undertaken in the country by the English Government. This would afford occupation for a vast number of mechanics and laborers, and serve as a guarantee that our protectorate would not be abandoned. Another influence which would greatly assist the colonization of the country would be to establish a college in the Holy Land which would serve as a centre of Jewish philosophy and science. The total number of Jews throughout the world is variously estimated at from eight to ten millions. Of these the greater number—probably six millions—inhabit Russia, Roumania, and the old Polish provinces which now belong to Austria and Germany. The condition of the Jews in Russia is deplorable in the extreme. They are denied civil rights. They are forbidden to hold landed property. They are treated as aliens, and are restricted to limited areas in which they suffer from the evils of over-population. These conditions have induced many thousands of Russian Jews to migrate to America within the last thirty and forty years, and it may be confidently predicted that Syria, under the British protectorate, would offer still greater attractions.

Nobody,' concludes Mr. Cazalet, 'who has any knowledge of the Jewish character can for a moment doubt that, if the Jews were restored to their country under an English protectorate, they would prove true to our nation and that Syria would become as firmly united to England as if it were peopled by our own countrymen.'

He speaks Mr. Cazalet as a purely English politician, and it cannot be denied that the English have acquired, by their protectorate of the Asiatic dominions of the Porte, a right to deal with this question without consulting any of the other Powers. Their part would perhaps be limited to establishing by their authority a small board which would then administer Syria or Palestine as the case might be. Two or three able men, supported by the authority of a Great European State and with power to levy an armed constabulary, would, if guided as they doubtless would be by wise economical principles, make in five years an enormous difference in the condition of the province."

[It is curious to note, alongside of these anticipations, the continuance of "the new crusade" against Jews in Germany. At Orb, we read, "a large number of tombstones in the Jewish cemetery have been destroyed" by some miscreants; while at Laupheim, Wurtemburg, a mob of roughs, instigated, it is said, by a local paper, "attacked the houses of the Jewish citizens, maltreating their owners."]

NEWS ITEMS.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—A dispatch from Cabul says: "An outbreak is possible at any time, and almost certain to occur as soon as the snow melts. The Afghans do not admit their defeat, and say they were only dispersed because they had no cannon with which to dislodge the British from Shirpur, but that the next time they will bring cannon."

Shirpur has been greatly strengthened, and the garrison now consists of 3,000 Europeans and 4,800 natives.

[New York World.]

TOKIO, JAPAN.

There was a disastrous conflagration in Tokio on Dec. 26, the third in seven years,—the first in 1872 and the second in 1876. Nearly 15,000 homes have been destroyed, and 50,000 persons rendered destitute. The loss of life is put down at about 100.

[New York Herald.]

THE CHOLERA IN JAPAN.

A correspondent, writing from Tokio, December 10, says: "Although the cholera which ravaged this country during the summer and autumn disappeared in November, the statistics connected with it have just been published. The total number of cases was 164,229; deaths, 90,669; cured, 45,855, and still under treatment, 21,714; the percentage of mortality having been nearly 50."

LONDON, Jan. 23.—Intelligence is published here that the exploring expedition under the lead of Henry M. Stanley has established the first trading station on the Congo, near Yalala, which place is claimed by both England and Portugal.

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Violent shocks of an earthquake are reported by the Panama Star in Salvador, and much damage is feared in the interior. In La Libertas on the night of the 1st instant the earth seemed literally to be dancing. Persons in the streets were thrown down and many buildings suffered. It was generally apprehended that San Salvador had been leveled to the ground. All who could leave that capital had done so. Many business men kept their animals saddled, prepared for flight. The Lake of Ilopango was in motion, like a boiling caldron, emitting dense sulphurous vapors. Industries of all sorts are suspended, the terrified inhabitants being only concerned about their safety. The Government has used every means in its power to calm the populace, and has furnished facilities for travel and ample protection against lawlessness and robberies.

EARTHQUAKE AT HAVANA.

HAVANA, Jan. 23.—Severe shocks of earthquake were felt in this city last night at 11 o'clock, and again at 5:30 this morning. Earthquakes had never before been experienced here, and many persons were frightened and passed the night in the public squares. No person was injured, and there was no damage to property. The duration of the shocks was about three seconds. The barometer was very low at six last evening. To-day at noon the barometer registered thirty degrees, and the thermometer seventy-nine degrees. Accounts from Vuelta Abajo indicate that the earthquake was severely felt there, and much damage was done to buildings, especially at San Cristobal. The shocks were oscillating from east to west. It is supposed that there has been a heavy earthquake somewhere in Central America. At Santiago de Cuba no disturbance was felt.

PANAMA, January 13.—The Cauca valley has been devasted by recent floods. The river rose yards above the highest point heretofore known, and inundated the country for about three miles, sweeping away villages, crops, cattle, goats and horses. Some human lives were also lost. As the waters began to subside, the farmers in boats endeavored to gather the cocoa crop remaining on the trees. They had to go armed, to protect themselves against immense snakes which had been driven down the valley by the torrent. The losses are estimated at $1,000,000.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A Constantinople dispatch asserts that terrible distress prevails in Adrianople. Fifteen persons were found dead from hunger there in one day.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 25.—The Golos reports that the crops in 1879 were unsatisfactory, and that this fact is causing apprehensions of distress in several provinces. Newspapers now discuss the probability of necessity arising for importation of American grain into Russia next spring.

RESTITUTION FUND.

ANSON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Editor Restitution.—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and foreign its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $3.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-willoffering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment: are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $3.00, and will they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $3.00 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The quarterly assembly of the Church of God will, if the Lord will, commence near Brownstown, Warren county, Va., on Saturday night before the second Sunday in February, and will continue over Sunday. All of the one faith as revealed in the Holy Scriptures are respectfully invited to attend, irrespective of difference of opinion on any subject that does not form a feature in the faith once delivered to the saints.

J. N. MORGAN.

We will commence a series of lectures in Lanark, Ill., Feb. 7, and continue about two weeks. And by request of the brethren at East Plum River, will attend the conference to be held there Feb. 20, 21 and 22, if no preventing providence.

J. W. HACKENBURG.

The Lord willing there will be a conference at East Plum River, Carroll county, Ill., to commence Friday evening at 7 o'clock, Feb. 20, 1880, and continue over Sunday. Conference district is northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. Bro. Hazlewood and others are expected to be present to preach the word. Those coming by rail will stop at Lanark. It is desired that those who want conveyances from Lanark to the place of meeting should correspond with one of the following persons: R. F. Reaser or N. M. Mitchell, Loran, Stephenson county, Ill., or J. S. Arnold, Mt. Carroll, Carroll county, Ill. A general invitation is extended to all to come and help along with the meeting. By order of committee,

J. S. ARNOLD.

The brethren of Lanark intend having a two week's meeting, commencing Feb. 7th. Bro. Hughawout will be there prior to going to the East Plum River conference. Bro. John Arnold preached a very interesting discourse at Lanark, Jan. 15th encouraging the little flock to hold out for the great salvation. Yours in hope of the coming King.

POETRY.

Passing Away.

O River of Time! how ceaselessly
Thou flowest on to the boundless sea!
Whether upon thy sunny tide
The sweet Spring blossoms drop and glide,
Or whether the dreary snow-flakes only
Fall to the Winter cold and lonely—
Whether we wake or whether we sleep,
Thou hastest on to Eternity's deep.

'Twas long ago, in my life's sweet May,
My childhood silently floated away;
I hear the moments distinctly chime,
And youth glides by on the stream of time.
My days, though sunny or overcast,
Are stealing away to the changeless past!
But I mark their flight with a smile or cheer,
And not with a sigh or falling tear.

So often, so sadly, the people say,
"Passing away! still passing away!"
That the words have borrowed a positive tone
And a shade of coldness not their own;
And I fain would reclaim their notes again
From their minor key on the lips of men,
And I make the refrain of my childhood lay,
"Passing away! ever passing away!"

For what is the transient? and what will last?
What maketh its grave in the growing past?
And what lives on in the deathless ashes,
Where nought corrupts by the rust of years?
Does Time, who gathers our fairest flowers,
Destroy no weeds in this world of ours?
What rises victorious o'er dull decay?
And what is that which is passing away?

Our time is flying. The years sweep by Like rifting clouds in a breezy sky,
But time is a drop of the boundless sea
Or an infinite eternity.
As our seas are spanned by the arching skies,
'Neath the presence of God that ocean lies,
And though tides may fall in life's shallow bay,
Eternity's deep is not passing away.

A. D. MACRUDER.

INTERVIEW WITH MR. MOODY AT CLEVELAND.

Continuing our conversation, I said: Mr. Moody, we are all agreed I think, that the Gospel is to be preached by all men for the obedience of faith. That is undoubtedly the Divine Plan of salvation. You agree to this, for you call your assemblies Gospel meetings, etc. Is it not possible for us to learn ourselves and to teach other definitely and plainly what the Gospel is? I do not know that we shall differ in our definition of it. As I do not remember to have heard you define it, I should hope you will not object to saying what would be your answer to the question, "What is the Gospel but only a teacher?" He replied, "I am not a teacher, I am no theologian. Others—the clergy can answer that question. They are posted in the learning of the subject." I replied, Is there any difference between preaching and teaching the Gospel? In the great commission our Lord commanded his disciples to preach the Gospel and to teach all nations. But as you are not prepared to tell what is the Gospel, perhaps you will object to hear the Bible definition of it. It seems to have had very ancient origin, for Paul tells us in Galatians that chapter that it was "preached to Abraham," and his definition reaches back to the "seed of the woman" promised as a deliverer in the Garden of Eden, which makes this promise or message of "good news," coeval with the fall of man. Of our Lord Himself, it is written, "after John was put into prison Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God," and it is so preached by all his apostles, as the Acts and the Epistles abundantly prove.

Now if we do not preach this same "good news of (or concerning) the Kingdom of God" are we not preaching "another Gospel" and so in danger of incurring Paul's anathema in Galatians? I added that he who did not believe in the coming of Jesus again to the earth, to fulfill the Bible promises, to bless all nations, to establish his kingdom, and reign on earth with his saints, and to put down all rule and authority under his feet, (by which means alone God's will should be done on earth as it was in heaven), could not be said to believe or preach the Gospel.

He said the Bible said "Christ's kingdom was a spiritual kingdom."

I asked where it was so written—would he quote the passage? Receiving no reply, I added there perhaps was a sense in which his reign would be spiritual inasmuch as the kingdom would be ruled and governed "by the Lord, the Spirit," and the saints who would become spiritual beings by their resurrection to life and immortality; but if by a spiritual he meant an intangible, invisible, unreal kingdom, etc., the Scriptures taugh exactly the contrary. That they plainly promised a literal kingdom, in which Christ and his glorified saints would be the Kings and Rulers—the Jewish race primarily and all nations ultimately, would be the subjects—the earth, the territory, Jerusalem, restored and re-peopled, the Metropolis and the whole race and world the recipients of millennial blessedness. That it was a grievous mistake—a fatal blunder to figure away by a forced and unnatural construction, as the clergy do every day the plainest and strongest language that could be used to describe the literal reality of the words and promises of the Bible and thus keep the people in utter darkness and delusion as to the sense and meaning of God's word.

I referred him for proof of the literal truth, to the remarkable prophecy by the angel Gabriel when announcing to the Virgin Mary the birth of her Son, uttering the six distinct prophecies concerning Him, contained in Luke i. 30-34.

Quoting the words of the text I submitted that three of these, viz: His name, his greatness and his Sonship had been by the admission of all Christians literally fulfilled, already have in the past and that was good ground to believe in the equally literal fulfillment of the other three, i.e.will That He (Christ) should "sit on the throne of his father David—should reign over the House of Jacob (the Jews) and establish a kingdom which should never be destroyed,"—and that the fulfilment of these promises, with all the consequences following, make the Gospel a message of good news—"of glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people."

Walking about the room with a restless and troubled look Mr. Moody made no response, beyond the remark that he had a sister who believed as we did, and she had set those things before him. I said they were well calculated to arrest and engage his thoughtful attention, and if he had learned them already from so faithful a friend as his sister, I was the more surprised that he seemed not to heed what he had heard. He asked abruptly, if we were Campbellites; I said no. Were we Christadelphians? No. Who was our founder? I replied, "One Jesus of Nazareth." Had we any creed? "Yes; here it was—the Bible—could he offer us any better?"

Seeing that Mr. Moody did not seem to be willing or ready to defend his faith or want of faith, I could not forbear to say to him, (in reply to his remark that he was "opposed to controversy") that in this he certainly did not follow the example of our Lord nor of his apostles—that the Master had given us the precept "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear,"—and he that doeth the truth come to the light that his deeds may be found agreeable to God—that St. Paul had said we should prove all things and hold fast that which is good—a position which he illustrated and enforced when he encountered the scoffing Jews, the stoics and epicureans at Athens, with whom "he disputed daily in the synagogue and the market place.' This enabled him to get access to the philosophers and the most intelligent classes in that famous city and to this habit of Paul's we were indebted for that masterpiece of reason and eloquence—his speech on Mars' Hill—which was recorded in the seventeenth chapter of the Acts.

To my surprise he replied that Paul's course at Athens, in provoking controversy, was not wise; as a proof of it, his efforts "came nearer being a failure there than anywhere else." I said I would not undertake to defend Paul to any one who fancied himself wiser than the inspired apostle. But little hopeful of any good results from our efforts to inspire this "evangelist" of modern Gentile theology with some decent respect for God's word—although I had heard him, in his sermons, speak bonstingly his great reverence for it, I determined to desist from further efforts and so changing the subject somewhat, I asked Mr. Moody what he thought of baptism—was he a baby sprinkler, or did he immerse adults? He replied, "On that subject I have not made up my mind fully and I find I must do so soon, for my boys are now growing up and I must be prepared to tell them what to do." I said, Is it not safe to put the Bible into their hands as soon as they are of sufficient intelligence, and let them investigate and decide the question for themselves? He replied, "Perhaps that will be the best plan, and I may do so"—a remark which, I thought, displayed more reason and common sense than any which had fallen from him in the interview.

Here the conversation was interrupted by the entrance of three visitors whom he introduced to us by their "Reverend" titles as clergymen of the city. Mr. Moody seemed relieved by their entrance, and laying his hand familiarly on the shoulder of one of them said, somewhat tauntingly, addressing me: "Here is Brother ——. He is a scholar. He will debate with you as much as you please. You can pitch into him at once." I said, "Excuse me, Mr. Moody. You are mistaken if you suppose me to be a gymnast or a gladiator, ready and anxious to grapple with any opponent whom I may chance to meet. You ought to know by this time that I have not asked you to hear the Bible truths which I have imperfectly presented in any spirit of personal vanity or self-sufficiency. If I had not accredited you with an earnest and honest zeal for the triumph of God's truth over all human substitutes, I should not have sought this interview with you. Perhaps I have made a mistake. If I have, it is my misfortune but not my fault that I have been deceived." Then turning to the gentleman alluded to, I said, "I trust you will believe, sir, that I have no desire to provoke you or any gentleman into any debate or discussion on any subject, for such conduct would be justly obnoxious and intrusive. I was indeed trying, when you came in, to convince Mr. Moody that, by a friendly and candid discussion and by an appeal to this blessed Book, we might succeed in reconciling the difference between us as to the things to be believed and practiced for salvation, but I fear with little prospect of success, as he has not yet said that he will abide by the Bible as the end of controversy and the arbiter of our differences. The gentleman referred to (whose name I do not remember) responded courteously, and seemed rather to rebuke his Brother Moody, for he said, "Every gentleman who takes the Bible in his hand and endeavors to prove his points by that Book is always worthy of all possible respect and attention." Without further discussion the conversation became general during the remainder of our visit, and courteously taking leave of Mr. Moody and his companions, we withdrew.

I do not regret that I made the effort to "convert the sinner from the error of his way." I was enabled thereby to follow the Master and his primitive disciples "in bearing witness to the truth," and, although no immediate good result appears to be achieved from such encounters, I always enjoy every honest contention for the truth, which never shines clearer and brighter in immortal light than when contrasted with her miserable rival—error—which always hides from the light of day and seeks refuge in its native darkness.

As to Mr. Moody himself it is easy to see that he is deficient in those faculties, and qualities which enter into the composition of the true Christian and man of God. No doubt he is personally amiable and affectionate in his social and domestic relations, and as the world goes, a kind, worthy man. His temperament which is nervous lymphatic, the first predominating—makes him sympathetic, indolent and emotional, willing and ready to float with the tide, but wholly incapable of breasting an adverse current of contending for an unpopular, the righteous cause of making sacrifices, and wholly unfit to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." This easy conformity to the loose and popular religious respectability of this generation, united to ready speech, a portly presence and a good share of personal self-esteem, make him naturally a favorite and a pet with those who believe contrary to the word of the "Great Teacher sent from God," that it is quite possible, indeed the right thing to do, to serve two masters, to worship God and mammon, to profess and enjoy the good things of this life and of that which is to come. Such a preacher is what "the religious" of this age want. He soothes and quiets conscience. He makes religion smooth, and decent and respectable, not personally exacting and inconvenient and hence he pleases and they pay well. In short, it is with Mr. Moody as with other men of his stamp in all ages is to borrow the flowing phrase of the Prayer Book. It is as it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be until the Lord and his saints shall come, in great power and glory and each and all nations the way of righteousness and open their eyes to see the shame and sin and folly of their present doings. Read Isaiah xxxiv., Jeremiah xvi. 19.

SELECTIONS.

(Extracts.)

The Second Coming of the Lord.

Having for many years been looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior—who gave himself for us, and has promised to come again and receive us unto himself, that where he is there we may be also—I have felt called upon for some time past to bear testimony to this my only hope. First, then, let me ask, who is it we are looking for? When will he come? How will he come? and where will he come? First, then, we say that we are looking for the coming of a Man, not the Archangel Michael, or any other angel, but the Man; not God, who is a spirit (John iv. 24), but the Man, Christ Jesus, the mediator between God and men; not God who fills heaven and earth (1 Kings viii. 27), but the Son of Man (Mark x. 33).

Yes, we look for no other than that man, our kinsman-Redeemer, who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. We look for the coming of that same Jesus which was taken up into heaven, and shall so come as he was seen to go into heaven.

Well, where is he, and where has he been for more than eighteen hundred years? He entered heaven as our high priest, passed into the heavens (Heb. iv. 14), the holy place, as the unchangeable priest making intercession for us, and is seated on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven (Heb. viii. 1, 2); one has he ever vacated that position, since he went up, to come to this earth, either at the death of his saints or in Providence; for if he were on earth, he would not be a priest (Heb. viii. 4). And we know from expressions other passages. that he is the only man who has passed into the heavens and into the holy place; and his people are as yet all without any exception outside, waiting the coming hour from the dead; and there he remains alone, the only glorified one, till he comes to fetch all who sleep in him, and the living ones who look for his appearing.

I cannot understand how any Christian could or would dare to say that that Man Christ Jesus, the once crucified, has ever been down to this earth since he went up; and, if it be true that about 21,000 deaths take place every hour, how can it be that he is bodily present in all these places at once and at the same time, and in millions of other places also in Providence? And if he is so here, why do we yet hope for his coming? But we do hope for that which we see not yet accomplished, and we do with patience wait for him; and whilst we look back to Bethlehem with an ever stronger faith and deeper love—as every year adds its witness to the blessed and abiding salvation of which angels made shepherds the ambassadors—and forward to Olivet with an ever holier fervor of expectation, our hearts glow within us as the little while is swiftly and hourly diminishing between our present standpoint and our full and final felicity. Yes; the Master's watchword, "I come quickly," is ever ringing in our ears, and the blessed words of warning given by John six times to the seven churches of Asia encourage us to patiently look for the coming of our Lord. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein, for he will come and will not tarry; and blessed are our eyes which see that the coming of the Lord runs like a thread of gold through the entire Scriptures, declaring that the Lord Jesus shall have a future visible kingdom over the nations of the earth, while existing as now in their mortal, unglorified state, and that he shall reign over them as literally as David reigned over the kingdom of Israel. His coming is foretold by Dan. vii. 13, Jude 14; himself, Matt. xxv. 31; John xiv. 3; Acts iii. 20; 1 Tim. vi. 14; and also by angels, Acts i. 9-11, and indeed by all Scriptures. And the dead in Christ shall rise, and be caught up with the living waiting ones that it is quite possible, indeed the right thing to do, to serve two masters, to worship God and mammon, to profess and enjoy the good things of this life and of that which is to come. Such a preacher is what "the religious" of this age want. He soothes and quiets conscience. He makes religion smooth, and decent and respectable, not personally exacting and inconvenient and hence he pleases and they pay well. In short, it is with Mr. Moody as with other men of his stamp in all ages is to borrow the flowing phrase of the Prayer Book. It is as it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be until the Lord and his saints shall come, in great power and glory and each and all nations the way of righteousness and open their eyes to see the shame and sin and folly of their present doings. Read Isaiah xxxiv., Jeremiah xvi. 19.

Jesus, the once despised Nazarene, came!

Where will he come? First in the air, where we shall meet him, and we shall be forever with the Lord (Rev. xxi. 2-5). Next he will come to this earth; for his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives. And here on this earth we shall reign with the Lord and his saints shall descend to the earth (Rev. xx. 4). Jerusalem shall be the city of the great King (Psa. ii. 6 and xlviii. 2). He shall be King over all the earth (Zech. xiv. 9; Psa. ii. 6-8; lxxii. 8-11). All nations shall go up year by year to Jerusalem to worship the Lord there (Isa. lxv. 1, 2; Isa. ii. 1-3; Isa. lvi. 7; lxvi. 18-23; Jer. iii. 17; Zech. viii. 20-22; xiv. 16; Luke ii. 32). And the name of the city shall from that day be Jehovah Shammah—the Lord is there (Ezek. xlviii. 35; Isa. lx. 20-21, and chapters lx., lxi., lxiii.—James Inglis, Sen.

The Winter Here and Abroad.

We are now near the middle of our winter, and yet the fields and the hillsides hereabouts present the appearance of spring, and green spears of grass are frequent enough to make the turf almost like that of early April, while on some of these January days the atmosphere reminds us of the air of spring time. The plough could cut a deep furrow, and the roots are heavy with the mud which the loosening of the slight frosts has created. The buds on the cherry trees have swelled, and green things seem to be growing to the open air.

We might call it a remarkable winter for us if of recent years we had not had seasons which were even more open; but our comparative freedom in this region from sharp cold and from heavy and lasting snow makes our winter remarkable when we contrast it with that which has now brought such inclement weather to European countries.

In England the new year opened with violent tempests, and during a fierce December gale the Tay bridge in Scotland succumbed to the storm, and what was boasted of as one of the grandest triumphs of modern engineering proved its inability to resist the onset of the elements. In Ireland wide-spread distress appeals for public and private aid, the scarcity of proper fuel for burning being a serious calamity. "No amount of private charity can cope with the approaching famine in Ireland," writes Dr. McIlvaily, the coadjutor of the Archbishop of Tuam. The annual crop reports of England show that the last year was remarkable for its lack of fertility. So far as wheat and barley were concerned, the crop was the worst in ten years at least.

On the Continent the winter has been one of severity, and, in some parts, of great suffering. At Paris the weather was sharp and disagreeable up to the beginning of the year, when it moderated so decidedly and suddenly that the ice in the Seine, over which people had for a month been crossing, broke up rapidly and the river became a roaring torrent. The Rhine and Main are much swollen, and villages along these streams have been inundated. At Vienna a sudden thaw at the beginning of the year caused apprehensions of a serious flooding, the Danube rising rapidly and alarmingly. Thousands of people, the cable despatch informed us, spent New Year's night in watching to guard against inundation; but so far no great damage has been done.

A famine is reported in some districts of Bosnia, thousands of people being on the verge of starvation. In Russia the country between the Volga and the Don is famine-stricken according to accounts from St. Petersburg, and hunger is aiding typhus fever in devastating the region. Christian missionaries in Turkey appeal for aid for the victims of the famine which is prevailing and increasing in northern Persia, averring that unless aid is promptly furnished a great number of the population must assuredly perish.

The winter, therefore, has so far proved more trying in the Old World than here. As is always the case, there have been heavy snow storms in portions of the far West, but up to this time we have seen none in the vicinity of New York, while the thermometer has not registered any remarkably low temperatures. On the average, the first half of the winter has been mild and open, and now we approach the middle of January with scarcely a trace of snow to be seen in the city streets, and little of it showing itself in the neighboring country.

Extract from sermon by H. Ward Beecher, Sunday, Nov. 9, 79. "If I thought that a God stood at the door where men go out of life, ready to send them down to eternal punishment, my soul would cry out: Let there be no God! My instincts would say, annihilate Him!"

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

True faith leads the soul to Christ under every calamity.

Nothing gives more freshness to existence, than the consciousness of being useful to others.

Men who thank for themselves may not believe; those who do believe do so because what they have from hearsay [illegible] is apt to be a better quality of faith.

Life is made up of little things, in which smiles and kindnesses given habitually are what win and preserve the heart and secure comfort.—Hare Christian Years.

Let us remember that it is the Divine anointing of the christ of human hearts, imparts the blessing to each who come for him, that he may go and impart the blessing to others.—Homiletic.

So far is charity from impoverishing, that what is given away, like vapors exhaled by the earth, returns in showers of blessings into the bosom of the person that gave it, and his offspring is not the worse, but infinitely better for it.—Home.

One good and kind thought from a retired and obscure man, may save when it comes are fallen, and the memory of those who toiled there seem obliterated, and like an undying fire may illuminate and quicken all future generations.

PRAYER.

When earthly cares are laid away,
And shadows mark the close of day,
Though bent the form and white the hair
There's refuge still in humble prayer.

God never gives us a treasure that we may selfishly hoard it. That treasure, like the bread that was broken on the lifetime of Galilee, multiplies in the hand that takes it to divide and distribute.

AT THE CLOSE OF A YEAR.

Time, he manages, steals away
Like the hour and then the day;
Still the daily face appears,
Yet it soon amounts to years:
Thus another year is born.
And we come no more on earth
Therein it brought or promised good,
Than the years before the flood.

THE SEA A GREAT CEMETERY.

The sea is the largest of cemeteries, and its slumberers sleep without a monument. All other graveyards, in all lands, some symbol of distinction between the great and the small, the rich and the poor; but in that ocean cemetery, the king and the clown, the prince and the peasant, are alike undistinguished.

GOD'S GOODNESS.

There is dew in one flower and not in another, because one opens its cup and takes it in, while the other closes itself and the drop runs off. So God rains goodness and mercy as wide as the dew, and if we lack them, it is because we do not open our hearts to receive them.

A NEW YEAR.

Welcome, then, New Year, with [illegible] white pages,
Though we may not them enclose with our tears;
So it has been through the long passing ages,
Worn with the footprints of close-crowded years.
Welcome, sweet years may thy full-ripe deeds be!
Find us like servants who wait for their Lord,
Using with earnest devotion our powers,
Looking for him, and obeying his word.

EVERY-DAY CHRISTIANITY.

Real Christianity is earnest life-work. As electricity permeates steel, so it permeates every act and department of life. It gives a vigorous impulse to every noble quality. It makes every toil honest and cheerful. It gives courage and fortitude in the midst of sorrow and affliction. Christianity is a sublime force. It makes a new man of the old. It throws meaning and grandeur into every small act of Christian duty and benevolence. It makes men honest. It make them tender-hearted and kind. It makes the careworn, and weary, and afflicted patient. It makes home a holy of holies to social life. It makes the judge just, the merchant honest, the servant faithful, the student diligent, the wealthy generous, the poor industrious and cheerful, the strong watchful and helpful; it lights the heart of the dying saint with hopeful flashes of the life everlasting.

The South Carolina and Georgia Almanac for 1794, says the Charleston News, contains a table in which the populations of the chief cities of the United States are set down as follows: Philadelphia, 42,520; New York, 30,000; Charleston, 20,000; Boston, 18,000; Baltimore, 13,503; Newport, 6,000. At that time the entire population of the country was less than 4,000,000.

The Kingdom of God.

BY H. G. MYERS.

Friend Myers:—As you frequently write for THE RESTITUTION, to which paper I am a subscriber, I would be glad of the privilege of asking you a few questions pertinent to the Kingdom, and have you, if you will do so for my benefit, and also the benefit of others, answer through the paper.

Yours respectfully,
ENQUIRER.

QUESTION FIRST.

Do you understand there to be any difference in the terms "Kingdom of Heaven," "Kingdom of God," "Kingdom of Christ," and "Everlasting Kingdom?" as you in discourse seem to me these expressions interchangeable. May not the Kingdom of Christ be now and the Kingdom of God hereafter—as the Kingdom Militant, or of Grace and the Kingdom triumphant, or Everlasting—and therefore disciples now in the Kingdom of Christ?

REPLY.

Friend Enquirer:—Your letter soliciting your question on "The Kingdom," and request that I answer through THE RESTITUTION, has been received. Although there is much now, as heretofore has been, written and published through the columns of that paper, yet I will comply, as your questions will enable me to get out some points, and present some thing different from what we see in other articles. On looking over your questions I like the order in which they are presented very much as it will enable me to write of the subject somewhat connectedly.

And now, without further preliminaries, to your first question. Waiving all that might be said upon the phrase "Kingdom of God," as to that kingdom once having existed—as that point will naturally come up in answer to another question—I understand the expressions "Kingdom of Heaven," "Kingdom of God," "Kingdom of Christ," and "Everlasting Kingdom," to be exact synonims, and therefore use them interchangeably. And as a reason for this understanding and use I will not resort to a definition of, and discourse upon the a terms, but will select a shorter and more satisfactory solution of this point.

In the language of Jesus discoursing to various persons upon the Kingdom, the historian Matthew in full twenty occurrences records Kingdom of the Heavens, while Mark and Luke in giving an account of the same discourses in their records use the the term Kingdom of God. And so are the terms "Kingdom of God," and "of Christ," and "Everlasting" used interchangeably.

That this use may be seen, and no doubt left resting upon the mind relative to their quality, I will give a few occurrences.

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN vs.	KINGDOM OF GOD.
1. Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women, there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding, he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.	1. The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it. Luke xvi. 16.
And from the days of John the Baptist, until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.
For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John. Matt. xi. 11-13.
2. And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables? He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. Matt. xiii. 11.	2. And he said unto them, To you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto others in parables. Mark iv. 11.
3. Another parable	3. And he said, What

2. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ and of God. Eph. v. 5.

3. And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. Rev. xi. 15.

Now as it is seen from the first contrast of parallel texts that the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of God are equal; and from the second contrast that the Kingdom of God and the kingdom of Christ are one or equal, it follows therefore as a self-evident axiom that the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of Christ are one, and that whatever is predicated of one is predicated of all.

Next by way of contrast let me direct your attention to

or as will be seen in the texts here cited the kingdom of God is declared to stand "for ever," "forever and ever," and to be "everlasting."

1. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Dan. ii. xliv.

In the midst of a description of the same events in which the last above text occurs, but in different symbols we have the following statements:

2. But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever. Dan. vii. 18.

3. And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Dan. vii. 27.

Let me remark with these citations of Scriptures before us, it is observable that what is predicated in the Scriptures relative to the nature, duration, time of beginning and manner of entrance into the kingdom as set forth relative to one of these expressions, is equally predicated of any other one of the expressions or all of them since they are all one and the same.

With this point thus well established and before us, let me call your attention by way of conclusion to a few Scriptures.

1. "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Matt. vii. 21-27.

Now let me ask, When the inauguration of this scene here described?

a. Has it occurred in the past, in John's day? upon the day of Pentecost? or during the apostolical ministry?

b. Does it occur anywhere now? or

c. Is it in the future?

2. "And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell into the fire that never shall be quenched: where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes, to be cast into hell-fire." Mark ix. 43-47.

I have quoted this text at length that there might be no mistakes as to application. Now the only questions relative to it to be propounded are:

a. Do you understand that this Scripture has ever had fulfillment in the past?

b. When is the entrance into the kingdom here spoken of? Past, now, or future?

One more text we will cite before we close this letter, which we think very significant.

3. And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. Wherefore the rather brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. 2 Peter i. 5-6-7, 10-11.

There are a few points about this text making very materially upon our subject.

a. We discover from verses 9 and 10 that this address was made to persons who had exercised faith,—who were brethren—and therefore in the body—the church.

b. These brethren who were in the church were required to cultivate these Christian graces.

c. And this from verse 11 in order to an entrance into the kingdom of Christ:

d. And therefore as one may be in the church and not in the kingdom, the church and the kingdom cannot be the same.

SELECTIONS.

[Baptist.]

The Privilege of Living in This Age.

It is of course clear enough that no one has the power of election respecting the time, place, and circumstances of his birth; and it is equally obvious to common sense that there is no merit in being born in the purple, and no dishonor in being swaddled in rags. There are palaces for princes, and piles of "Union" bricks for paupers; but the Royal Highness and the Pauper Lowness know nothing of the difference when they respectively utter the first feeble cry of life; and the beds of broad acres and those of brooms for street-sweeping are equally helpless things in infancy.

But all this does not prevent a reader of history from comparing epochs, and mentally giving his preference to one age over the others as that in which he could have chosen to live and act, had choice been possible. There stand out occasionally in the world's history great deeds which are landmarks of time; and great men appear at intervals as if specially chosen for some peculiar work which was the necessity, and forms the historical peculiarity, of the time. The issues of those historic epochs, which it is wholly unnecessary to name here, affect society, nations, and churches to this hour. The lights and shadows of the past are with us yet, and will so continue until an event occur whose unspeakable, overwhelming and world-wide importance will secure universal attention, and dwarf all historic epochs into insignificance, except so far as it shall be found that they were its providential heralds.

That many of them will be so found, is certain; for though the story of man is rough and entangled, frequently presenting passages so weired and awful as to suggest to the superficial observer the absence of controlling wisdom and overruling power, yet we know, in the words of Daniel to the King of Babylon, that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." Events which, viewed by themselves, seem in every way unfitted to minister to any beneficient purpose, will be found part of a great scheme, so framed as to permit the free agency of men and the wild play of evil, whose ministry, like that of the Baptist in the wilderness, shall be to prepare the way of the Lord.

These or kindred impressions are being felt by thinkers, without respect to political or ecclesiastical leanings. None but the merest handful of heartless sceptics can imagine it possible to preserve the world and its inhabitants from utter ruin without a controlling and overruling God. Even where little or nothing of what we understand by Christian belief exists, men feel that Atheism "will not do." The human race cannot afford to lose God!

The corollary from this fact is plain. If there be, as there is, an ineradicable conviction in the human heart that God is, it must be accompanied by the thought, or belief, or hope—call it what you please—that He will some day subdue evil and bring good out of it; for a Divine being without moral activity is an absurdity. Even what is called "natural religion" will accompany us thus far without hesitancy. When we turn to the sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well to take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the morning star that heralds the sun arise, and think of the wonderful movements that are going on all over the world, we feel it a privilege for which to be profoundly thankful that we live now. "The time of the end" is near—the end of trouble, exile and oppression to Daniel's "people," and of the treading down of Daniel's "land," and consequently the end of misgovernment and social disquietudes in all other nations, when the Ancient of Days, as seen in Daniel's glorious vision, shall place the sceptre of universal empire in the hands of "One like unto the Son of Man." For the Church we have no dates. It was chosen in Christ before the ages, and will be with Him for ever; but for the seed of Abraham there are dates, and the world's future is inseparably associated with them.

One of the signs of the time of the end—until which the prophet was commanded to "shut up the words and seal the book"—is thus given: "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Is not this superlatively and marvellously true of the age? The manufacture of newspapers is an enormous branch of modern industry; there are "Correspondents" in all lands; and the electric telegraph brings us tidings continually from every part of the world, neither mountain range nor ocean depth preventing. The Bible has been translated into two hundred languages; Christian missionaries are found wherever travellers can penetrate; and the ambition of the tourist now is not to visit the old cities of Europe only, but the kingdoms of the world, and the islands of the sea. Verily, this prophecy is astonishingly fulfilled. Many other predictions which lay in the sealed books of prophecy unnoticed and unknown for ages are being fulfilled before the eyes of all men, if they would but take the trouble to look. The history of to-day all the world over is just as an unveiling and unfolding of Divine purposes, as these were "noted in the Scripture of truth" by men who wrote under the influence of the Holy Spirit thousands of years ago. The books are no longer sealed, if with anointed eyes we will but read them, as God intended them to be read at the time of the end by those who cherish the coming of the Lord as a "blessed hope."

And here we touch the spring of a great secret. It is only those who look for that blessed hope that can read prophecy. They only, as a matter of fact, care to do it; and where there is no desire for such information as prophecy imparts, of course, in the nature of things, it cannot be granted. If the coming of the Lord is supposed to mean death, and the soul is believed immediately to pass into glory, it is mentally impossible to understand one—any one—of the multitude of unfulfilled predictions in both Testaments respecting the happy future of both Church and world, simply because they are all connected with the literal return to our world of the "same Jesus" that left it in the presence of witnessing men and angels. (Acts i.) "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy" (Rev. xix. 10); and that testimony is explicit and abundant to His personal return and to the manifold blessings to the nations of the world that directly result from His presence here. But ignore the advent, and all these predictions are so much fog.

"Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred five and thirty days." (Dan. xii. 12.) And blessed are those who love and work now for the glory of Christ and the enlightenment of their fellow men. A rare privilege is ours if we know its value, and the honor it confers upon us. Our testimony may be rejected and even scorned by our fellow Christians; nevertheless we can have the joy of knowing that we lovingly and faithfully bore that testimony on the eve of the day which is to see the government of the world transferred to Him whose right it is; and that so far as we are concerned, we fulfilled the beautiful prophecy which says: "Thy saints shall bless Thee: they shall speak of the glory of Thy kingdom, and talk of Thy power; to make known to the sons of men His mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of His kingdom.—Dr. Leask.

"Watch!"

Watch ye, therefore. . . . And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch!—Mark xiii. 33, 37.

Who of all men in the world most need this exhortation? The Christian. Why?

1. Because he is a soldier, surrounded by enemies who are waiting to destroy his soul. They are ready to take advantage of his carelessness or neglect of duty; they are vigilant; they are numerous; they are subtle. Therefore he should watch.

2. Because he is a pilgrim, travelling through a hostile land. There may be snares in his way; stones, over which he may stumble; pits, into which he may fall; enemies, who would strive to make him linger on his way, and lure him from his heavenly home. Therefore he must watch.

3. Because he is a steward. He has precious treasures to take care of—his own soul, his talents, his time, his Master's honor. He must take care that he does not lose the the first, misuse the second, waste the third, and endanger the fourth. Therefore he need to watch.

5. Because he is a servant. His Lord is now absent; his return is uncertain; may be years hence; but it may be to-night. When he comes back he will expect all to be in readiness for his reception—each one at his post, each one looking out for him. Therefore the Christian must watch.

Christian reader! you are a soldier—you have entered Christ's army by your profession; his enemies are yours; his cause is yours. Are you watching?

Christian reader! you are a pilgrim—you confess that earth is not your home, that you are dwelling here but for a time; you know that you are surrounded with dangers. Are you watching?

Christian reader! you are a steward. Christ has given precious treasures into your possession. Are you watching?

Christian reader! you are a servant—you profess to be expecting the return of your Lord. Are you watching?

Your Captain, your Lord, your Master says to you, "Watch!" and pronounces you "blessed" if you watch. Rev. xvi. 15.

European Meteorology.

Something must be the matter with the meteorology over the water. Following a backward spring, a harsh summer and a late and rainy fall, the whole of Great Britain and several parts of the continent are afflicted thus far with an exceeding cold winter. The Seine, at Paris, is frozen for the first time since 1801. The temperature is remarkably low at Berlin, as well as throughout Upper Silesia. Vienna is experiencing the severest weather it has known since 1838. Travel is interrupted in Sicily and Calabria by that greatest of rarities in that climate—snow. Both in the northern and the southern parts of the continent the unexpected severity of the season is adding to popular sufferings from famine, and in some quarters bread riots are raging. In portions of Ireland, and even in England, the poorer classes are enduring at once the pangs of scant food and of unwonted cold weather. Even France, ordinarily the granary of Europe, has such widespread and extreme distress that the Chamber of Deputies, at the request of the government, yesterday, by a vote of 341 to 3, appropriated 31,000,000 to feed the starving peasantry. Here are all the conditions that have invariably in Europe and the east preceded a plague, slow fevers and other maladies of a violent and epidemic character. The reduction of the systems of large masses of people by insufficient nutriment, accompanying or followed by their exposure to inclemency of weather, against which no provisions have been made—this simultaneous attacking of the citadel of life from within and from without, is the sure forerunner of desolation to come. The unfavorable after effects are aggravated by the overcrowding, which is the only refuge open to the poorer classes from the present horrors of a season for which they are not prepared either by usage, the construction of their habitations or the quality of their clothing. Myriads, in escaping from freezing, will be inoculated with poison. We shall be happily disappointed if the coming summer shall not develop the most frightful mortality that Europe has known in the present century.

A Drunkard's Brain.

Hyrtl, by far the greatest anatomist of the age, used to say that he could distinguish in the darkest room by one stroke of the scalpel, the brain of the inebriate from that of a person who lived soberly. Now and then he could congratulate his class upon the possession of a drunkard's brain, admirably fitted, from its hardness and more complete preservation, for the purpose of demonstration. When the anatomist wishes to preserve a human brain for any length of time he effects that object by keeping that organ in a vessel of alcohol. From a soft pulpy substance, it then becomes comparatively hard; but the inebriate, anticipating the agreement, begins the indurating process before death—begins it while the brain remains the consecrated temple of the soul—while its delicate and gossamer-like tissues still throb with the pulse of heaven-born life. Strange infatuation, thus to desecrate the God-like! Terrible enchantment, that dries up all the fountains of generous feelings, petrifies all the tender humanities and sweet charities of life, leaving only a brain of lead and a heart of stone!

The Gazette de France gives a list of the coldest winters which have been experienced in France since the fifteenth century. The winter of 1408 was the "great winter," in which nearly all the bridges in Paris were swept away by the ice. In 1420 thousands perished by cold in the capital of France, as well as in the outlying districts, and wild beasts devoured human corpses in the streets of Paris. In 1507 the harbor of Marseilles was frozen up. In 1511 frozen wine was broken up with the axe and sold by the pound in Paris. In 1607 cattle perished from cold in their stalls, a fuel famine occurred in Paris, and wagons were driven across the Seine. In 1665 the thermometer in Paris fell to 22½ deg. centigrade, or to 8 deg. below zero Fahr. In 1709 the thermometer marked 9 deg. below zero (Fahr.), the Mediterranean was frozen over in many places, the greater number of the trees in France were destroyed, and wine froze in the cellars. In 1788 the ice on the Grand Canal of Versailles was 12 inches thick. In 1795 the thermometer fell to 9 deg. below zero (Fahr.) in Paris; the frost continued for six weeks, and the Dutch fleet, frozen in the Texel, was captured by a force of French cavalry and horse artillery—an episode in warfare which forms the subject of one of the pictures in the galleries of Versailles. In 1830 the thermometer fell to zero in Paris; all the rivers in France were frozen, and many men and much cattle perished by cold. In 1853 nearly all the rivers in Europe were more or less frozen over; and, finally, in 1871, the thermometer in Paris fell to 7 deg. below zero (Fahr.), but the excessive cold was of but very short duration, and the Seine was only completely frozen over for one day.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA. FEB. 4, 1880.

WILL lecture at the Christian Chapel on Sunday evening next—February 8—on the comparative merits of the two systems—Christianity and Infidelity.

WE are wonderfully crowded just now. Will attend to correspondence and communications as fast as we can. Will use all the means sent for the paper strictly in accordance with the designs of our friends who send the aid.

WE give our readers some points made by Col. Ingersoll in a late lecture. The Colonel has accounted for our origin in a manner quite as satisfactory as the foundations of the world were once explained. It was said to rest on a huge elephant, and the elephant was said to stand on a prodigious turtle. This went for demonstration till at length a still further query occurred—What does the turtle stand on? The Colonel made it appear as clear as mud that the remotest of all our grandfathers was a certain ancient "wriggler." Now everything will be as clear as black midnight when we learn who made that "wriggler"—or, did he make himself? Smart old ancestor if he did. How easy, on this supposition, to explain the smartness of one of his descendants—it is hereditary.

Ingersoll's Lecture.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll delivered a lecture in Plymouth on the evening of Jan. 30, 1880, to a few points of which we call our reader's attention. One of the objects of his unsparing sarcasm was the dogma of eternal hell torture which he assailed with a ferociousness truly savage, using both tomahawk and scalping knife. As the Bible is not responsible for this frightful sentiment, we leave the rescue of the victim to those that feel an interest in its prolonged existence. In saying this, however, we could regard as hardly less than positively abusive some of the merciless remarks with which he stigmatized several religious denominations. The Col. next went for the persecutors and persecutions of gone-by days with all his weapons of slaughtering invective. The tortures of the thumb-screw, the iron neck-collar with its piercing steely thorns, and the joint-severing rack, were dramatized in language fiercely tragic, and with gestured action correspondently effective. Now, to change the figure, if the learned lawyer, as criminal prosecutor, had only arraigned the right culprit, we should be perfectly willing to have the case submitted, without plea or protest, for the deserved sentence of capital punishment; but we would no more join with the Col. in clamoring to have Christ executed for the crimes of antichrist, than we would join the persecutors themselves in inflicting their hellish tortures and butcheries. It was far from being "honor-bright," to use a favorite phrase of the Col., but rather an unpardonable misrepresentation to charge to the account of Bible Christianity all the horrid tortures and murders of the infernal Roman Inquisition. The more thoughtless of the Colonel's applauding audience were led to conclude that it was from the infidel fraternity, as paragons of spotless moral purity, and, especially, as lights of knowledge far in advance of the dark superstitious age in which they lived, that the victims were furnished who suffered the torments of the thumb-screw, the iron collar, and the rack,—that the countless holocausts roasted alive were so many good humanitarians of the Col's infidel school. Our knowledge of history is limited. We tried hard to call up from memory a single example where one of this class had ever been so unfortunate as to get his thumb pinched in one of the thumb-screws of the Inquisition but could not. We are equally ignorant as to where and when one of these noble humanitarians were the iron necklace, or was extended on the racks of Roman cruelty. Thousands and millions of firm believers in Divine Revelation suffered, and, in our opinion, the crowns of martyrdom belong to this class and we have the right to protest against giving the coronals of those who, for the truth's sake, loved not their lives unto agonizing death, to infidels who draw money for a single evening lecture to the amount of from two hundred to five hundred dollars. Notwithstanding our ignorance, myriads of infidels may have sealed the testimony of their unbelief with their blood, and the Col. may have forgotten to give the examples. We heard of a man who went to do a full day's work mowing, who, when he got to the field, found he had forgotten his scythe and excused himself to his employer on the ground that he could not think of everything—we are well enough disposed to excuse the Col. on the same grounds, but indulge the hope that he will bring his scythe next time.

The open and oft-repeated plaudits from a large part of the audience demonstrated their appreciation of the orator; we, although one of the unfortunate, and insignificant objects of his withering lampoonry, could see some things in the Col. to appreciate, and, lastly, the Col. made it evident that he appreciated himself, as he said "he did not know but that he might be damned for his smartness." Well, notwithstanding all the appreciation, we share his fears. He related an anecdote concerning a certain Scotch woman of very exclusive faith, who was arguing her principles with another person, and that this person finally remarked to her, that she must think that herself and husband were the only ones who would ever be saved, and who, in turn, was astounded when the lady replied that "she was not altogether sure about John!" We are not altogether sure about Robert, honest-hearted as he claims to be. Supposing that the Col's. fears should finally be realized, and that death eternal should be his doom; what would be appropriate in memoriam?

The Christians chose Scripture expressions as sentiments to engrave upon the humble slabs above their martyred dead, but the Col. spurns this book, and so we have to ask whether the following lines from a heathen poet would be a fitting memento when this great light of the age shall have gone out? Without strictly attending to the laws of meter, we substitute R. G. Ingersoll for Quinctilium and read:—

"Ergo R. G. Ingersoll perpetuus sopor
Urget? cui pudor, et justitiæ soror
Incorrupta fides, nudaque veritas,
Quando ullum inveniet parem?"

Anglicised—"Does perpetual sleep at length oppress Col. R. G. Ingersoll? When will pure modesty, and incorruptible faith the sister of justice, and "Honor bright" truth ever find his equal?"

In answer to the question of our supposed epitaph there is a forlorn hope. It is claimed that even some stars have gone out in the heavens, but scientists tell us there is nebulous matter out of which to make myriads more of shining orbs. Possibly these the place of lost orbs may be more than filled up with marvelous creations of resplendency in the ages to come. Even so the Col. has taught us to indulge a slender hope for the re-appearance of some great humanitarian in the future who will perhaps fill the vacancy left should the Col., happen to so far overdo the tuing in Smartness as to be lost out of the universe as a penal consequence.

Although he discarded the theory of creation as propounded by Moses and thereby made us poor ignorant believers in Divine revelation and, yet in pity of our unenlightened condition he did not leave us without pointing out to us what he considered a more excellent way to account for the production of the great lights of the age like himself. He thought in the long ago there was probably "a wriggler that did not know that it wriggled," that through a certain process of "wriggling, creeping, crawling twisting, squirming, walking, hopping, jumping, running, skipping, leaping," etc, finally developed itself into that low type of man that made a certain "dug-out" that he had seen somewhere, and that this low type of man kept on boat-making till steamships and smart men like the Colonel were the outcome of all the transformation. Well, with the genealogy of the great lights of our age admitted, which the Colonel thought infinitely more worthy of our acceptance than the one our poor ignorant mothers taught us from the book of Genesis, we are left to indulge in the hope that there is yet lease another wriggler left somewhere in the great universe that will in the course of ages wriggle through all the ranks and orders of vermiculars, reptilians, batrachians, and anthropoids, and so on through another man in a dug-out, till at last, if the sun should not happen meanwhile to go out, another set of men whould grace this our world as the equals of the great lights that may disappear in consequence of a misuse of their talents for smartness. There were several other illuminations we should be very glad to make shine on our poor illiterned readers who have received Moses and the prophets, Jesus Christ and the apostles, as their teachers and guides but in consequence of not having been burnished up by infidel lectures we are not the proper reflectors to turn such brilliancy upon darkness.

To become serious, how sad it is to see brilliant talents perverted, and then employed for the undermining and destruction of what little true morality and religion there is left in the world. Who would surrender faith in God and his word, in Jesus Christ and his redemption, with all the joyous hopes of eternal life beyond the grave, for the empty vanid philosophy of Col. R. G. Ingersoll? We are no enemy to the gifted orator, and in closing say we wish he might learn the way of life and be saved.

Historical Era of Our Lord's Life.

That Christianity now exists in the world as a great moral force, controlling and shaping individual character and destiny, as well as exerting a mighty influence on the general history of mankind, is too obvious and indisputable a fact to need proof. It is also undeniable that it has become interwoven with everything that distinguishes the enlightened nations from the less civilized and the barbarous. It has become the very soul of all that is transcendently beautiful and sublime in literature; it has imbued legislation with a spirit of justice and mercy unknown to ancient tyrannies; it has softened the savage austerity of manners once prevalent; and, above all, has inspired humanity with the only intelligible and well-founded hopes and prospects of an endless future existence. This religion had an origin of some kind, and an important question to be answered historically is,—did it originate in that age of the world to which its votaries assign its commencement? Did our Lord live in that particular interval where it is claimed that Christianity commenced its career to expand into that great moral force it subsequently became to influence the destiny of untold millions through successive generations? We submit, in reply, the following conclusive argument from a volume now before us. Its concise force will commend it to attention:

Christianity exists now, and we know from Greek, Roman, and Jewish history that there was a time when it was not. The Jews were strictly forbidden to hold intercourse with foreigners; but, notwithstanding their exclusiveness, the Gentile writers often mention them. The founder of Christianity, at what time soever He lived, gave his followers a law the very reverse of exclusiveness, by going to all nations to make known his doctrines. Not a word about Christianity is mentioned by Cesaur, Cicero, Livy, Virgil, or Ovid, and to believe that it existed without being mentioned by them is preposterous credulity. A century after these writers, Christians are mentioned by Josephus, Tacitus, Pliny, and Suetonius, and the advent of their Master must have been in the interval. Four different accounts of the life and death of Christ are given; the difference of authorship is proved by apparent discrepancies, and the truthfulness is confirmed by the general harmony. Luke relates several dates with great minuteness, and this affords a strong argument of veracity. He says John commenced his preaching in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, and that soon after Jesus also commenced, when he was about thirty years of age. He also places this event a little before the death of Herod. Now, from Ptolemy's canon we know exactly the times of Augustus and Tiberius, and the time of the death of Herod is determined from Josephus. The time thus obtained for the origin of Christianity is just the interval of them Roman writers who do not mention it and those who do, and there is no other time possible that can be fixed upon for its origin. False religions may arise from small beginnings as well as true; the utmost care and caution are necessary to discriminate, and credulity is as culpable as scepticism. A remarkable dissimilarity is observed in the teaching of the founder of Islamism and of the Founder of Christianity. The former affirmed that he had interviews with heaven, and, without giving any proof of the truth of his assertion, condemned all who disbelieved him to future punishment. The latter never found any fault with the Jews for disbelieving his word, but for denying the evidences of their senses, or attributing His gracious miracles to demons. The Jews were trained from infancy to entertain the highest respect for the laws of Moses, and the most thorough contempt for all other religions. That a handful of persons thus trained should spontaneously arise and denounce those laws that they were taught to venerate is contrary to experience. No such example in the annals of history is anywhere found, and its occurrence would be as great a miracle as any in the Bible. No cause conceivable could effect such a change, except miracles addressed to the senses, or a direct voice from heaven; and those who deny miracles from experience, are compelled to admit a still greater miracle. Christianity certainly had an origin, and no other than that assigned to it would consist with experience. The books of the New Testament, also, can be proved to have been written in the first century, or not long after the events recorded in them. They could not have been written in the century before, for the events recorded did not then exist; neither could they have been written in the century after, for they are quoted and commented upon by a host of writers that then lived. The writers of the second century are quoted by those of the third; and thus a regular chain of writers, that has never been broken, never will, never can be broken, has been formed from the apostles to the present day.—Chronico Astrolabe, Lindsay.

When we read in history that Alexander the Great was born B. C. 356, and that the first lessons he learned were from the Iliad, that he ascended the throne at the age of 20, that he established his authority firmly over all Greece, that he then prosecuted a war against Persia, that he founded the city Alexandria in Egypt, and that finally he overthrew the Persian Monarchy in the famous battle near Arpela in October 331, and that he closed his eventful though short career at Babylon in 323, we give full credence to all the particulars of the narrative. Alexander's reign was one of the grandest turning points in the world's history. From his time the fortunes of the East and the West have become blended, and the history of Europe cannot be written independently of its connection with the history of Asia. Though his lifetime was only about thirty-three years, yet its chronological place in history is immovably fixed.

His youthful instructors, Lysimachus and Aristotle, lived at that period. It was then that Demosthenes, the prince of oratory and patron of free institutions, was pleading the cause of liberty before her forum was entombed after the overthrow of the Greek communities, by the conqueror's crushing power. It was then, and then only, that the vanquished king, Darius III., reigned in Persia. It was then, and not before, that Alexandria was founded, a city that has perpetuated the name of its founder through all intervening ages to our times.

Now the life of the Messiah is not only as firmly and definitely fixed to the period between B. C. 5, and A. D. 34, as Alexander's is between B. C. 356 and 323, but the events and transactions connected with the life of our Lord are even more fully authenticated than the undoubted events and transactions connected with the life of Alexander the Great. Historically viewed, there is no more of credulity in believing the Gospel narative, than in believing the narative that record the exploits and conquests of Alexander.

Another of the world's heroes and conquerors was born B. C. 100, and assassinated B. C. 44. During his triumphant career the history of Europe, of Rome, and of the world, was changed. No student of the past doubts that Julius Cæsar lived, made his conquests, and reigned at Rome during the sixty-six years of the above chronological period. Not only are the very year and the very month given when the great events connected with his life-history transpired, but often the very day of the month is fixed. An important reformation of the calendar was introduced by him. As a general no one has ever surpassed him unless perhaps Napoleon; and no one who reads the records of the past is any more doubtful about Cæsar's victorious conquests than about the events of Napoleon's wonderful career.

Now when we are told that Alexander died of a fever contracted in the marshes of Babylon that was fatally heightened by his own excesses, no one is disposed to contradict the statement. That Cæsar fell, transfixed by twenty-three wounds, at the foot of the statue of Pompey in the Senate house of Rome is universally admitted. That Napoleon died on the island of St. Helena is unquestioned.

Now that Christ died on the cross at Jerusalem is as well authenticated as any event that ever transpired. That he rose from the dead is as fully authenticated as that he was born and lived. Absolute knowledge is fundamental in all history in the first place. That Alexander lived, that he became a monarch and a conqueror, and that he died at Babylon were known facts before they ever became history; and the history of the world, since his time would be inexplicable on the supposition that Alexander the Great never had an existence. His cotemporaries knew him personally, and knew that he conquered a large part of the then known world. Our historical knowledge is simply their personal knowledge recorded and thus transmitted to succeeding times; and it is confirmed by the whole subsequent course of events. So the personal knowledge of those who were "eye witnesses" of the exploits of Julius Cæsar is the foundation upon which the historical knowledge of all succeeding generations rests. To interpret the history of Imperial Rome, and, indeed, of Europe for nearly twenty centuries would be impossible if Julius Cæsar were left out of the account as a myth. It was just as surely a matter of personal knowledge to the inhabitants of Jerusalem and the surrounding countries, in the first century of our era, that Jesus Christ lived, and performed the wonderful acts ascribed to him. The first records were made by "eye witnesses" who had a perfect knowledge of all they recorded—men that spake what they knew, and testified what they had seen. They were as capable of knowing that a man blind from his birth had been miraculously made to see as we now are. It was not an isolated miracle, about which a mistake might have been possible, that challenged the faith of the multitudes that attended upon our Lord's ministry. To perform miracles was, in great part, his life work. Men were forced to believe in his miraculous power contrary to their inclination,—they knew because they saw—they could not deny the evidence of their own senses. The apostles, and the five hundred others, knew that it was the same Jesus, after his resurrection, that they had been conversant with before his crucifixion.

The history of the world would be a thousand times more inexplicable, to leave Christ out, than the history of Europe today would be with the career of Napoleon left out, or the history of the United States with Washington left out. If the existence and life work of any person is historically demonstrable, it is the existence and life-work of the Son of God.

THE following article which we clip from the last New York Weekly Witness, is said to have been carefully prepared by a gentlemen well acquainted with the nations of Continental Europe from information obtained through reliable channels from trustworthy sources. It presents the darkest picture of depraved human nature that has ever come before our contemplation. The time of trouble impends, such as never was since there was a nation. Well did our Savior enjoin upon us watchfulness and prayer, that we might escape all these things that are coming on the earth, and stand before the Son of man.

"Earth, what a trial lies before thee;
None like it in the shadowy past;
Of all the throes that ever tore thee,
E'en though the direst is the last!
I hear the moaning and the sighing,
I see the hot tears heavy fall.
The thousand agonies of dying—
Oh, shall I be beyond them all?"

NIHILISM.

Prosecutions lately opened in Berlin, against three young men students, all Jews, have clearly shown that the socialist, revolutionary Russian party is in frequent connection with the political refugees abroad, and generally all malcontents, and that thereby a very active agitation is entertained, the ramifications of which reach very far. The principal object of these affiliations is to spread out revolutionary pamphlets.

A program on the spirit and object of Nihilism was found during the above prosecutions. I give here an extract of it. Readers, open your eyes and ears.

"We have to be guided solely by the utility which revolution may derive from the death of certain persons. Foremost of all, those persons are to die who are the most dangerous for the organization of the revolution—those persons the death of whom, sudden or violent, may frighten to the highest degree the government and shake its power, by taking away from it its most intelligent and energetic agents."

"The only revolution which may secure the welfare of the people is the one which destroys down to the last roots the idea of State; which overturns from top to bottom all Russian traditions, institutions or classes. No association shall be imposed on the people from above; its organization will have to issue from the life of the people—we have to leave this to future generations. Our business is the most frightening, pitiless and universal destruction; the concentration of an invincible power to overturn everything. This is our organization, our conspiracy, our task."

In a paper clandestinely imported into Prussia, an association for the overthrow of social order is recommended, especially to young men; it shows at no distant period the raising of the standard of the German Socialist Democracy for battle, and proclaims the revolutionary social solidarity of all countries. An appeal to the Jewish youth (the Jews seem to play an important part in the movement) says: "The old world is full of lies and oppression. Destroy it; on its ruins the red flag of social revolution will be unfurled, with a radiant light behind it."

The Nihilist confession or creed, compiled from original but reliable sources, is as follows:

1. The "ideals" of the Liberals and those of the Republicans are but Mother Goose tales.

2. Garibaldi and Felix Pyat (the desperate, the atheist Pyat) are old fogies.

3. The Commune of Paris, in 1871, deserves some approbation on the part of Nihilists, because its fires threw for the future a ray of light; but it is in itself insufficient, because it has made no decisive step. It had in view a social revolution, but dared not accomplish it. The measures taken by the Commune were but half measures, for she shot the hostages only by dozens. A war without mercy is necessarily to be waged by spoliation, fire, pillage and murder. Such a war should be one to fight everything existing; to overthrow everything, to demolish the whole edifice of modern society.

4. The Nihilists demand the destruction of the middle classes, and the old world is to be hurled in its ashes.

5. The Nihilists demand the confiscation of property, and the abolition of any rights of private ownership.

6. The Nihilists demand the abolition of the family and the suppression of religion, and the abolition of liberty to continue such nonsense.

7. This program is to be realized with the aid of the Poles, and to spread terror over all such as do not share their opinion.

8. The Nihilists want to annihilate everything which they may find in the way of the execution of their program—persons, things, institutions.

9. He who is not for the Nihilists is against them, and is to fall by the bullets of their revolvers.

From the above it may be seen that Nihilism cannot be called a party—not even a faction. It is simply banditism under a modern name. At all times and in all countries, the spirit of rebellion has produced similar extremists, but what makes them more dangerous for Russia is, that they find beyond her limits support in the revolutionary party, which, in one way or in another, and under various names, is conspiring against both state and people.

THE POPE'S HEALTH.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—A despatch from Rome to the Pall Mall Gazette says: "The condition of the Pope's health is causing anxiety. He suffers from fits of shivering and great prostration, but persists in his usual occupations."

What a Barrel of Beer Did.

A hard working man and his wife having accumulated some money bought a lot and built a house upon it. Like most property it was mortgaged. They prospered, the man having steady work, but in an evil moment they concluded to start a saloon. The rest is soon told. Dissipation followed, and both father and mother became drunkards. The property soon passed out of their hands, and they eked out a miserable existence in tenement houses. After a time the man sobered up, and once more he looked and acted the man; but again the tempter came in the shape of a beer agent, who advanced him a barrel of beer to start a saloon with. He accepted and moved his family, wife and two bright children into the saloon. Drunkenness followed, both drinking to excess, and in less than one week the father was in jail, the mother in the insane asylum, and the children in the poor-house.

Meteorological tables have been published in England, showing that 1870, which closed with a series of awful and devastating storms, was one of the most remarkable years of the present century in England. Comparisons have been made as to the rainfall of 1870 with that of sixty-four years back, and it has been found that during the first nine months of the past year no less than 200 inches of rain fell, while the nearest approach to that amount was in 1828, and then it was two and one half inches short. During the quarter ending with September rain fell in fifty-three out of seventy-eight days, the total amount being 11.75 inches. In April, May, and June rain fell almost constantly, and the sun was but rarely seen. The month of July was the most remarkable on record, rain falling every day during the first half of the month, turning to snow in some districts on the 4th, 5th, and 6th. August brought a change for the better, and agriculturists began to think that their misery was over. It is a sudden change took place toward the end, and at its close all hope of saving even a moderate harvest was blighted.

POETRY.

A Little Longer.

Yet a little longer labor,
Toil, for day is not yet done;
For the rest that you are longing,
You must wait till set of sun.

Yet a little longer labor,
Sow the seed in many a field;
Somewhere still a golden harvest
Waits its ripening grain to yield.

Yet a little longer labor,
Stay with patience at the gate;
Angels will undo the portal
If you labor while you wait.

Yet a little longer labor;
You must take of grief your share;
Yet your Father will not give you
Greater than your strength can bear.

Yet a little longer labor
Through the cold of icy-gone years,
For, the happy moments gathered,
All too short the Day appears.

Yet a little longer labor;
Day by day and year by year,
Nearer, by our heart's devotions,
Will the golden gates appear.

Nearer, by our prayers, the praises;
Nearer, by our songs, the sun;
If we falter while we say them,
Something will be left undone.

Yet a little—and the longest
Day of all our life is done;
The long journey is accomplished,
And Heaven's glory is begun!

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I can praise the Lord for Brother Paul's blessed hope of the gospel, for he says: "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me which the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." I do know I love his appearing. We were among those that took their lamps—the Bible—to meet the Bridegroom in forty-three. That proclamation will never be forgotten by those that heard it, and obeyed it. It was a heart searching doctrine; it stirred the world and the church as nothing ever had since the day of Pentecost; and, I think, never will again till that mighty trump shall sound through earth and sea, and bid the sleeping saints arise and come forth and put on beautiful bridal robes to appear at the marriage of the Lamb. Oh, what honor and royalty, to be a guest at the marriage of one that is Lord of lords and King of kings. The signs in the heavens above and the earth beneath, show us that that day is right upon us. Yes, the stone that was cut out of the mountain without hands is about to strike the image on its feet, where all the fragments is centered in the iron and miry clay. And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. This is Christ's kingdom. "And I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days. And they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve and obey him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. And the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." Praise the Lord for such a blessed promise as this, to be made an heir of God and joint heir of Jesus Christ his Son, to such an incorruptible inheritance that will never pass away, who are kept by the power of God through faith, ready to be revealed in the last time.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, when we are looking for such things, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness? How much we need to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, and put on the whole armor of God that you may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, the most mighty weapon in the whole world, and, having on the breast-plate of righteousness and your feet shod with preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, and take the helmet of salvation and sword of the spirit, which is the word of God. Now may the God of peace sanctify us wholly and keep us blameless unto his heavenly kingdom, is the prayer of one looking for the King of Israel.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find two dollars for THE RESTITUTION for one year. There are a goodly number of brethren in this vicinity. Bro. Foore preaches at our school house once a month to an intelligent audience, and we trust his labors are not in vain as several are investigating the subject as shown in the new light.

Yours in hope of life everlasting.

Editor Restitution:—THE RESTITUTION is a welcome visitor to me; the Bible is a new book to me since I have discarded the sectarian priestcraft and obeyed the Gospel of the kingdom. May the Lord hasten the restitution age when our Deliverer shall come and restore all things. What a glorious thought to think what is in reserve for us if we only live faithful. May the Lord help us so to live that we may be prepared to meet each other in the kingdom of our Lord is my prayer.

Editor Restitution:—I am almost alone in the truth in this community, a village of 3,000 inhabitants, and a very moral place. Three church houses, Babtist, Methodist and Christian. I am a member of the Christian church here, but cannot endorse all they teach. Would there be any chance to get Brother J. M. Stephenson to come here and hold a meeting for us? I think he might do much good as they are reading people here, but have been badly taught. I could promise Brother Stephenson traveling expenses and fare while here. I would pay that myself. Please let me hear from you by private letter, and much oblige,

Yours in the hope,

Editor Restitution:—It is now about five years since I have written to THE RESTITUTION and perhaps some would like to know what has become of me; well, I live in Benevaista county, Iowa, my postoffice is Newell. I have done but little for the cause of truth compared with the time I have been here, yet I have labored some, and have some fruits of our labors. Twelve miles north of here, we held meetings resulting in good, fourteen have been baptized into Christ, five baptized believers have moved into that neighborhood making now nineteen in all that place who are getting ready to meet the Lord. I have baptized sixteen since I came here. There are about thirty of the one faith in the county. I have labored but little from the fact I have have had to support my family and make a farm out of raw material, which I went in debt for to start with, then, the second year, the grass hoppers scourged us so that with some other bad luck I got financially embarassed and am yet to some extent. I hope the worst is over, and that I shall be able to do more for the cause of truth in the future. Here with I send $2 to apply on my subscription. THE RESTITUTION is a most welcome visitor to us, we take great comfort in reading from the letter drawer those little epistles from the dear ones who are getting ready to meet the blessed Lord and share his glory. Yours in hope of eternal life at the appearing of the King.

T. J. WHITESITT.

Editor Restitution:—We are intending, a number of families of us, all believers, to emigrate to Oregon or Washington Territory the coming spring. We have lived here in southeast Kansas for six years. My father, George Pickett, is a preacher, and has in charge a church of some eighty members. We are all farmers, and should like to settle where there are those of like faith. Any brother or sister reading this will do us a favor by answering through THE RESTITUTION or to our address. We should like to know the state of society as regards religion, education, health, etc. Also as to the improvements of the country, the price of land, etc. The price of produce, live stock, what wages are, and all things concerning the country that would be of interest to those desiring to make a home.

Please allow this a place in THE RESTITUTION, and oblige your sister,

SELECTIONS.

(Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.)

THE MOMENTOUS DECADE.

The Flight of Time---What Will the Eighties Bring Forth---Murmurings of Approaching Storm---An Eternal Name.

The velocity with which Father Time flies is most apparent to those who look back; but with all his celerity, he moves but slowly and heavily forward to the man whose whole employment is to watch his flight. Time is often blamed as if he were a great thief; it is people's own fault. Use him well, and you will get from his hand more than ever he will take from yours.

The epoch in which we live is characterized by deep solemnity and attended by serious circumstances. There is a growing conviction among the people of God that every year, yea, every day and hour, brings us with accelerated speed nearer to the great crisis of the world's history. These are times to make all men think, Christian men especially so; for there is nothing more manifest than that the King of kings is marshalling his armies, preparing his way, and maturing all things for his second advent in glory.

The decade of the eighteen hundred and seventies is now a thing of the past, and we have entered on the momentous decade of the eighteen hundred and eighties, during which the concluding events of the present Gentile dispensation associated with the second advent of Christ are expected by prophetic expositors to be likely to occur. It is, in fact, probable that the decade of ten years from 1880 to 1890 will be signalized by the most unprecedented and momentous occurrences that have ever transpired during the whole 6000 years of the history of mankind.

The year on which we have entered will, we doubt not, be most pregnant with stirring events. The revolutionary spirit of the age has faith in nothing but itself, and is laying violent hands on all existing institutions, while an invisible hand seems writing upon every edifice the sentence that startled the Chaldean monarch in the hour of his godless revelry. There can be little hesitation in saying that we have arrived at an epoch in the history of the world in which one of those mighty revolutions, happily rare in the annals of mankind, is impending. Human society, long troubled with a malaise of discomfort, is now, as it were, convulsed with birth-pangs.

There are lamentings and fears all around us, and to be heard on every side, indicating that there is now stealing over the minds and hearts of the many who have slept too long in the lap of self-indulgence and carnal security a presentiment of imminent calamity; that before long that sinful sleep will be roughly broken by him who is about once more not only to shake the earth, but also heaven. But, "to the upright there ariseth light in the darkness," and the believer in the Lord knows that when this earthly house is shaken and the old roof falls away, the house not made with hands will display itself in its spiritual symmetry, its imperial beauty, and its abiding strength, and that it will inclose him forever within its "everlasting doors."

How cheering the hope, amidst the din of war, the acclamations of false joy, the yell of idolatry, and the groans of creation, that a period is hastening when the fleeting shadows and phantoms of the night shall have vanished, and peace shall stretch her shady wings over the sons of men; when rivers of joy shall water this vale of tears; when Cherubim to Cherubim shall cry, Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord God of Hosts, the whole earth is full of his glory (Isaiah vi.).

Shall, then, the Christian fill his mouth with dust and his heart with rubbish, occupying his time with that which is not bread, while the true manna of the kingdom is his for the taking, and golden joys and pleasures are his forever? Nay, nay! would it not be better that, instead of our Lord sighing over us, we were found sighing and crying for the abominations that exist, having no part or lot in any of them; being like men that wait for their Lord, that whether he come in the first watch or the second watch, we may be found waiting and longing for his appearing? (Ezek. ix.).

Till then the Spirit and the Bride, looking heavenward, say "Come;" the individual believer, taking up the cry, says "Come." And whosoever desires him, and is athirst for him, let him too join the cry, and say "Come." "He who testifieth these things saith, 'Behold I come suddenly.' Amen; even so come, Lord Jesus."

How important it is to determine whether we are the friends or the enemies of Christ—whether we have a saving interest in him! Is he "made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption?" If so, during the year 1880 let our gratitude be testified by a thankful acknowledgment, by a public confession of Christ, by fervent devotion and self-sacrifice, and by an entire acquiescence in the design of his death.

Every thing in this transitory world is constantly shifting and changing. Those things which seem most likely to continue are destined to perish.

Names, however great in reputation or in history, may be forgotten, but the name of Jesus will be immortally remembered. Prophecy said of him, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest." His name is great in the imperishable fulness of its meaning, in the peerless character it represents, in the unutterable grandeur of its associations, in the perennial efficacy it imparts, in the radiant hope it inspires, in the priceless blessings it reveals, and in the unfailing perpetuity with which it is invested. "His name shall endure forever." Cities may be laid waste, empires may rise and decay, crowns may rust and thrones crumble into dust, but "his name shall endure" (Psalm lxxii. 17).

When the names of philosophers, heroes, statesmen, and kings have perished, "his name shall endure, and men shall be blessed in him." His name alone is excellent in all the earth, and shall go down the accumulating ages, gathering influence and fragrance with the flight of years, and awaken new songs of joy among the nations of the saved. His dear name is more effulgent than the sun, more replete with blessings than the earth, and shall survive the wreck of the highest mountain or the deepest rock. "It hath pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. ii. 8-11).

If Jesus be your Friend, Savior, Brother, then, dear reader, whatever may be woven by the Divine Artificer in the hidden loom of the future, the year will be to you a happy and most blessed one, and your destiny the eternal companionship of him who is the altogether lovely, "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever."

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

First understand then argue.

He who blackens others, does not whiten himself.

A man should not praise his works but his works should praise him.

Most of the shadows that cross our path through life are caused by our standing in our own light.

Men may judge us by the success of our efforts. God looks at the efforts themselves.

As every thread of gold is valuable, so is every moment of time.

There is many a gem in the path of life,
Which we pass in our idle pleasure,
That is richer far than the jeweled crown
Or the miser's hoarded treasure;
It may be the love of a little child,
Or a mother's prayer to heaven,
Or only a beggar's grateful thanks
For a cup of water given.

If a man can be happy and contented in his own company, he will generally be good company for others.

It is better to preach the whole gospel of Christ in a humble tent than to preach a partial gospel in a gorgeous temple.

We should accustom ourselves to view those above us without admiration or envy, and never look upon those below us with contempt. Little souls fall down and worship grandeur without reflecting that admiration is due only to virtue and goodness.

A thousand wheels of labor are turned by dear affections and kept in motion by self-sacrificing endurance; and the crowd that pour forth in the morning and return at night are daily processions of love and duty.

He who approbates wickedness condemns himself.

Oh, say not life is dark!
There's brightness for us all;
For you and me and every one
The warming sun-rays fall;
The moon and stars at night thy path illume as well as mine,
For you and me and every one
The beams of pleasure shine.

There is a pleasure in contemplating good; there is a greater pleasure in receiving good; but the greatest pleasure of all is in doing good, which comprehends the rest.

Learn in childhood, if you can, that happiness is not outside, but inside. A good heart and a clear conscience bring happiness, which no riches and no circumstances alone ever do.

If you can not in the conflict
Prove yourself a soldier true—
If where fire and smoke are thickest,
There's no work for you to do;
When the battle field is silent,
You can go with silent tread,
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead.

Every one who is trying to lead a good life, should also try to lead a winsome and courteous life. By abandoning gentleness of disposition and graciousness of word and deed, he throws away a means of growth and an effective weapon. Coarse Christians little know often how they play into the enemy's hands. It is almost always a grave mistake, in a matter of manners, or in any other matter to try to put yourself on other people's level. If you are trying to do right, the chances are that, by adopting a coarse manner of speech or action, you will degrade yourself, both in your own eyes and in those of him whom you are trying to reach and yet will fail in the good you seek.

It is better to sit on the ground with freedom of speech than to recline in a palace with the lips sealed.

Beyond the dark and wintry days,
Beyond the cold and ghastly snow,
We see the glowing of the rays,
The coming joys which never go.
Behind the gates where Christ will lead
The ransomed ever free from grief,
The tree of life will pleasures yield,
And health will come from fadeless leaf."

According to Le Peterin, an Ultramontane periodical, enjoying a large circulation in orthodox French circles, and laying claim to derive its information upon religious subjects from altogether exclusive sources, Pius IX., upon entering Paradise shortly after his demise, was there received with somewhat exceptional honors. We subjoin in literal translation the account of his reception printed in the Peterin, and purporting to be the faithful reproduction of a communication "received from the highest authority." "When Pio Nono entered Paradise he at once obtained a crown from the hand of the Immaculate Virgin, as a reward for the crown which he had bestowed upon her during his sojourn upon earth. St. Joseph, whom he had made patron and protector of the Church, shook him heartily by the hand and thanked him. Then St. Peter gave out the key in which the hymn of welcome was to be sung, and the celestial choir chanted it, while Francis de Sales and Alfonso Ligouri, whom he had formerly proclaimed teachers of the Church, alternately recited in laudatory terms the deeds and achievements of his Pontificate. Fifty-two saints and twenty-six of the blessed, all of whom owe their present position to Pius IX., greeted him with harmonious choruses."

Numerous cases of depredations by wolves have recently occurred in Hungary. A band of these animals passed through one of the suburbs of Temesvar, destroying any animal which was not housed. A clergyman who was returning home in a sledge from a neighboring town was beset by a pack of wolves. He bade the driver make all possible speed; but at a sharp turning the sledge was upset, the clergyman was thrown out, and torn to pieces before the eyes of the terified driver. In a country village a few wolves came boldly at mid-day into the inn yard and devoured an ass; and at Szalonta a shepherd was killed and eaten as he was passing along the road at night.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The quarterly assembly of the Church of God will, if the Lord will, commence near Brownsville, Warren county, Va., on Saturday night before the second Sunday in February, and will continue over Sunday. All of the one faith are invited to the feast, irrespective of difference of opinion on any subject that does not form a feature in the faith once delivered to the saints.

J. N. MORGAN.

We will commence a series of lectures in Lanark, Ill., Feb. 7, and continue about two weeks. And by request of the brethren at East Plum River, will attend the conference to be held there Feb. 20, 21 and 22, if no preventing providence.

J. W. HAYCRAFT.

The Lord willing there will be a conference at East Plum River, Carroll county, Ill., to commence Friday evening, at 7 o'clock, Feb. 20, 1880, and continue over Sunday. Conference district is northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. Bro. Hughamer and others are expected to be present to preach the word. Those coming by rail will stop off at Lanark. It is desired that those who want conveyance from Lanark to the place of meeting should correspond with one of the following persons: S. P. Renner or M. M. Mitchell, Lanark, Shepherdson county, Ill., or J. B. Arnold, Mt. Carroll, Carroll county, Ill. A general invitation is extended to all to come and help along with the meeting. By order of committee,

J. S. ARNOLD.

RESTITUTION FUND.

ANSON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Editor Restitution.—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and insure its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $2.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brethren, I can say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that nonsense weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment: are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $2.00, and will they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $3.00 to commence. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. Good-farewell.

ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

POETRY.

Beyond.

Beyond life's toils and cares,
Its hopes and joys, its weariness and sorrow,
Its sleepless nights, its days of smiles and tears,
Well be a long sweet life, unmarked by years,
One bright unending morrow.

Beyond time's troubled stream,
Beyond the chilling waves of death's dark river,
Beyond life's lowering clouds, and fitful gleams,
Its dark realities and brighter dreams,
So beautiful forever.

No aching hearts are there.
No tear-dimmed eye, no form by sickness wasted,
No cheek grown pale thro' pining or thro' care,
No spirits crushed beneath the woes they bear,
No signs for bliss untasted.

No sad farewell is heard,
No lonely wail for lovlier ones departed,
No dark remorse is there o'er memory's record stirred,
No smile of scorn, no harsh or cruel word,
To grieve the broken-hearted.

No long dark night is there.
No light from sun or silvery moon is given,
But Christ, the Lamb of God, all bright and fair,
Illumes the city with effulgence rare,
The glorious light of heaven!

No mortal eye hath seen
The glories of that land beyond the river,
Its crystal lakes, its fields of living green,
Its fadeless flowers and the unchanging sheen
Around the throne forever.

Ear hath not heard the song
Of rapturous praise within that shining portal,
No heart of man hath dreamed what joy belongs
To that redeemed and happy blood-washed throng
All glorious and immortal.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Character and Proximity.—No. 5.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Having shown that the coming epoch is a geological age and identified the new heavens and the new earth as the present heavens and earth restored, it is our purpose to show in what particulars the new order is superior to the present arrangement.

1. It is superior in its atmosphere or heavens.—The atmosphere is the earth's invisible covering—a fluid globe with the earth for its solid centre. Like it we understand the new heavens and the new earth to be constructed.

What elementary change will take place in the atmosphere we are not prepared to say; or whether it shall be composed of the two elements in their present ratio is not stated; it will be so altered, however, and so perfectly adapted to its new state as justly to be called a new atmosphere.

Wherein will the new atmosphere be an improvement on the present? This question we may not fully answer; still, we will attempt an approximation. Should the atmosphere be changed in its elementary structure, its oxygen will probably be increased, adding to its life-sustaining power.

1. One element of superior excellency will be in its purity. Like a sponge it absorbs all the gaseous exhalations of the earth. The new atmosphere must be free from such impurities. The air as now formed, is subject to the most dangerous meteoric phenomena; it is subject to violent, and even poisonous winds, raging storms; it is the home of frost, snow and destructive hail—the prison of fallen spirits. From these the new heavens must be free, since sickness and death are there unknown.

2. It must be uniform in its density.—This change in pressure gives rise to and is a fruitful source of, the atmospheric meteors so destructive to human life—the rushing winds, tornadoes, water-spouts, electrical phenomena, and other irregularities.

3. It requires a uniform temperature. Sudden changes are destructive to health, and life. For happy immortal beings, uniform temperature would be necessary.

It is evident, that our atmosphere, cleansed from all impurities and made uniform in its density and in its temperature, would be a new atmosphere—a new heavens. Nothing short of these great and radical changes would fit it for the use of immortal beings. This element, surrounding the globe as it does, must be a pure, uniform fountain of life and health.

Its purity, uniform density and temperature, must, in the coming age have no local exception, for its population spreads through every degree of latitude and longitude. With such an atmosphere over them, they would breathe the elements of a perfect vitality. Such an atmosphere would be adapted to man in his highest type of life. Who is there, that cannot appreciate the necessity of such changes in the atmosphere of the coming age; an age fitted up expressly for the eternal abods of righteousness?

True, our atmosphere may be suited to man in a fallen, corrupted and dying state; but it has no fitness for a pure and immortal family; in a place where disease and wasting are excluded.

What is our atmosphere? The general receptacle of the earth's pollutions; "The habitation of demons, the hold of every foul spirit, the cage of every unclean and hateful bird;" tainted with every putrid breath; moved by oaths and blasphemy; by the cries of agony, and the outbursts of mirth and revelry; trembling with the efforts of man immortal strife, and at the cannon's deadly roar; filled with malaria, and carrier of all mortal diseases; the sport of wind and storm; the sirocco, Euroclydon, and the Samiel; the razor of the arctics, the breath of every land and the receiver of every land's breath. Every meteor is at home in it, and every noxious exhalation enters it at pleasure.

No surprise that Peter should long for the day when the heavens (our atmosphere) ladened with the corruptions of forty centuries, being on fire, should pass away in the manner of a storm, and give place to the new heavens.

2. The new is, therefore, superior to the present in its heavens. It is also vastly more excellent in its internal arrangements. The first we shall notice is,

Its waters.—To show their excellence, let us compare the waters of the present and coming ages.

Our waters, like our atmosphere, are full of impurities. These foreign elements are divided into three classes,—mineral, animal, and vegetable.

Our waters are imperfect, therefore, in quality. Water is the only drink, made expressly for man's use. Freed from foreign elements, it is refreshing, cleansing in its nature, and health-preserving; but as it exists in nature its use is liable to create disease; and in no way suitable to wants of the coming age.

All wells and fountains hold in solution, mineral products, many of which are poisonous to the human system. They contain also decaying animal and vegetable matter, destructive to health. Our streams, tainted at their sources, gather impurities as they flow, spreading disease and death along their channels. Our fresh waters are death waters. Our seas and oceans are useless, only as highways of commerce. As the home of the cyclone, they are the cemeteries of the watery-curtained sleepers.

2. Our waters are defective in their distribution. The inhabitants of this age are imperfectly supplied. Our streams, though many, are unequal. Dependent, in their supply, upon the clouds, they are messengers of destruction, by their floods or simply bottom upwards.

Large tracts are sandy wastes; others in everlasting chains of frost. The waters are perpetually frozen—icemantles, suited to no practical use.

Our waters are the sportive element of the winds, piled up in mountains, smoothed into glossy plains, or chopped into an endless variety of smaller inequalities; it is restless and destructive. It may, in some degree, subserve the wants of a probationary age, but is by no means adapted to a people under the rule of righteousness.

The waters of the new earth are possessed of a new principle—a life-giving power. The waters of the coming age are fully described in the divine record. Let us read: "Afterward he brought again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward; for the front of the house (stood) toward the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south of the altar. Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the outer gate by the way that looketh eastward, and, behold, ran out waters on the right side" (of the house).

And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters (were) to the ankles.

Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters (were) to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters (were) to the loins.

Afterward he measured a thousand; (and it was) a river that I could not pass over; for the waters were risen—waters to swim in—a river that could not be passed over.

And he said unto me, Son of Man, hast thou seen? (this). Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river. Now when I had returned, behold, on the bank of the river (were) very many trees on the one side and on the other.

Then said he unto me, these waters issue out towards the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea; (which being) brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.

And it shall come to pass, (that) everything that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live; and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither, for they shall be healed; and everything shall live whither the river cometh.

And it shall come to pass, (that) the fishes shall stand upon it from Engedi even unto Eneglaim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceedingly many.

But the miry places thereof and the marshes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt.

And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters issued out of the sanctuary; and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine."

Vision of the waters.—What are these waters? Are they literal waters? or does the vision require a different interpretation? There is no attribute ascribed to the waters, not inherent in that element in its purity. It heals other waters by cleansing them of their impurities. The sea of Arabah, whose waters are poisonous to every species of life, is healed. These vision waters, however, according to the laws of symbolization, are symbolic. So, also, must be the resurrection, people, land, city, and its temple; and, indeed, everything seen or heard. But the query still remains: of what are they symbols? The series of visions begins with the 37th chapter and continues to the close of the Book. One law, therefore, governs the entire series. What is that law? All the objects seen in vision are symbolic; but, the valley of dry bones, the armies, the land, the city, and the temple, and the waters are seen in vision; therefore, they are symbolic. Of what are they symbols? These twelve chapters contain seven symbols demanding special notice:

1. The valley of dry bones, in which a resurrection is seen. This is explained to be the resurrection and return to their own land, of the whole house of Israel. The prophet sees in vision a real event that was to transpire at some future time. The symbol and the event are here identical.

2. The two sticks, are symbols of the twelve tribes, in two divisions—two tribes, and ten tribes. The union of the sticks is explained to be the union of the two nations in one, an event to transpire after their resurrection and return to their own land.

3. The invasion of Gog and his confederate.—This describes a literal invasion, of a literal land, by a real people. The events are to be literally understood. Of this there can be no question.

4. A temple is seen in vision. This temple is fully described, and the prophet was directed to show the house to the house of Israel, and let them measure the pattern. This was the pattern of some future temple, to be for the house of Israel after their return from captivity.

5. The lands of Israel is divided.—Each of the twelve tribes has his portion of the land—a rectangle—twenty miles by 160 miles, beginning on the north, with Dan, and terminating on the south with Gad. The divisions are evidently literal, and such as never yet has taken place.

6. The city is also described.—The city is square, the length of each side being 4,500 measures, having three gates in each side named after the tribes of Israel. The city was about nine miles square or about nine times the extent to which Jerusalem ever attained.

7. The waters were seen and measured.—We have seen that six particulars seem to be literal. Why not the waters? The events here noticed by the prophet, belong to the morning of the coming age—which is the era of conflict and subjugation. They seem to refer to the literal Israel, and describe their resurrection, conflicts, settlement and prosperity. The land becomes productive. The curse is removed, and its waters pure and cleansing. This work of subjugation progresses till the whole earth is made [illegible] The waters are pure and life-giving.

God and Mammon.

No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. Matt. vi. 24.

Jesus our divine teacher, in giving his people a kind and timely warning, uses very plain and emphatic language, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Now, there is one important point settled, and that by the very best of authority, and there is no use for any one to deceive themselves in trying to serve God and mammon, as it cannot be done. This being true, it becomes us to earnestly and honestly enquire, what is mammon? Answer: The riches of this world, which the multiplied thousands are serving with their time, mind and might—for he is a hard master to serve—never satisfied. Jesus the son of God; the way, the truth and the life, our great teacher, the teacher of ages times, though whom the great God is speaking to us in these last days, and commands us to hear him or be destroyed from among the people, in his most excellent discourse from his lofty pulpit in giving a way bill of life to guide men and women through this world to the world to come, forbids them being over anxious about the things of this world, such as food and raiment, thereby teaching a lesson of humility and trust, for it certainly is but reasonable that dutiful children should trust a kind parent, whose very nature is love, and whose watch, care and protection is over all his creatures. The little birds that ilit about rending their lays in warbling sweet songs of praise are cared for, and fed from our fathers storehouse. "Are ye not much better than they?" Jesus would rebuke you more professed Christians of our time who worry and fret almost day and night over the things of this life, by saying, "O ye of little faith."

But, prominent among the many duties and warnings that fell from our Master's lips for our instruction and eternal welfare, is the danger of heaping up riches and evilly treasures here—below. Certainly none were better qualified to teach and caution on this subject than our Master, who, just a few day's previous, had been tried and tested most thoroughly by having this big world and all its contents rolled up before him as an inducement to follow and worship the arch deceiver, thereby sin and fall as the first man, Adam, fell. But thanks be to God, Jesus our captain, successfully resisted the tempter, and overcome all his cunning wiles, and is accepted of his righteous father, being seated at his right hand in the heavens, from whence he sends a word of consolation back to his people, who are striving to follow their leader and gain the prize. Listen to his voice, all ye tempted and sorely tried ones. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Glorious consummation.

1. Who will be found worthy? Those only who follow the Lamb and keep his works to the end, resisting the temptation as he did.

Please listen again to our teacher whose words must judge us in the last day. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal. But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal, for where your treasure is there will your heart be also." Those who worry and toil for earthly treasures, heaping up riches against the last day, are serving mammon most successfully, but not God, for Jesus declares "ye cannot serve God and mammon."

There is one class brought to view in the parable of the sower, who hear with delight the word of the kingdom, love and lay hold on it, yet the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, (like thorns and thistles among wheat,) choke out the word, and he becometh unfruitful. There is great danger here whether we hold much of this world's goods or no, but the more we have, the greater temptation, hence the greater danger. If not, why so many warnings by the inspired teachers? "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, (to divide) willing to communicate, (to impart, to share), laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, (treasure in heaven,) that they may lay hold on eternal life." The wise man says: "There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely: riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt." Be wise now, ye rich; be instructed and obedient, one and all; such will soon eat the good of the land, and share a rich inheritance. Will we be there?

T. E. ADAMS.

A WREATH OF IVY AROUND THE HEAD OF A ROYAL CORPSE.

The property ivy has of adapting itself to circumstances is most strikingly illustrated by an lucident recorded in an English journal by Miss Strickland. The body of Catharine Parr, one of the wives of King Henry VIII., of England, buried at Sudley, was disinterred, through curiosity, on several occasions. The last time the coffin was opened, "it was discovered that a wreath of ivy had entwined itself around the temples of the royal corpse. A berry had fallen there at the time of the previous exhumation, taken root, and then silently from day to day woven itself into this green sepulchral coronal.

WHO FASHIONED THIS CAVE?

Prehistoric Remains Said to Have Been Found in Missouri. Bronze Weapons and a Plate on Which are Cut Phœnician Characters—A Graceful Arch and Ornamental Columns. The Tablets and Carvings in an Ohio Cave.

MORRISTOWN, Mo., Jan. 22.—In the eastern portion of Monroe county, Mo., is a long, high, limestone ridge, lying between the north fork of Salt River and a smaller stream known as Bear Creek. The ridge is not more than a quarter wide, but the rocky bluffs, rising perpendicularly from the water's edge, prevent the communication of the two streams, which pursue a parallel course for more than a mile, and finally diverge, to unite several miles below, where, with other streams, they form the beautiful Salt River, which flows into the Mississippi.

This ridge is known in the local vernacular as "Narrows," and its rocky bluffs, rising to the height of 200 feet, present a bold and picturesque scene. It has long had a local fame on account of the many Indian emblems found there. Indian mounds are numerous on the rocky ledge, and Indian skeletons, flint hammers, and bone and stone hatchets have been found in considerable numbers. Tradition has it that, at an early period in the present century, a battle was here fought between two powerful Indian tribes, which resulted in the loss of most of the warriors of both parties.

A wonderful discovery has recently been made on the narrow ridge—a temple cut in the solid rock, after the manner of the Egyptian temples. It is on the north side of the "Narrows," in the bluff which rises from the edge of the north fork of Salt River. This ridge, on account of its rocky and precipitous nature, is not tillable, and is perhaps the loneliest and most desolate piece in Monroe county. It is a resort for lynx, wildcats, foxes, and catamounts. James Waldron, a great lover of sport, went out early one morning for a hunt. He had been out but a short time when his dogs passed him in full chase of some animal, and shortly afterward he heard them baying on the north side of the "Narrows," and apparently deep in the earth. Swinging himself down by the aid of bush and rock and root, he came to a perpendicular cleft in the rock, which seemed to have been formed by some convulsion of nature. Preparing a torch of dry cedar, he entered the cavern which opened out before him. As he proceeded, he was surprised to observe evidences of human labor on every hand, and, pursuing his search, he came to a beautiful arch, passing under which he found himself in a sort of temple.

Such was the story that caused your correspondent to visit that region. Without much difficulty I found Mr. Waldron, the discoverer of the temple, on whose land it is situated. He proposed, as it was late, that I should remain with him during the night and walk over and see the temple in the morning. I assented, and after supper Mr. Waldron brought out some articles that he found in the temple for my inspection. They were a bronze hatchet or hammer, having an eye and a heavy knob on the hammer portion; a rude bronze lance or arrow head, more than six inches in length; a piece of deer or elk horn, about nine inches in length, from which small branches were given off, and an elliptical piece of bronze, on which was cut in rude manner an imitation of the sun and some alphabetical characters closely resembling the Phœnician.

The next morning, with Mr. Waldron and his two sons, I set out to visit the temple. Our way lay through a low bottom covered with a dense growth of timber. We soon found ourselves before the cleft in the rock, and after lighting a torch we entered. The arch is elliptical, and for gracefulness of curve and beauty of finish, is not excelled by any of the works of the present day. Each stone is of finest granite, polished as smooth as glass, and they sent back reflections of our torches, like polished steel. The springer rests on an entablature, which is placed on the capital of a beautiful column, also hewn from the granite. The keystone of the arch projects from the inferior stones, and seems to have been finished with the view of placing an inscription thereon, but this was never done. Passing under the arch we found ourselves in a room hewn out of solid limestone, thirty-five feet wide, fifty feet long, twenty feet high, and vaulted to the centre, the ceiling being forty-five feet from the floor in the middle of the room. At intervals of ten feet are graceful, slender columns of granite, with square base fantastically carved in imitation of some unknown plant. The shafts, like the shaft supporting the arch, are surmounted by a capital. Upon this rests a heavy entablature of magnesian limestone, which is closely fitted under the roof, and gives the columns the appearance of supporting the ceiling. The acoustic properties of the temple are remarkable. A whisper can be heard from one end of the room to the other. There are twelve columns in [illegible] on each side. Between the [illegible] on each side of the arch are [illegible] to the temple, are set into the wall blocks of polished gray and black granite, but there is no inscription on any of them. No sculpture of any kind, except the plain mentioned above, has been discovered. At the western portion of the room is a slab, or raised platform of polished lime[illegible], with a square [illegible] block of [illegible] about twenty-four inches thick, and [illegible] slab of polished and highly [illegible] granite, smoother than marble. This slab projects over the block beneath it about six inches on every side, and six feet long and three wide. Evidently this was an altar, for there are ashes scattered around. What was the character of the structure? To the right of the altar is a small side room, which you enter through an arched doorway, evidently intended for the priest who attended to the duties of the altar. About this there is nothing destructive. It is not even certain by what means it was shut off from the auditorium. The place is wonderfully dry. The ravages of time have not in the least impaired it, and every portion retains the freshness and glow that it had when it came from the hands of the workmen.

It is undoubtedly one of the great curiosities of the age, and is attracting the attention of archæologists. An exhaustive report is now being prepared by a committee, which is to be presented to the Historical Society of the State of Missouri. That it will add fresh interest to the study of the civilization that preceded the present Indian tribes of this country seems probable.

"Behold, I Come as a Thief."

"Behold," saith the Lord Jesus, "I come as a thief"—that is, unexpectedly. "But know this, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up; therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

"Behold, I come as a thief"—that is, in the dead of night, when men are fast asleep. So will the Lord Jesus come at a time when the world are altogether asleep in spirit—altogether unaware and thoughtless—none of them thinking of any such things at all—all just thinking that things are going on as usual, and will go on as usual, for their time at least

"Behold, I come as a thief"—that is, to find men unprepared. "For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark; and knew not, until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

"Behold, I come as a thief"—that is, suddenly. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even to the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

Solemn, awful, startling words! full of comfort, indeed, to those who know and love the Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior and their friend—"whose they are, and whom they serve"—but full of terror, alarm, destruction, and despair to those who know him not and love him not.

To those who love him, and are looking for him, Christ will come to bring blessing and glory: to those who love him not, but love the world, and live for it, he will come to bring judgment and punishment—the day of perdition of ungodly men.

Yes—there is an awful day coming for the world. Some morning, when all are going about their day's business or pleasures just as usual—or some night, when people are asleep in their beds, or awake for deeds of darkness—when "the adulterer has waited for the twilight, saying, No eye shall see me"—and thieves "in the dark break through houses which they marked for themselves in the day-time"—suddenly, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the heavens will open—a light brighter than the sun will make the noonday look pale, or break in upon the darkness of night—and "then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Then what will sinners do, when the angel's trumpet-blast shall resound through earth and heaven, and they shall feel in that tremendous moment that they have trifled too long, and that now it is too late, and all is lost for ever and ever.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the literal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Coming Age—Its Character and Proximity.—No. 6.

J. P. WEETHEE.

River of the water of Life.—Rev. xxii. 1-2.—"And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it on either side of the river (was there) the tree of life which bare twelve (manner of) fruits, (and) yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree (were) for the healing of the nations."

These are pure life-giving waters of the new heavens and the new earth, as will appear from chapter xxi. 1-27.

We quote another passage connected with the waters:—"And it shall be in that day, (that) living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, (dead sea) and half of them toward the hinder sea (great sea) in summer and in winter shall it be." Zech. xiv. 8.

That Ezekiel, Zechariah and John describe the waters of the coming age, and that they have the elements of physical changes, on the earth, we do not question, since the groves of Eden follow them; but, to what part of that age they severally belong, may not be so clear.

Should we simply outline their localities, it would be the following:—The waters of Ezekiel belong exclusively to the land of Israel, to a land restored and morally and physically cleansed, occupied by Jews restored from their graves and from a long captivity, having a temple and a city. Supposing, that the land of Israel should contain 30,000 square miles. (See Ezek. xlvii. 17-21). The city, being nine miles square, would cover eighty-one square miles, or it would occupy about one part out of the three hundred and seventy parts. The division of the land is equally among the twelve tribes, each having a rectangle of 150x20 miles, leaving divisions for religious worship.

All other persons were strangers. If these waters symbolized the Holy Spirit, then the trees and the fishes would represent various classes of men, the seas would be symbols of nations, the land itself would also be symbolic of lower masses of people; yet, in the same visions, people appear in their true character, could the waters, at the same time, symbolize Spirit, Jews, trees, and fishes?

In the coming age the land of Israel, is the first theatre of revolution, change and restitution. It is truly the land of Israel; the sanctuary is cleansed, and the new age is there in process of complete renovation. It puts on the radical smiles of a beautious morning. This land is peopled by a resurrection. It is the first resurrection, confined in Ezekiel's vision to the "whole house of Israel."

The locality of the waters described by Zechariah, is Jewish also, yet, in time, somewhat in the advance. It is after the return of the Messiah. (Zech. iv. 6). Great physical changes then take place. (Verses 4, 10). This chapter contains no vision—it is a simple narrative of events in the future. It was uttered after the captivity in Babylon. It is when the Lord Messiah shall be reigning as King over all the earth. (land). In the midst of all literal objects, we do not look for figurative waters. The worship of this period is commemorative,—"to keep the feast of tabernacles." "No more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts."

The waters, seen by John, are located on the new earth. They are not peculiarly Israelitish waters, but national waters, the river of life, spreading its healing, fruit-bearing virtues over the globe. It has the same relationship to the whole earth that Ezekiel's waters do to the land of Israel. This will appear, if we compare John's river with that described by Ezekiel.

Ezekiel's river flows into the sea of Sodom, healing its waters, so that it becomes a noted fishing sea. Instead of the apples of Sodom on its barren shores, there are trees of paradise with the groves of Eden. John's river flows out of the throne of God and of the Lamb, but what sea receives its living waters? It is not a river that receives tributaries as it moves onward, but, ramifying in its progression, it becomes the physician of every land.

That John's river of life, is the river of the whole earth, will appear from further examination. Its water is called the water of life in Rev. xxii. 17; also in Rev. xxi. 6. Its virtue is imparted to it by the great life giver, who has constituted it a medium of life and health. The same attribute is inherent in the fruitful tree on its banks, spiritual blessings flow in natural channels, as in the water of baptism, or in the clay to the eyes of the blind. Those waters in which we are immersed are not spiritual, neither had that clay inherent virtue, so may we regard the waters of life.

Distribution of waters on the new earth.—We have been rather particular in establishing the literality of its waters. We shall notice their distribution. If they are life-giving they should reach every inhabitant—the tree (a species) of life, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations, is sustained by these waters. It must grow, therefore, along all its waters. How is the new earth watered? By one river "of water of life."

The system of irrigation, adapted to the wants of this age, is quite unlike that of the coming age. More than three-fourths of the globe are under water. Vast seas, the home of the storm, the world's cemetery, limit the habitation of man. Unequally distributed, they have severed nations, and have prevented rapid progress, and hindered uniformity of character.

What change in the coming age? "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven, and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea." Rev. xxi. 1. και η θαλασσα ουκ ἐστι ἐτι

The order of events, as seen by John, is the following:—In chap. xvii. mystic Babylon is described, in all her glory, and pride, drunken with the blood of saints and martyrs, as she rides onward to her judgment.

The 18th chapter describes her fall, and the wailing of kings who had partaken of her lewdness.

The triumphant shouts of the saints, martyrs of Jesus are heard in the nineteenth chapter; also, the marriage of the Lamb is proclaimed; then follows a terrible conflict, between the Messiah in his regal office and the nations of the earth, called armageddon, (Rev. xvi. 16,) synchronizing with the overthrow of Gog and his armies on the mountains of Israel; with this difference, perhaps, that the former is generic, while the latter is specific. These are conflicts under the seventh trumpet during the reign of subjugation, for he (Christ) must reign till he has put all enemies under his feet. The nations cease to fight because their armies are destroyed, the rulers are overthrown and the nations submit to the power of the great conqueror, who becomes King of kings and Lord of lords.

The reign of Messiah is clearly brought to view in the 20th chapter. It is divided into two (3) parts, (3) the reign of subjugation, and the reign of peace. John's attention had been so closely drawn to the judgment of the great harlot, and her national associates, that the resurrection is crowded out the chronological position. It takes place previous to the conflicts of Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., and Rev. xix. yet its record is in the history of the reign of subjugation.

1. Reign, subjugation, constitutes the first part of Messiah's reign, and covers the time occupied by Christ in subduing his enemies; "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. 1 Cor. xv. 25. His reign of peace follows, and is jointly with his Father. Rev. xxii. 3. "The throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it." (New Jerusalem). "And when all things shall be subdued unto him, (brought back) then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." 1 Cor. xv. 28. The reign of subjugation is with his bride in Ezekiel's city. (Ezek. xxviii. 20-26).

Order of events:—1. The nobleman (Christ) went into a far country to receive a kingdom. Finishing there the office of High Priest, he receives from the Father a kingdom. (Dan. vii. 14). He then returns with regal authority.

2. His bride, the house of Israel, and a great multitude of all nations, meet the Bridegroom in the heavens.

3. With this retinue he descends upon the mount of olives. (Zech. xiv. 5).

4. The mountain cleaves, and there is formed a great valley. Other physical changes take place through the land of Israel.

5. Messiah fixes his abode on Mount Zion, which over-tops all other mountains about the holy city, (Jehovah shammah). (Isa. ii. 2).

6. The Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem. (Joel iii. 16). "Out of Zion goes forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. (Isa. ii. 3).

7. Messiah's territory is invaded by the armies of Gog, of the land of Magog, which are totally destroyed.

8. The land (sanctuary) is cleansed, and all nations submit to the laws that go forth out of Zion. They are subdued, but not converted. They submit to superior authority. The nations still exist though their chiefs are sleeping in the dust.

A King now reigns in righteousness.

9. As a conquering prince he now rules in the midst of his enemies. (the subjugated nations). Psa. cx. 2.

The reign of subjugation has three divisions. (Rev. xix. and xx.) The first and third divisions are marked by signal victories, the middle is one of comparative peace and prosperity.

10. During the middle division, Jerusalem is the capital of the land of Israel, yet the families of the earth are required to go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. Zech. xiv. 16.

11. Missionaries are sent forth to the nations—"And I will set a sign among them, and I will send that escape of them unto the nations * * * and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles." Isa. lxvi. 19.

During this period life is prolonged. Great physical changes take place through the earth. Nations become prosperous under this reign of a King in righteousness.

Many converts are made among the nations. "Of the increase of (his) government (governed) and peace (there shall be) no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom." Isa. ix. 7.

12. Near the close of this reign of subjugation there is a revolt. They assemble. They encompass the camp of the saints and the beloved city. Rev. xx. 9. Fire from God devours them, God rebukes them with flames of fire. Isa. lxvi. 15.

The Messiah's reign of subjugation closes with the final overthrow of his enemies, and with the putting down of all rule and all authority and power, his last enemy being death. The lake in which they are consumed, is formed of the progressive conflagrations described by Peter, (2 Peter iii. 7) which involve the whole earth, the land of Israel excepted. Since the sanctuary had been previously cleansed. Christ's official work here terminates, since he has reigned till he has put down all his enemies, and completed the restitution. His last act is on the "creature itself," (the earth with its features).

"The creature itself is now delivered from its bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. (Rev. viii. 11.) Here begins the earth under the development of its seventh and highest type, properly called (Rev. xxi. 1.) a new heaven and a new earth. The waters of this earth, as they shall be in the coming age under the joint reign of peace, we are now prepared to investigate in the light of their superiority, over the present arrangement.

We have already made some statements relative to the waters. Are there seas and oceans in the order of things in earth's coming age? It is said in Rev. xxi. 1, "there was no more sea;" or, the sea is not any more. Sea here stands for all large bodies of waters—a generic term. The term sea is symbolic since it is seen in vision. (It either symbolizes itself or a resembling class. Many call this sea a symbol of masses of people, as in Rev. xvii. 1. This symbol is explained to be so., peoples, multitudes, nations and tongues. The symbol in Rev. xvii. 1, is "many waters." In Rev. xxi. 1, no explanation is given, which forces us to the conclusion that there is no explanation, and that we are to understand the sea to symbolize itself, the same as when Gord or Christ appear in vision.

We incline to the literal interpretation for various reasons:—1. When any word is used out of its ordinary sense its meaning is somewhere given. "Sea" is a term of frequent use in the Scriptures, and in nearly every place it is understood literally, if used figuratively, it has some qualifying term; such as brazen sea, "sea of glass."

Here it has a literal association—new earth.

The Kingdom of God.

BY G. H. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S SECOND QUESTION.

As Jesus addressed the people upon one occasion—Luke xvii. 21,—and told them that the kingdom of God was within them, are we not to understand that the kingdom of God was in some sense—as a kingdom militant, or a kingdom of Grace—then in existence?

REPLY.

1. As to a kingdom militant, the idea of such, has grown out of the supposition that the kingdom and the church are one: and as the church is described by the apostles as having a warfare in which to engage, therefore, a military church from the word militans meaning military, but the Bible knows of no such term as applied either to God's called out, or God's kingdom.

2. We read in the Bible of salvation by grace, of the abundance of grace, of grace abounding, of a dispensation of grace, and of growth in grace, but the phrase above referred to,—a kingdom of grace—is a stranger to the Bible.

3. The supposition arising generally from this text is, that the kingdom of God was then, and consequently may now be, in the hearts of the people. To this supposition, we offer two objections which we consider insurmountable.

a. By noticing the context, the preceding verse, it is learned that the Pharisees were the enquirers, and therefore the addressed parties in the text.

b. That the kingdom of God literally—consisting of a king, a code of laws, subjects, territory and a metropolitan city, could not then, now, nor at any other time exist in the hearts of the Pharisees, or any other people.

But further, if it be claimed by any one that the kingdom of God here in this text should not be so literalized, but that it may refer to one's having his thoughts directed toward, affections set on, the hope for, and the love of the kingdom existent in the heart, and thus the phrase to be understood. I grant that such might by remote figure be said of a disciple, but not of a Pharisee. And yet, to concede all this of the text—which is far from true—it it would be to argue a future instead of a present existence of the kingdom.

But now as touching the plausible meaning of the Savior in the text, there are two words which demand notice, viz: the word entos, rendered "within," and Basileia, rendered "kingdom."

1. Of the word entos, an adverb, perhaps its most literal rendering would be when detached from circumstances, as given in the text "within." but the circumstances, some of which we have given above, rather forbid this rendering, as also many authors agree, some of which we here cite:

1. Our marginal Bibles in the margin give among.

2. Albert Barnes in his notes in the margin gives among.

3. John Wesley in his notes gives among.

4. Emphatic Diaglott gives among.

5. Tischendorf remarks, the Sinaitic and Vatican manuscripts give among.

6. Improved Version gives among.

7. H. T. Anderson gives among.

8. Boyer gives among.

9. Markland gives among.

10. Darby gives in the midst of.

11. Wakefield gives in the midst of.

12. Alford, Bengel, De Wette, and Meyer give among.

The plausibility of this rendering is further seen after considering the next word—basileia.

2. And now, as to the word basileia, there are two remarks we want to make of it.

a. That we believe the word to be properly rendered kingdom—as in the text. We are led to this belief from the most natural and plausible Lexicographical definition, together from the uniform rendering of its 150 occurrences in the apostolical writings.

b. The fundamental law of this, as well as of all words require their natural and radical use everywhere unless the circumstances obviously show different.

This much then having been stated for the word, the question naturally arising in reference to it is, can it in the text be accepted in its natural and radical sense? Of this the circumstances in hand alone must determine. Then to the work in the case. As the word naturally signifies kingdom, as we have conceded, and literally imports nothing less than a king, a code of laws, subjects, territory, and a metropolitan city, could it be said that all these were actually present and among the Pharisees when Jesus addressed them? To propound this question is but to elicit a negative answer from all the candid.

If then the word cannot under the circumstances have its full literal import, must we not accept of it in meaning in a more restricted—figurative—sense, as by way of synecdoche, where a word denoting the whole of a thing is put for only a part? That this is the sense of the word in this text we verily believe. But next arising is the question, if the word Basileia in the text denoted only, the presence of one of the elements above referred to of the kingdom which one could it have been?

a. That Jesus could have referred to territory we can hardly believe. Though the territory promised to the fathers was ever present to the Jew while dwelling in Palestine. Yet, it was then in the hands of the Romans, and for long centuries to remain in the hands of the Gentiles.

b. Could he have referred to Jerusalem, the metropolitan city? This we can hardly concede, for this was yet, he said—Luke xxi. 24,—to be trodden under foot by the Gentiles until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in.

c. Could reference then have been made to the presence of a code of laws? This you will hardly concede, nor will scarcely any Bible reader, as it is to be granted that the law—Isa. ii. 3; Micah iv. 2—had not yet gone forth from Zion, nor the new covenant—Jer. xxxi. 31, 34,—yet been made.

d. And next, could reference have been made to the presence of subjects over which he was to rule? Hardly this, from the consideration that all then living who were to have a part in his kingdom had the promise of heirship instead of position of subjects.

e. As conclusion then, reference only could have been made to the presence among them of the Royal Majesty or King.

Under the circumstances then, by way of synecdoche the word Basileia, a word denoting the whole, put for a part—the king—alone can we conceive of the text. Calling up the history as set forth in 2 Chron. xxii. 10; xxiii. 1-11 of the manner of the introduction of King Josiah to office as the basis of the question by the Pharisees I would paraphrase the text:

And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God—king of the Theocracy—should come, he answered them and said: The kingdom of God—the King of the theocracy—cometh not [illegible] other new they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold the kingdom of God—the king of the Theocracy—is among you.

But this I know, I shall be God's for ever:
So I can trust."

Hannah More says that there is one single fact that one may oppose to all the wit and argument of infidelity, that no man ever repented of Christianity on his deathbed.

"Man's uncertain life
Is like a rain-drop hanging on the bough
Amongst ten thousand of its sparkling kindred,
The remnants of some passing thunder-shower,
Which have their moments, dropping one by one;
And which shall account less its perform hold
We cannot guess."

REST IN CHRIST.

How constantly we need to be reminded, and how slow we are to learn the lesson, that for all spiritual needs we must go continually to our Lord for hourly supplies of grace. We perhaps recognize this when commencing a work, or at the ending, at great crises, or in great difficulties, or dangers, but forget the privilege of daily and hourly "drawing water from the well of salvation," to our great loss of holy joy and strength. We begin and end one day with God, and this is well; but to the weary, easily fatigued disciple, would there not be unspeakable strength and comfort imparted, in the use of intervals of necessary rest, in looking up to him who being weary with his journey in this wilderness world, sat down by the well-side in far off Samaria, at the sixth hour.

Among all the cities of Italy suffering from famine and misery this winter Rome bears the heaviest burden. The trade of the city has declined since the overthrow of the Pope's Government, and the taxes are a hundred-fold what they were; they were almost nominal under the Pope, as the whole world contributed to enrich the city. Large capitalists from Turin and Milan have monopolized what has been left of the trade once possessed by foreign merchants.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, THURSDAY, FEB. 11, 1886.

RELATIVE to a paragraph which will be found in our News Items, Brother H. Heyes, of England writes: "The Times, which, I mind you has a significant paragraph. Should it really be so, and The Times is first authority, the English government may have trouble indeed with Ireland. All the fuss about converting Ireland has not been reality—far from it. The Irish people are Catholic, or nothing. If Pope Leo approves Irish independence, and the Irish know it, Beaconsfield will have a hard business on his hands."

WE will not occupy space this week in fully explaining why so many typographical errors have escaped uncorrected in several late numbers of our paper. The time that the editor should have devoted to this work has been occupied in attending to other duties devolving on him as treasurer. To enter every letter carefully with the amount sent, settle all bills, and keep correct accounts of receipts and disbursements, requires no inconsiderable portion of his time. Were we to give the main reason in fewest plain words, it would be—too much work for too few hands. Economy is imperative, and we must do the best we can. We hope to have a little more time at our disposal hereafter to personally attend to proof reading. We will do our best to guard against errors of this kind hereafter. Mistakes were made in proper names, in scientific terms, as well as in ordinary words in our last, as well as in some other numbers. We will not correct them now as we presume scarcely one would be at the trouble to make the correction with pen or pencil in their papers.

OUR readers will remember the thrilling horror excited throughout the country last spring at the news of the child-sacrifice in Pocasset by the hands of its father, Charles Freeman. No small amount of infamy was heaped upon the heads of all classes of believers in the near advent of the dear Redeemer. No explanation, as to the possibility of insanity, was suggested or allowed. That other children had been barbarously murdered by persons of other creeds or of no creed at all, went for nothing toward arresting a hasty or unjust judgment. Poor Freeman happened to be an adventist, the fearful act was charged to his faith, and the epithet ghoul, or some other equally stigmatizing, was considered as hardly expressive enough to apply to the demented parents and their more intimate associates. We gave some account of the sad affair at the time, and stated that we should watch the result with interest. Two extracts, given below from different papers, will acquaint our readers with the present condition of the unhappy parents, and the juster decision of candid men of the medical profession. The whole affair is a truly dark picture on the sin-stained records of a fallen world. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," should enter into our daily petitions:

FREEMAN DECLARED INSANE.

BARNSTABLE, Mass., Jan. 26.—Charles Freeman, the second Adventist who killed his child in Pocasset last May, was to-day arraigned in court, and it being testified by medical experts that the man was insane, he was remanded to jail to await the May term of the court, when, if his condition remains the same, he will be sent to a lunatic asylum. Freeman still persists in his assertion that the sacrifice of his child was a just and proper act, and was demanded of him in a vision. It will be remembered that, after a prolonged revival in his sect, he awoke his wife in the early morning of May 1 last and told her that he had seen God in a vision, who had required of him that, as Abraham had obeyed the call to sacrifice Isaac, so should he offer up his little daughter Edith as a human sacrifice. Then, after both had prayed, the mother went back to her bed and Freeman sought a sharp knife. The five-year-old daughter slept in the next room. Bending over her as she slept, Freeman drove the knife through her heart. She opened her eyes and, as the father afterward freely related the circumstances, cried out feebly "Oh, papa!" and died. Freeman lay down beside his wife again, and both slept peacefully until morning. He confidently expected that the child would rise from the dead on the third day. Though his neighbors of the same sect appear to have known of the murder, none of them informed the authorities, and it was only by accident that the crime was disclosed.

Freeman has increased in weight, and has improved in general health since his confinement. The wife was discharged after a short imprisonment, but it does not appear that she has ever expressed any penitence for her acquiescence in the murder. As for Freeman himself, and in spite of his disappointment that a part of his expectation was not fulfilled, and that the child did not come to life again in the promised season, he still firm in his conviction that the sacrifice was a divine command. He has been a constant reader of religious works during his imprisonment, particularly of the latest edition of the hymns of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He claims still to be a member of that church, differing from its tenets in no save, only in believing that Christ will come a second time. One hymn that he has particularly affected is that by Charles Wesley, "The Trial of Abraham," and in his copy of the book this hymn has been thus underlined by him:

Abraham, when severely tried,
His Child by his obedience showed;
He with the harsh command complied,
And gave his Isaac back to God.

His son the latter offered up
[illegible] by love,
Or all his joy and hope,
And less beloved than God alone.

Oh for a faith like his that we
The bright example may pursue,
May gladly give up all to slow,
To whom our more than life is due!

Is there a thing than life more dear,
A thing from which we cannot part?
We can, we now rejoice to hear
The voice from out the cloudy throne.

Jesus, accept our sacrifice;
All mine is for Thee we count but loss
Lo! at Thy word, our [illegible] dies,
Dies on the altar of Thy cross.

For what to Thee, O Lord, we give
A [illegible]
Through Christ to [illegible]
Yet, O, disdain to [illegible]

Freeman openly scouts at the idea that he is insane, although the decision of the court to-day was based upon the opinion of Dr. Charles P. Folsom, Chairman of the State Board of Health, Lunacy, and Charity, Dr. James R. Denny, of Boston, Dr. C. A. Walker, of South Boston, and Dr. Brown, Superintendent of the Taunton Lunatic Hospital. It was with the greatest difficulty that Freeman's counsel could induce him to permit the plea of insanity; indeed, he objected to having counsel at all. "All Christians" he said to a reporter last summer, "believe that Abraham was commanded to sacrifice Isaac. If they can believe that, why are my religious fellow worshippers blamed for believing with me that I was commanded to sacrifice my daughter in these latter-days? I believe, with a perfect abiding faith, that I was so commanded to show my faith. I had hopes when I went to the shed to get the knife that God would stay my hand as he did Abraham's as he was about to offer up Isaac, but I determined if my hand was not stayed to make the sacrifice as gently as possible, so that my boy would pass away without suffering."

To Dr. Mansell, of Harwich, Freeman said, just after the murder, that whatever course was taken with them, he and his wife did not want any plea of insanity entered. He admitted that he undertook the act with a full understanding of what he was doing. He knew that he was violating the law. He knew that people would look upon it as a horrible crime, and he knew that it would be agony for him to take the life of his little daughter. "Why," he said to Dr. Mansell, "she was playing around with me while I was at work all last week, and do you think I could do such a thing unless something more powerful than insanity commanded me?"

When asked by a gentleman whether he did not think it a delusion to believe that God put things into the hearts of men to do, he at once responded: "Do you think it a delusion when your minister tells you that God put it into his heart to preach the gospel, or that God directed him to become a missionary? Now, I just as firmly believe that God put it into my heart—that is, spoke to me—to do that act, that the world might see that there was faith even as great as Abraham's. I did think that He would stay my hand before I struck the blow. I can't see any difference between my firm belief that God spoke to me and the firm belief of others that they have been in personal communion with God."

When urged by his counsel on Tuesday to allow the plea of insanity—it was not until yesterday that he consented—he said: "What will become of my past life and teachings if I am adjudged insane? Let me go into court and preach." To a suggestion for a change of venue he would not listen for a moment. "It is not biblical," he said, "to go out of the country which stood up before His enemies in Jerusalem." He seems perfectly sane on all other subjects, and expresses the utmost indifference as to the result of the trial. "I have done God's will," he says, as Abraham was prepared to do. If I did wrong, Abraham was guilty and Genesis is a fable." Mrs. Freeman says that for ten days before the sacrifice they both felt the presence of God in their house, and that during that time her husband fasted continuously, eating nothing but bread and crackers, and drinking nothing but water. The night of the crime, after they had prayed, while great drops of sweat stood on his forehead, and she begged that she be made the sacrifice, he said that he had prayed for two weeks that he himself might be the one called, but that the vision he had just had demanded the life of their best beloved daughter. "I told her," says Freeman, "that we could not break the injunction of God, and when I persuaded her that I felt we would either be restored to us after three days or else would be translated, then she consented. She saw that it was a divine command." Then, as he says, his soul was filled with prayer, and he prepared meekly his wife to render the sacrifice.

The morning before the murder, Freeman sent word around the village that he would make a revelation known, and offer an orthodox sacrifice. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon after the crime a number of Second Adventists assembled at his house. The deed had been performed with cool deliberation, and accompanied with what was intended to be an impressive religious ceremony. The little one's blood was poured out upon a table which was consecrated as an altar. When he was arrested one of the indignant townspeople cried out: "Kill the murderer." "No; he is no murderer," replied one of the faithful, "he has proved his faith in God."

The doctors call It Delusional Insanity of a Religious Type.

[Boston Advertiser, Jan. 28.]

THE PODASSET MURDERER.

Mr. Freeman, at the close of the hearing at which he was adjudged insane, shook hands with quite a number of his friends in the court-room, and was then conducted back to jail. He expressed himself as being satisfied with the result of the hearing, and will be glad to change his present quarters for some more comfortable, if it is God's will. He was very careful, however, not to acknowledge by the slightest concession that he considered himself insane in the least, but if he was to go to an asylum, he rather preferred Taunton, as being near his early home. "I am not insane because they say so," he said, "and I would stay here for years rather than to admit in any way that I had done anything wrong or that I am insane. If I am convicted of insanity, the Bible must be shut up." He regards the doctors who testified as to his insanity with kindly feelings, mingled however, with something of pity that such good men should be so deluded. His sublime self-delusion is beyond all conception. He thinks that he is the spirit of Truth, as being parallel in his existence with Christ, and he believes his body is immortal. "It is time now for the spirit of Truth," he says, "the third part of the Trinity. Up to this time Father and Son only have been known. I am the spirit of Truth." "I represent Christ in all his parts, prophet, priest, and king." "I am the elder brother referred to in Romans." "It has been prophesied that all shall be gathered into one; that is me." "I have a dual nature, both Christ and man is represented in me the son of man on earth." "All good is represented by one person, and I am that person." "I am the result of Christ's teachings; Christ's teachings are perfected in me." "My wife and I are the first two persons who have ever stepped into the kingdom of God; the Bible is of no more use for us; we have fulfilled it; we are saved and cannot be lost. I feel sure that our names will be honored above any other name except Jesus." "We are the door and everybody must enter through us." Speaking with reference to Dr. Folsom's testimony, in which allusion was made to Freeman's belief that he was the archangel Michael, he showed considerable concern—having evidently misunderstood the testimony—as to how the doctor knew that he was the angel Michael. "Has the doctor ever seen him?" he asked; "does he know how he looks?" And then straightening himself up and looking the gentleman with whom he was talking straight in the eye, he said, grandly: "I am the archangel Michael."

These expressions of his, which were actually used in calm and unexcited conversation, illustrate his conception of the nature of his own existence. Nothing is simulated, but he speaks with a frankness and earnestness that leaves no doubt about the perfect genuineness of his beliefs. That a man of intelligence on other points, so pleasant and natural in his actions and in his general conversation, is so utterly crazy as he is is almost beyond even the imagination of one who is not familiar with the insane delusions of a lunatic. Shortly after his arrest, Freeman was visited in his cell by a clergyman, who came to administer to him the consolation of religion. In relating the incident to a friend Freeman expressed considerable indignation. "The idea," he said, "that he should visit me as he did! I am so far ahead of him in religious progress that we are no more to be compared than the Mississippi and a rivulet."

Freeman feels no remorse that he killed his child, and has no consciousness of having done any wrong. He would have preferred that his case had been heard before a jury. "Why," said he, "I could convince any jury that I stand on the top of Mount Zion, that I lead the hosts of heaven, and that I was but obeying God's command. Any man who knows Charlie Freeman knows that he would never murder anybody." In regard to the tragedy, speaking without the slightest show of emotion, he said: "I feel perfectly justified. I feel that I have done my duty. I would not have her back. I am not disturbed about the matter. I have attained that just as far as possible. The work is mine, the result is his. When he has called he will justify, and those he justifies he will glorify, and it is only a work of time. I want to see the end come, that the world may see that there is a God in Israel." When questioned in regard to his view of his relation to law, he said: "I ought to obey God rather than man. It is in accordance with my views that we should abide by the common laws as a general rule, and it is not in accordance with Christianity to break human laws. I qualify that by saying that God has special laws in his power." "If, then, a man decides to act contrary to the laws of man from what he considers just motives, is he justified by the law of God?" was asked. "Yes," replied Freeman, "of course he is. I not only broke the highest law of nature, but the law of man, in accordance with what I believed to be the will of God." "Do you believe now that you acted in accordance with the law of God?" "Certainly I do. If I had not had so much supernatural evidence I should not have been here." As to the reliability of the supernatural evidence, which comes to him in visions and various signs, Mr. Freeman has not the slightest doubt. "Why," said he, "it is just as I look at you now and think I see you. It may be an optical illusion, but if I feel, smell, and touch God, and you strike back, I am convinced."

Freeman thinks that he and his wife have passed through the "baptism of fire," as he terms it, which is the third state in the Christian progress. Their entrance to this state was through the sacrifice of their child. Revelation x. 8-11, he says, refers to him, and the "little book," mentioned in his little creed. The verses referred to are:

And the voice which I heard from heaven spoke unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel. And I went unto the angel and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it and eat it up, and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey. And I took the little book out of the angel's hand and eat it up. And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples and nations and tongues and kings." He claims that the Scriptures are now fulfilled, and that the light his child throws on them is all the light they will receive hereafter.

Mrs. Freeman is regarded by experts as being nearly, if not quite, as insane as her husband. She shares in his exultation and holds the same beliefs that he does. In regard to the tragedy she now says: "Why, if I did not believe it was ordered of God, what should I do? I should become insane." In obedience to a command received from God, she has cut her hair off quite short, has ceased to wear cuffs and collars, and has discarded all forms of jewelry and articles of personal adornment.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Creation Re-Read.

By faith we understand that the worlds were made by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which did appear." Heb. xi. 3.

How is it "by faith" that we understand this truth, that God made the things which are seen?

It is by believing the account of creation. Indeed, it is by faith that we understand the early history of our country—of England, of Rome and other nations, back to old Babylon! We understand by believing the record, the account, the facts of history. Hence, without faith it is impossible to understand such matters that lie beyond our personal sphere. This truth has a wide and general application to human experience. The child does not argue out his knowledge, but takes the alphabet and all the stages of his education as addressed to his faith in the teacher and the things taught. Above all, forms of our knowledge, however, this truth applies to the knowledge of creation (Genesis) and the new creation (regenesis—redemption).

No man ever did believe, or ever will believe, in this world who could not be taught. No patriarch, prophet, apostle, or private person ever yet has become "wise unto salvation," but by faith! At every stage faith is fundamental. The just live, walk, grow in grace and overcome, by faith in God!

In the present system of things the Creator and his creation take precedence. The creation is the theatre on which the Creator is revealing Himself in, and to humanity. The word gives to our faith the all overglorious programme! But its lofty range extends to "angelic principalities and powers." Eph. iii. 10; Col. i. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 22.

By consequence, faith—the faith that saves, and allies us to Emmanuel and immortality, embraces this creation, its present order and course, and its consummation in the redemption by Christ, as disclosed in this context.

There is not a fact wanting to fill out this all comprehending outline of faith. We here see cause and effect—God and man his beings "from old—from everlasting to everlasting." Thus by faith the "heart is fixed, and so stands on the rock of ages." Deut. xxxii. 4; Isa. xx. 1-4; while unbelief is always afloat, and wayward, as "a wave of the sea." Isa. vii. 9; John viii. 24.

On some points we find the materials used and the order of the Divine operation, thus, in the creation of man and of woman, animals and plants, (Gen. ii. 7, 22—analogous to Christ and the church, Eph. v. 31, 32; Rev. xix. 7). But in the godlike grandeur of the dawning up of the account of creation the terms transcend the limitations of both time and secretary counts, touching "his work which God created to make," which He created—brought into being—to form into their present harmony! Gen. ii. 1-4; Psa. civ. 1-24, 31.

Please observe the emphatic restatement, "written by the finger of God"—twenty-six centuries, subsequent. Exod. xx. 11. This truth runs through all scripture, and reaches the close. Rev. iv. 11.

It seems that God opened the mind of Moses to the realities and course of creation; as the vision of the new creation was given to the prophets and apostles: Isa. lxv.; 2 Peter iii.; Rev. xxi.

1. In closing, it is plain that "the world [with its wicked one—for when it knew God, it glorified Him not, as God;—but worshipped and served the creature rather than the Creator]" Rom. i. 25; 1 John v. 19. Such is "snare of the devil and the power of darkness." 2 Tim. ii. 26; Acts xxvi. 18. Darkness is the element of error where "the light is [called," or not] discerned. John iii. 19-21.

2. In our world of cause and effect, means and end, purpose and accomplishment, there is no occasion to dream of adding nothing to nothing; because it is out of the range of all possibilities. The nearest approach to it may be in the imagination that swings off beyond the words of God, and his hosts, into the impossible, the unknown, and non-existent. But where God is, there "all things are possible!" Matt. xix. 26.

3. "Secret things—things unrevealed—belong unto God; but things revealed belong to us," etc. Deut. xxix. 29.

4. It is the aim and object of Revelation to instruct the believer "that he may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Hence, where God has not spoken, it may be presumption to speak. Deut. xviii. 20; for "He hath magnified his word above all his name!" Psa. cxxxviii. 2.

5. These considerations may relieve us from following a speculation on to Apollyon's grounds; and in adhering to the word of the Lord may we all enjoy "an abundant entrance,—the full reward."

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I greatly prize THE RESTITUTION. It has been my schoolmaster for years, having carefully read and examined every subject presented, with profit. I am glad the Resurrection subject is dropped for the present. I find in all the articles presented, no Bible teaching of the mortal resurrection or a second chance for the wicked. Those who prefer to risk a second chance can do so, but I prefer the change in a moment, in the twinkle of an eye, to be a child of the resurrection, to be as the angels, to be deathless. Please tell me, where the wicked are, when as chaff they are burned with unquenchable fire, or where they are when destroyed with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God or the glory of his power?

D. H. THOMPSON.

Newark, N. J.

Editor Restitution:—I am like many others, isolated from those of like precious faith, having no other preaching but that we get through THE RESTITUTION; and being too poor in this world's goods to send you more than my best wishes and my prayers for the prospering of the cause and THE RESTITUTION. As I am now in my seventy-sixth year and have a family to support by my own labor, yet I had thought to be able to have sent you a few dollars to assist in freeing the paper from debt, but you must take the will for the deed, until I can raise the amount that can be spared.

Yours, in hope of the soon-coming kingdom,

C. R. BLAKEY.

Editor Restitution:—I am glad to see THE RESTITUTION coming into my little country home again, living as I do, remote from any religious assembly of the one faith, i. e., the faith once delivered to the saints, and when I read the "Letter Drawer," and ponder over those sweet little epistles from the brethren and sisters from all parts of the earth, I can truly see the improvement of a time when there shall be a gathering of these loved ones and wonder how long will the Master of Israel await the gathering of his jewels and make them shining shafts in his glorious coming kingdom. Many of them are to me lonely as I feel, and although they were far from home, or it is, I let us watch and pray till our Master comes to take us home to reign in his presence in a home prepared for the saints (if found worthy). This will be the long sought for reality of redemption's joy.

The Bible.

BY S. W. WOOD.

Heart of light, exceeding great
As the sun the lesser star,
Key to look at human gate,
Setting forth the Kingdom's near;
Range its wording signify more
Telling of the primal age;
Telling of creation's dawn,
Wait chaos in the waste grope,
From the womb of nothingness;
From the years of the past,
From the history of the race,
And the victor command soul,
Cause a war to cease to be,
Or the queen of matter reveal.

Voice and saying hidden
Are in the history, and you to it
Of this Book, made Eternal-true,
Filled with words strong and great,
Of a past eternity,
And of more yet to be!
Hearing of a larger race,
Of living souls to live;
Destiny of an Elohim;
Peoples of one to come?
Have you read some little thing
In the Book to drown you?
Pursued the phantom of this brain
In the Book for soothly gain?
Book to which is only known
Your Alpha: human thought:
Take some it wearing to my,
Continuing not—Omega?

You have not been to search in
This wearing chart to wonder,
For some faithless, hopeless end,
Mocking at our Saviour's word,
Infidel, I pray you not depart
To the soul that ever loves;
For we go gladly to our rest
From the evil hour of life,
Life—even the fleeting breath;
Might be set the glad to pass
Portal of life, our resting place
Certainly of remembrance:
Punishment of the infirm dead,
Christ we indeed the living here!

SELECTIONS.

[Herald of the Morning.]

The Standpoint.

"These shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal. Matt. xxv. 46.

Viewed from the commonly assumed standpoint of a natural immortality, everlasting punishment can only mean the infliction of everlasting suffering. But before taking up your final position at that standpoint, if you will take the pains to ascertain whether that—and, if not, what else—was the standpoint of him who uttered the sentence, the result may be different.

Before, however, proceeding directly to this, it may help us if we consider for a moment what it is that our Lord actually says—"These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Now there is one thing here in which the writer and the orthodox reader will fully agree—viz. that everlasting—everlasting. That is to say, whatever the word aionios means in the case of righteous, the same it means in that of the wicked. Our one question is—what is the punishment and the life?

What, then, does our Lord really say? Does he say, these shall go away into everlasting suffering, but the righteous into everlasting blessedness? No, you answer, he does not say that, but he means it. Now I ask you to beware how you slip in one word for another. Nothing, I know, seems to you more natural than to do so in the case—such is the power of tradition and habit. And then, according to your standpoint, nothing can be more proper. Still, it is not this that the Lord says; and, possibly, it is not this that he means. By not saying "everlasting suffering," perhaps he means a punishment of which that is not an element. And by saying "everlasting life," perhaps he means to include the grant of an endless existence as an element of the blessedness in store for the righteous. It may be, that is, that in speaking of the latter, he employs the word life in the very ordinary sense of existence, with the implied addition as familiar to him of that purity and bliss without which existence would be no blessing. And does it not almost seem that, by so contrasting the punishment with the life, such must have been his meaning? That is to say, while assigning everlasting punishment to the one, and everlasting life (that is, everlasting existence with happiness) to the other, may it not be that he thereby denies to the former not the one only but the two elements alike which make up the life of the latter? It may be, I say, and the view would be only natural. From our traditional standpoint, of course, it is not so. Viewed from that, the natural becomes too monstrous for devout minds to endure!

And, now, having found in the language itself these indications of a meaning which is at least possible, let us see if we cannot, from our Lord's own standpoint, reach a conclusion more decisive.

Mark, then, he has just been speaking of the fire—"the everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." And mark, also, he makes no mention of an everlasting continuance in that fire, but simply of going into it. True, says our reader—but what a miserable quibble to intimate that the going into such a fire can involve less than an everlasting continuance in it. Your remark, I grant, is not unnatural. Still, you observe, he does not say so. And we may venture to add, perhaps he does not mean it. Strange, you say, incredible that he should not mean it! Yes, from your standpoint; but perhaps from a different—so different, indeed, as to make to his mind impossible that which to yours is the only possibility. Go back and mark one utterance from the same mouth in regard to the same everlasting fire. Three times, you remember, in one short passage, so we find the Lord solemnly warning the self-indulgent sinner of the danger of his being cast into "the fire that never shall be quenched" (Mark ix. 43–48). Now do we appear to know aught as to the standpoint from which our Lord regarded this unquenchable fire? Assuredly we do. It is reasonable to discriminate the language of his from that of his forerunner who had uttered this very word to him—"he shall gather the wheat into his garner everlasting life, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Now here, surely, the sense is very plain, and the truth very clear. But mind, for verse and truth, when viewed as the natural standpoint of human immortality! For the moment we find ourselves at that ground, we find that burning up does not here mean what it means everywhere else—but instead of that it means burning on and on and on, for ever and ever, without ever burning up at all! We find, moreover, that half which is of no more use but to be burnt up, which was never put into the fire with any other view—that this is actually a figure of immortal beings in whose case burning up is a contradiction! And, besides this, John Lord knew all his life familiar, and his Master no less so, with the frequent reference to unquenchable fire in the prophetic Scriptures, as an element for burning up or consuming. "Then will I kindle a fire which shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched" (Jer. xvii. 11; ch. xv. 4; vii. 20; xvii. 27; xxii. 12; Ezek. xx. 47; Amos v. 6; 2 Kings xxii. 17; Jeremiah i. 21; xxxiv 10). Now no one, we suppose, will question that all this burning for ever of unquenchable fire refers simply—in the communications so made through the prophets—to the palpable and irretrievable judgments which were to come upon certain transgressors, in the eyes of the world.

Thus, then, by connecting our Lord's reference to the everlasting fire with his notice of the unquenchable fire, and by comparing this last with similar scriptural expressions, we are considerably helped to the standpoint from which he must have viewed the punishment which he denounces.

But we have more direct evidence to lean upon than this. It is only a portion of it that we can here take up.

"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Matt. x. 28). Does this look like an inevitable immortality for every one? Man can kill the body—that is, he can put an end to its life. But God can destroy both soul and body in hell. Is it reasonable, then, to take "kill" in this unquestionable sense of putting an end to, and then to take the kindred expression "destroy" in the utterly foreign sense of inflicting endless woe on an immortal being? Or, do we prefer the other alternative—namely, that while he can (or rather could) destroy, he never will, and indeed, morally speaking, cannot, having already, by the breath of his own mouth, set up the insurmountable barrier of an inevitable immortality?

Or, take a sample of the various cases in which he speaks of the human being as perishing. The serpent was lifted up, he reminds us, that the dying rebels might live. And so, he teaches, must the Son of man be lifted up, that those who believe in him should not perish, but have eternal life. Without the brazen serpent the bitten ones perished; that is, their body's life, for this world, was cut off. Without the cross we perish: that is, in regard to the soul's life for the world to come. So far we are agreed. But is it anything more than the simple equivalent of this statement to say—without the cross our soul-life shall, just like the body-life in the wilderness, be cut off? The process, of course, as to duration and severity, is left to be filled in. This much we can see, that, whatever imagination or reality may supply in this respect, there is no immortal future possible for those who perish now any more than there was an immortal, present possible for the unsaved of Israel then.

Thus we may fairly put the following together:—

(1). The perishing of the Israelites consisted in the loss of their being for this life, accompanied by severe penal suffering.

(2). The perishing threatened now is presumably of the same nature—allowing for the difference between soul and body, this world and the next.

(3). This perishing has its counterpart in eternal life.

(1). The gift of eternal life—whether as regarded in itself or in contrast with the perishing spoken of—seems plainly to involve the bestowment of endless being as really as of well-being to the soul. Such is its natural, and we venture to say, obvious sense—the only sense indeed that would ever have been thought of but for the superstitiousness of such bestowment in the case of creatures supposed to be immortal already.

Or, take another of our Lord's illustrations of the life that comes to us through him:—

The manna essentially contributed to the life, or natural being, of Israel in the desert. Now, when he speaks of himself as "the true bread," and thus the author of everlasting life to all who believe, it seems only natural and reasonable to regard that figure as embracing everlasting being, together with all those elements of well-being without which the being would be no blessing.

And what if our Lord has distinctly shown us that he himself regarded this wonderful life, when viewed in its highest aspect, as not only implying but including and expressing the grand foundation fact of existence—equally with all the attributes that constitute its perfection and bliss! And how otherwise than as teaching this can you take the wonderful announcement—"As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself?" For does not this affirmation of the life that is in God express, in the very first place, the grand truth of self-existence—leaving us to gather up, and associate with this as their centre, all his varied attributes of greatness and goodness?

And to the same purpose when our Lord says—"As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father"—surely he means to express the fact of his receiving a certain being or existence, and simply, but, we may say, merely the character of the existence. What then, he adds—"So he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me," how can we venture to deny all reference to existence in its perpetuity, and maintain that, this being a property of the human race, it is nothing but the quality of the existence that is indicated here, or anywhere by the term life or live eternal?

In connection with all this let us call to mind that declaration of our Lord, in which he so plainly seems to point to the class of persons who are to obtain immortality. It is free at least from all ambiguity as to the word "life," and seems equally free from everything like figure. "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, etc. . . . neither can they die any more." If this does not mean that there shall be no need of marrying (which was the point in question), because, literally speaking, there shall be no dying, what does it mean? And if this literal no-dying be the common property of human beings, what can be the sense of ascribing it thus peculiarly to the "children of God?"

Such is a sample of the guidance to his own standpoint in viewing everlasting punishment, as furnished by our Lord.

But perhaps there is another side to it. Perhaps we find him regularly implying, in spite of all this, that the other view is the correct one. Perhaps he is in the habit of pleading with men that, except they repent, they must be miserable for ever. No, with him it is—"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise (that is, like those Galileans and the eighteen) perish." Perhaps he is in the way of teaching that the sinful soul, though losing God and heaven and hope, can never lose its own being, together with its terrible power of self-torturing. No, this cannot be his teaching, until the word "lose," instead of meaning cease to have, shall come to mean "eternally having in a condition of unmitigated woe!" Till then, we must interpret, on simpler principles, the declaration—"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Or does our Lord ever seem to assume that men, as made in God's image, must be immortal? God's image, according to him, is gone ("ye are of your father, the devil"), and man "born after the flesh" must be "born of the Spirit" before he can now have anything of the Spirit, or life, or image of God in him.

Or, once more, is he who suggests that, but for his having regarded man as immortal, he must have shrunk back from the extravagance of his own great sacrifice? No, that suggestion is yours. As for him, he is well pleased to save from sinning and perishing, and to make gloriously incorruptible those "whose end" must otherwise have been "destruction."

What, then, is there in our Lord's teaching to be set against all this evidence as to his standpoint? We hesitatingly declare that we know of only one thing that has the semblance of opposition to what has been now advanced—"Where their worm dieth not." But now say—whether shall a single expression like that settle the standpoint, so cautiously reached, settle it? suppose that I say of a sick man, his gnawing pain will never leave him (or let it be a living worm in him, if you please), whether do I mean that the man is immortal, or that, being mortal, he must suffer while he lives? The simple key to our Lord's meaning, in short, lies in the word "their," and this, when seen from the standpoint, loses all ambiguity.

Thus, when our Lord says—"These shall go away into everlasting punishment," he is saying just what his apostle says—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." And so, as long as destruction and death are equivalent in regard to rational, spiritual beings—as long as the wages or punishment of sin is death, even an everlasting death, which is the negation at every point of everlasting life—so long must the dreadful sentence continue pain—storm, indeed, of its infinite horrors, but clothed still in all its terrible solemnity—"These shall go away into everlasting punishment." And becomes clear as noonday the moment we consent to look on it from him, the Saviour's standpoint—that immortality, instead of being a natural endowment of man, is the special gift of God to his redeemed.—J. M. Bamfield.

BREVITIES.

Turkey, lately scourged by war, is the prey of famine. If in any American city fifteen persons should be found, in one day dead of starvation, a thrill of horror would run through the nation; but as the city where this has occurred is Adrianople, few notice it.

The historic Island of Jamestown, in the James River, where the first settlers of Virginia made a home, is reported to have been purchased by a Mrs. Malcinia Brown, of this city. It comprises 1,400 acres, chiefly covered with orchards. The only buildings said to be on the island are a dwelling house and a paper mill.

There has been an extraordinary trial at Madras respecting the guardianship of the sacred hair of Mohamet. This hair is enclosed in a case called the "Assaree Shareef," and the possession of the relic carries with it a small pension. Four persons claimed it, two by succession, and two by right of a will. One was a woman, and the judge decided that she could not hold it because she could not fulfil the ceremonies connected with it, and finally entrusted this valuable hair to one of the caste litigants.

THE RAIN TREE.

Some travellers in South America, in traversing an arid and desolate tract of country, were struck with a strange contrast. On one side there was a barren desert, on the other a rich and luxuriant vegetation. The French Consul at Laredo, Mexico, says that this remarkable contrast is due to the presence of the "Tamai caspi," or the rain tree. This tree grows to the height of sixty feet, with a diameter of three feet at the base, and possesses the power of strongly attracting, absorbing and condensing the humidity of the atmosphere. Water is always to be seen dripping from its trunk in such quantity as to convert the surrounding soil into a veritable marsh. It is in summer especially, when the rivers are nearly dried up, that the tree is most active. If this admirable quality of the rain tree were utilized in the arid regions near the equator, the people there, living in misery on account of the unproductive soil, would derive great advantages from its introduction, as well as the people of more favored countries where the climate is dry and droughts are frequent.

A DYING IDIOT.

Mrs. H. Martineau relates that a congenital idiot, who had lost his mother when he was less than two years old, when dying, "suddenly turned his head, looked bright and sensible, and exclaimed in a tone never heard from him before, 'O my mother! how beautiful!' and sank down again—dead." Dr. Carpenter cites this as a case of abnormal memory, illustrating his thesis that the basis of recollection "may be laid at a very early period of life." But the story seems to contain a deeper meaning. The poor idiot not only recalled a long-past time, a face that he had not seen for years except in dreams, but he gained for a moment a degree of intelligence which he had not possessed when in health. The quality of his brain was such, it appears, that with the ordinary activity of the circulation, the ordinary vitality of the organ, mental action was uncertain and feeble; but when the circulation had all but ceased, when the nervous powers were all but prostrate, the feeble brain, though it may have become no stronger actually, became relatively stronger, in such sort that for the time being, a mere moment before dissolution, the idiot became an intelligent being.

A small pamphlet narating the life and career of Prince Napoleon, heir to the Bonaparte dynasty, is at present being circulated extensively among the French peasantry. The pamphlet contains a fine likeness of the Prince dressed in civilian clothes, with ribbons and medals on his coat lapel. The resemblance to the great Napoleon is very striking.

ARCTIC FRUIT.

The successful expedition of Prof. Nordenskiold has proved that the shores of the Arctic Sea are not so inhospitable as has been generally supposed. Perhaps the most interesting of the minor discoveries made by the learned explorer is the finding of a new remedy against that dread of all navigators and the particular scourge of Arctic expeditions—namely, scurvy. It appears that there was not a single case of this disease during the whole voyage; and this remarkable fact is due not to the employment of lime-juice and other antiscorbutics in ordinary use, but to the use of a curious little berry, hitherto unrecognized, produced by a plant which feels an ephemerial existence in the snow and ice during the short Arctic summer. The berries are found in great abundance, and are said to be a favorite fruit with some of the natives of the great ice world. Its flavor resembles that of the raspberry, but is more acid. The mode of preparation adopted on the voyage of the Vega was to dry the berries and then preserve them in the milk of the reindeer, which was then allowed to freeze. In this state the fruit can be preserved for an indefinite period.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AKRON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 22, 1879.

Editor Restitution.—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and thereby keep it visiting.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $5.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal to a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are selling that weakens weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for the moment are we also clear to be the—how it is so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Those few can bear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $150, and will they please give us their name. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 63 years old and I have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I have 45 acres at the present time under cultivation. I live entirely on what I raise, except a few articles of clothing, such as I am compelled to buy. I am willing to do my part, and will do it, if I can get the means. I have not been able to take the paper for the last year, and I am very anxious to get it. I will be glad to receive it. I will be glad to receive it. I will be glad to receive it.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $1 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you in the first coming Kingdom. So, farewell.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We will commence a series of lectures in Lanark, Ill., Feb. 7, and continue about two weeks. And by request of the brethren at East Pine River, will attend the conference to be held there Feb. 20, 21 and 22, if no preventing providence.

J. W. MACONAWOCK.

The Lord willing there will be a conference at East Plum River, Carroll county, Ill., to commence Friday evening of Yorktown, Feb. 20, 1880, and continue over Sunday. Conference district is northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. Bro. Humphreys and others are expected to be present to preach the word. Those coming by rail will stop at Lanark. It is desired that those who want conveyance from Lanark to the place of meeting should correspond with one of the following persons: S. F. Hopper or M. M. Mitchell, Lanark, Shipbrook county, Ill.; or J. S. Arnold, Mt. Carroll, Carroll county, Ill. A general invitation is extended to all to come and help along with the meeting. By order of committee,

J. S. ARNOLD.

The Lord willing, I will be at Gospel Grove meeting house on Friday night before the third Sunday in this month. Also I will be at Remington on Friday night before the first Sunday in March.

POETRY.

Prayer for the Church.

S. ROSANA WINCH.

Oh, I see the dangers, Father!
Dark before them, in the way.
How can I see shielded, ever them?
Let me kneel to Thee and pray!
None were cry to any other;
Thou alone their strength must be,
Guide, with heavenly wisdom—O, Father,
Make the coward heaman feel!

Cleave the chains that fetters bound them,
To a world of woe and sin.
Let them not their vows forgetting,
Watch or only, but within,
But the quiet, calm, and restful
O'er soul at peace with Thee,
Come like psalm, to rather healing,
On a rough and stormy sea.

Keep them safe first, aware of fowler,
Lead them past the net of pride,
Order right their daily conversy,
Fence them in on every side.
Let thy truths to them be broken
Pierce them that they may be clean,
Tear and constant spirit vow them
That thy face in them be seen.

Oh! to see again restoration—Psalm li.
Thy salvation's blessed sound,
They shall many sinners reclaim,
Make thy praise for rejoicing;
And the near approach of Jesus,
Keep made be of every song,
Till He come, and they with shoutings,
Find the crown and kingdom won.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A few Thoughts on Life and Death.—No. 2.

If a man die shall he live again? Job xiv. 14.

The whole scheme of redemption and the perpetuity of the race of man depends upon the second coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. Equally important is his second coming to raise up and glorify his body—the church—as was his first coming, to make an atonement, to endure the cross and the grave that man might become reconciled to God. The whole plan of salvation by and through our Lord Jesus Christ will, as signally fail without the one as without the other; hence, we see the vast importance of answering Job's question in the affirmative, and that, beyond a doubt, to the eye of faith, and the man who believes his Bible, all is clear as the noon-day's sun. To the infidel, the skeptic, and the believers in the eternal sin and suffering of the damned in hell, we have but little to say. Of the two, the infidel is the more consistent. Both are to be pitied for their want of true wisdom in rejecting the only means the great Creator of the Universe has provided for man's future and eternal life.

We now introduce the third witness. He testifies positively, and demonstrates or proves what he affirms, by raising the dead to life, and that, too, in the presence of many witnesses. In the eleventh chapter of John we have the record of his sayings and his doings. Jesus said unto Martha: "Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith, I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this? She saith unto him, yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, that should come into the world." Martha's answer to the Savior is worthy of note—"I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Where did she get this important information from? Answer: From Job and the prophets. It was the belief of the Hebrew church that the dead would be raised up and live again. It was the faith of the apostolic and early Christian church that Christ would come again to raise up his dead saints, and give them eternal life. Shall the Hebrew church and the early Christians rise up in the judgment and condemn the Protestant churches of the nineteenth century for their unbelief and disregard of the second coming of our blessed Lord to receive the dead and reign in glory on the earth? Read carefully the whole account—chapter xi. The Savior comes to the grave of his dead friend, weeps, groans in spirit, lifts up his eyes, thanks his Father because he has heard him, and then cries with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth, and he that was dead came forth." Here is fulfilled just what he had told Martha. This, to the believer, is the end of all controversy. He speaks with the authority of God, the dead hear his voice and live again. For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment, also because he is the Son of Man. John iv. 21–23.

This demonstration of the power of God invested in his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, qualifies him as a competent witness to testify in answer to Job's question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" But, what shall we say for our witness, who has so nobly come to the rescue, and backed up his testimony with the demonstration of his power to bind the strong man armed, when he himself is brought under his dominion? What an hour of triumph for the powers of darkness! Nature is aghast, the earth quakes, the sun refuses to shine; all is shrouded in impenetrable darkness. Glory be to God, the eternal Father; the triumphing of the power of darkness is short. On the third auspicious morn he bursts the bars of death and comes forth a mighty conquering hero, not with natural life only, but with the power of an immortal life, constituted our High Priest after the order of Melchizedek—after the power of endless life. He is declared to be the Son of God with power by the spirit of holiness through a resurrection from the dead. Rom. i. 4.

Again, we say, glory be to God for such demonstrations of Almighty power. Hear him: "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of death and hell," Hades—the grave). Rev. i. 18.

Nature is herself again: the sun shines with redoubled brilliancy; the heart-stricken disciples are made glad and are begotten again unto a hope of life by the resurrection of Jesus the Christ from the dead. After such an exhibition of Almighty power, who will dare to limit the holy One of Israel? In his resurrection he settles several important questions which Orthodoxy may well look at carefully. First, he exhibits himself to his disciples the same literal, identical Jesus, with the prints of the nails in his hands and the wound of the soldiers' spear in his side. He ate and drank with his disciples the same as before he demonstrated just what he taught Nicodemus concerning the new birth, thus showing, conclusively, that regeneration, or the new birth, is completed by or through a resurrection of the dead, or out from among the dead ones. He was with his chosen ones forty days speaking, or instructing them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. This being done, he ascends to the right hand of his Father, there to intercede for his chosen ones—the church—his Bride—the Lambs wife. The declaration is, he shall so come again in like manner as he was seen to go up into heaven. But, when, and what of the interregnum of time intervening between his first and his second coming? Upon this we might write volumes but we can only touch upon a few points which bear upon the re-living again of God's dead ones. This we will endeavor to do in examining the fourth witness—the great apostle of the Gentiles.

The space of time between the first coming of Christ in his humility, and his second coming in power and great glory to raise the dead and living in everlasting righteousness, is denominated the times of the Gentiles—a time for taking out a people for God's name. The exact length of time is not given, but is designated by events, by signs and the fulfillment of prophecy. Says the Great Teacher, "When ye see these things begin to come to pass, then know that he, or it, the kingdom of God is nigh, even at the door." Paul was a chosen vessel to bear God's name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel. Acts ix. 15.

There need not be any dispute as to the qualification of our fourth witness to testify in this important case. His call and qualifications are undoubted; his whole history proves him to be eminently qualified to fill the place God had assigned him, and nobly does he bear his part in filling out the balance of divine revelation, and sealing the truth of his mission by becoming a martyr at the hands of the bloody Nero. The burden of Paul's preaching was Jesus and the resurrection—the second coming of Christ in connection with the establishment of the kingdom of God—his reign in millennial glory for an age—1000 years. We can only use one argument. That will be sufficient for our present purpose. The 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians. The argument is logical, clear, and conclusive in this chapter, if we understand Paul correctly, he does not refer to the wicked dead. His effort is to get God's dear dead ones out from among the dead, in which he was so anxious to have a part. See his letter to the Philipinos. We begin at verse 12: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." Here we might rest the argument as conclusive, but Paul continues his argument and fortifies every point of attack, and clinches the last nail in the coffin of infidelity. We would transcribe his whole logical argument had we space. The reader will do well to read it over again and again; yea, commit it to memory and meditate upon it, and cherish the glorious fact of living again with all the just and the holy, in the kingdom of God, forever freed from all the cares and sorrows of human life. Have you been persecuted, slandered and put to heavy expense by being dragged before Cæsar's bar for preaching Jesus and the resurrection, or no immortality only through Christ and a resurrection? Have you been in perils amongst robbers or false brethren? Have your hard earnings been taken from you in an unsuspecting moment, and you left in very trying circumstances in your declining years? Standing upon the margin of the grave, remember that Paul, the great apostle of the Gentiles, endured all these and much more, to obtain an incorruptible crown. How patiently he endured the loss of all things that he might win Christ and be found in him. Dearly beloved, let us imitate his noble example. Oh, that we might be able to say with this bold defender of the truth, "I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith." What a power in this last word. I have not only contended for the faith earnestly, but have kept it. Thank God for such a noble example of perseverance.

Dear brethren, I had intended to have taken up the whole of Paul's argument, item by item, and have shown his ability to handle and make clear this grand and sublime subject. His testimony is in perfect harmony with Job, Isaiah and Jesus; yea, and all the holy ones, through whom the spirit of God has given utterance. And what shall I say more? To speak of our blessed hope through Christ and a resurrection to eternal life is a glorious theme to dwell upon, but I have written so much I fear the editor's patience will be exhausted. The time is at hand. We shall soon be called to try the solemn realities of what we have been writing. Our humble prayer is, "Oh, Lord, save the remnant of the scattered flock of slaughter, and give them a part in the first resurrection." On such the second death will have no power.

The Two Thousand Three Hundred Days, and the Seventy Weeks of Daniel, Eighth and Ninth Chapters.

That the seventy weeks are a part of the two thousand three hundred days is quite evident; we see by the eleventh verse of the eighth chapter, that the same power that stood up against the Prince and magnified himself even to the prince of the host, was to take away the daily sacrifice and cast down the place of his (the prince's) sanctuary. Daniel in the sixteenth verse hears Gabriel told to make him understand the vision of the eighth chapter, but in the twenty-seventh verse Daniel says he was astonished at the vision, but none understood it. It seems that Daniel thought by reading the prophecy regarding the seventy years captivity which was then being fulfilled, that the vision had reference to that desolation and their city at that time, for we see the whole prayer is regarding the city and sanctuary, and in the twenty first verse of the ninth chapter before Daniel had done praying Gabriel flies to him and touches him, tells him he now come to give him skill and understanding; tells him in verse twenty-third to understand the matter and consider the vision. In twenty-fourth verse he says seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression and make an end to sins. What sins are here referred to? Daniel would naturally think it was the sins of his people, the Jews, and it undoubtedly was. Did they finish up their sins as a nation at the crucifixion of our Savior? Let Jesus answer.

In Matt. xxiii. 13, he names over their numerous sins of which they and their fathers had been guilty and pronounces a woe on them with each denunciation. At the thirty-first verse he says they are witnesses unto themselves that they are the children of them that killed the prophets. In the thirty-second verse he says, Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers. In the thirty-fourth verse he says, Wherefore behold I send you wise men, and prophets, and scribes; and some of them ye shall scourge in your synagogues, that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, etc. Thirty-sixth verse, Verily I say unto you all these things shall come upon this generation; then he proceeds to lament over the destruction of Jerusalem and its desolation. Here at the destruction of that city and the Jews, and their dispersion ends the seventy weeks of Dan. ix. But further proof. What measure of their fathers was left then to fill? It must either be time, or their cup of iniquity; in either case, the result is the same. I understand it to be the seventy weeks.

We read seventy weeks are determined. What is meant by determined? Literally to come to an end, to terminate. Webster, according to his definition four hundred and ninety years, of the two thousand three hundred, ended with the overthrow of Jerusalem and the awful destruction and captivity of the Jews, which according to Josephus occurred in the year 70. In Dan. ix. 26, we read, And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary. The question is often asked, Who is this prince? The facts say it was Titus and the people under him, and it is Titus that confirms the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week causes the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and the marginal reading is, And upon the battlement: shall be the idols of the desolator.

Josephus says as soon as the Romans got complete possession of the city they carried into the temple their ensigns which Josephus says was their idols or their gods and set them over against the eastern gate and there offered sacrifices and proclaimed Titus emperor with the greatest acclamations of joy. The question is, What covenant did Titus confirm? Josephus says, Titus offered, before he had fought any battle, that if the Jews would lay down their arms and submit to them they should have their city with all pertaining thereto, but they would not agree to it. Further, all that would leave their city and come over to him should have their property secured them, and returned to them after the close of the war, and gave them his right hand in confirmation of his word. Josephus says he made this proposal between every battle to the end of the war, and he says a great many complied with the terms and many more would but for the leader.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—Seated again at my own quiet home, after an absence of five weeks, allow me to note a few items.

My first appointment was at Marshfield, in the meeting house of the Disciples, the night after Christmas. Being at the close of two nights of feasting and religious fun, my visit was greeted with an anticipated display of empty benches and worn down hearts.

On the last evening of their entertainment, there was an election, two young ladies being rival candidates for an article, valued at fifteen dollars. The election was warmly contested, and money circulated freely.

Such conduct, however, did not have the sanction of all the members of the church although the church members generally attended.

My first Sabbath was spent at Airline. This is a congregation of Disciples. Our views have not been presented to that people, still there are a few there that advocate our sentiments, as far as they have heard them. I did not notice any particular prejudice, and I am satisfied the truth will have more advocates in the future.

I spent nearly four weeks with churches in the vicinities of Pomeroy and Middleport. I spoke one night in Thomas fork Disciple meeting house, and had further invitations, but could not accept, owing to other appointments. The members treated me kindly, and my remarks were heard with considerable attention.

I delivered six discourses in the Zion meeting house, (Disciple). The weather being very unpleasant, our meeting came to a close before the time appointed. Though treated with kindness, personally, the members have but little sympathy with our views.

I spent three Sabbaths with the church at the Bradford meeting house. I dedicated that house three years since. The members generally hold to our views. Our meetings were interesting. My subjects were principally on the coming of Christ and a preparation for that event. The congregations were full, considering the stormy weather. Three persons were added to the church. A very considerable interest was awakened, and some help for THE RESTITUTION was obtained.

In this vicinity I found some fruits from the seed which I sowed thirty-seven and thirty years ago, when the doctrines of our soon-coming Lord were in their infancy. It was pleasing to recount with them the scenes of those early times. Many have fallen asleep, but some are still waiting.

This field is one of very considerable interest. If it could be well cultivated, much fruit would be the result. Our mission is still very imperfectly understood, and, therefore, violently opposed. Our work is not to build churches in order to secure for ourselves as ministers, comfortable homes, but to gather out, and prepare a people for their approaching King.

This should be the work of all ministers. Then, there would be a union of effort, and, consequently harmony.

Let us examine this subject more fully—the object of ministerial effort. In the vicinity of my labors were various ministers who looked upon my effort with suspicion, simply for the reason that they mistook my motive of action—making for myself a home, instead of preparing a people for their coming Savior. Have not all Christians a common and equal interest in the return of our Messiah? Are we not required to look for, and earnestly desire his coming? Are there crowns for those that do not love his appearing? Let all ministers answer these questions. What is the hope of the gospel? Why dwell so much on faith and leave hope out or view? What is faith without hope? Is it not an element of faith? Why then do ministers discard it? It is answered. We all believe that Christ will return sometime. Is it your hope, my kind friend? What is hope? Its two elements are expectation and desire. I appeal to ministers; who among you hold to the "blessed hope?" Do you desire Christ's return? Do you expect it? Do you look for it? or do you say in your heart, "My Lord delays his coming?" Do not dodge the answer. How can you look for what you believe is beyond your death? Would you not be looking for the nearest event? We do not desire to rob you of your homes, but are you laboring to [illegible] your affections on your better homes? Why not labor with us?

I have been requested to return as soon as I can make it convenient so to do. I have given them the promise that, if well, I would visit them in May. In the summer (D. V.) I will hold a grove meeting, when we shall expect a general gathering. Thanks to the people for their very kind hospitalities. Thanks to sister Chaplin for her much valued Christmas present.

Editor Restitution:—I wish to inform you and the brethren how the truth is prospering, even under unfavorable circumstances, in this locality. In September, 1878, Brother and Sister John M. and Ellie Robbins, of Shenandoah, Pa., made me a visit. During their stay (about ten days) they spoke to us "concerning the things of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ;" also many other things, which we never heard before. Of course we could not understand or embrace the truth at once, but we began to investigate the Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation. Brother Robbins sent me pamphlets, tracts, and a three month's subscription of THE RESTITUTION, to aid me in the investigation of the truth, which I did. October 10, 1878, I was immersed in the Faith. The 20th of the same month I baptized four persons in the like precious Faith. Ever since I have proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ. Brother R. has since sent me five dollars' worth of books and papers, also five dollars in money, to be expended in books, etc. I write this to show what others could do for the truth by doing likewise. Very talented preachers of other persuasions have come here, making additions to their faith. Oh, how my heart burns with sorrow to see that the truth is not represented here by some talented preacher of the "One Faith!"

Yours, in hope of the soon-coming King. M. B. MOYER.

SELECTIONS.

[N. Y. Witness.]

Anglo-Russian Relations.

The well-informed London correspondent of the New York Times has sent to that journal a full report of an interview he held lately with a "well-known diplomatist," who appears to have a very intimate acquaintance with the nature of the relations which exist between Great Britain and Russia and the slender nature of the bonds on the maintenance of which peace or war depends. The revelations of this diplomatist cannot fail to attract the same serious attention in Europe and the East, as they may explain the cause of some recent events which gave no hint of their origin, and as they foreshadow the policy of Russia and Great Britain in the East with unusual distinctness.

In spite of the labored and authoritative contradiction of reports that an estrangement of the most serious kind exists between the Czar and the Czarina, the diplomatist has no doubt of their truth. Indeed, he speaks of the scandal which gave rise to the disturbance in the Imperial family as a matter of notoriety in St. Petersburg, and he also connects with it the attempt to blow up the Imperial train at Moscow. Here are his own words: "One day the Empress met the Czar, her husband, driving out with two children. An explanation was demanded and given. The Empress immediately went abroad. It was the birth of a third child that induced the Emperor to lengthen his stay in the Crimea. But here comes in a new feature which gives political importance to the affair. A Nihilist of my acquaintance declares his people had nothing to do with blowing up the Imperial train the other day. It was the work of a court party, and the intention was to kill the Czar's paramour." The relation of this story with current political history lies in the belief that in case the Czarina dies, the Czar will abdicate in favor of his son and marry the woman who was the cause of his separation from his wife. The new ruler of Russia it is expected would break loose from the Gortschakoff party and give the country a liberal constitution which would bring the people to devote their attention to internal affairs of industry and administration, and thus indirectly set up barriers to schemes of foreign aggression. If all this is true it is painful to reflect that a sovereign who began his reign so well as an affectionate husband, and as a ruler devoted to the uplifting of his people from serfdom to freedom, has become so changed in character as to cast a blight over his own household, and to make his abdication be desired as a national benefit.

According to the diplomatist the papers found by General Roberts in Cabul, contain clear evidence that Russia was the cause of the disaffection of Shere Ali, and had brought about the insult to the English mission. After the murder of Cavagnari the communication with Afghan leaders was kept up by Russia, and even now Russian influence is at work, not only in Afghanistan, but in India itself through agents who are doing their best to bring about another mutiny. The English troops were paid with $400,000 in Russian gold roubles discovered in the Bala Hissar. Russian brass helmets in abundance, and 210 cannon, many of which are fine breech-loading steel guns, were captured. Sirdar Nekmehomed, who commanded at Charasib, had left behind him in the capital a silver jug presented to him by the Russian government for faithful services in 1879. Yakoob Khan himself had signed the death warrant of Cavagnari and ordered the bodies of the men massacred with the envoy to be dragged through Cabul. Why the Cabul papers are not published is accounted for by the fact that Beaconsfield does not at this moment desire war, and the exposures they contain, if some of the above statements are to be accepted as showing the nature of their contents, would likely precipitate one. The Prime Minister holds them as a terror to Russia, while the troops in Afghanistan seize Herat, connect it with the bases of supply by railroad and make it impregnable. But the diplomatist says, "If Russia is not swamped with internal strife, or unless the Czarewitch comes to the throne and gives the people a constitution, with promises of a pacific policy in the interest of trade and commerce, I think there will be a war between England and Russia.

It is rare to find a diplomatist so communicative; but as he speaks with some knowledge of what he says, his revelations may prove of use in interpreting some of the brief telegrams received here indicating the course of events in Europe and the East.

Jews Bidding for Palestine.

An English society journal says: "A negotiation is on foot between members of the house of Rothschild and the venerable Sir Moses Montefiore on the one hand, and the Ottoman Government on the other, for the cession, under certain conditions, of the Holy Land. The Ottoman Empire is almost at its last gasp for want of ready money. The Jewish race wish a habitat of their own. As the Greeks, though a scattered people, living for the most part in Turkey, have a Greek kingdom, so the Jews wish to have a Hebrew kingdom. This, it will be remembered, is the leading idea of George Eliot's 'Daniel Deronda.' Few Persons, I fancy, and probably the gifted authoress herself not more than others, imagined that the dream of the Mordecai of those pages was in the least degree likely so soon to be realized. I am not possessed of any information as to the nature of the new Jewish State—whether it is to be Theocratic or Royal—but I am told that the arrangements with reference to it are all but completed. Prophecies have a way of fulfilling themselves, more especially when those who belie in them are possessed of the sinews of Government. The day, 'when the dispersed of Israel shall be gatered into one' is confidently looked forward to, not only by Hebrews, but by multitudes of Christians; and it seems at hand. Lord Beaconsfield, the author of 'Alroy,' would be gathered to his fathers in greater peace were he permitted, under his administration, to see this day and be glad.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates the means by which, and the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the final exaltation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a loving belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the remission of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Kingdom of God.

BY G. M. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S THIRD QUESTION.

Jesus said to the Scribes and Pharisees, as recorded in Luke xvi. 16: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." As you teach that the kingdom of God was not then, nor now in existence, how will you explain this text?

REPLY.

There is one grand law of interpretation of Scripture which should never be lost sight of. It is not given by uninspired men, but by the Apostle Peter, 2d letter i. 20, which is: "That no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." I understand this to mean, that, we are not, when much has been written upon a subject, to single out from all others upon that subject, one text and interpret it alone, but to the contrary to draw our conclusions from a consideration of all. To observe this rule, is but to lay the foundation by which much error may be removed and truth deduced. Before we come to the text, let me give you a few cases by way of illustration, to show the value of this rule.

1. Jesus says: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." John iii. 36. Now, to accept of this expression alone, independent of all others upon this subject, is but to conclude that when faith is exercised eternal life is preserved. But, to observe the rule, let us have a few more inspired statements upon the point—"Who (God) will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Rom. ii. 6, 7. "But he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. vi. 8. "And he (Jesus) said unto them, (disciples), Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting." Luke xviii. 29, 30. Of these texts there are a few things to suggest.

a. Faith is exercised by one before he begins to seek as described in Romans.

b. Now, in this life as a disciple, is the sowing time, and at the commencement of the next is the reaping time as described to the Galatians.

c. Jesus places the reception of life everlasting by the disciples in the world to come.

Conclusion.—Then must the first statement cited—John iii. 36,—be understood not in an absolute, but relative sense, indicating that when one exercises faith on the Son he then has the promise of everlasting life.

2. The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. Rom. viii. 16. Now were we to accept of this statement alone and in an absolute sense no other conclusion could be drawn than that disciples are now actually the children of God. But to apply the rule, the next verse renders the heirship conditional and yet incomplete—"And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. viii. 17. And Jesus in his reply to the Sadducees as set forth in Luke xx. 35, 36, places the consummation of heirship at the resurrection from the dead. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Heirship, then, as set forth in Rom. viii. 16, cannot be viewed as absolute, but only as a matter of faith, hope, and promise.

3 One more illustration of Peter's rule before we approach the text. Jesus said in his commission given to his disciples, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"—Mark xvi. 16. And Peter, when interrogated by the people upon the day of Pentecost as to what they should do, replied—"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts ii. 38. Now, the conclusion drawn from these Scriptural statements almost universally is, that salvation is now, absolutely in the possession of him who has thus obeyed. But, compare further. "Moreover brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you." 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2. Here is such an "if" a condition; salvation in these disciples yet incomplete, and future. Further, Paul says, to the Romans, viii. 24: "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Here salvation is presented, not as something already possessed, but as something hoped for. Again, Paul says—Rom. i. 16,—"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth;" and Peter says, 1st letter, i. 5, addressing disciples that they are kept by the power of God (the gospel, of course,) unto salvation ready to be revealed at the last day.

With these points, by way of illustrating the rule of interpretation and its importance we are ready to approach the text. And like the leading texts in our illustrations we grant that were there no other Scripture bearing upon the subject it would seem to be absolute, and declare a then existence of the kingdom. But let us call to our aid the language of Jesus, Luke xix. 11, 12,—"And as they heard these things, he added and spoke a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. He said, therefore, a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return."

Of this last verse, Albert Barnes, in his notes remarks: "This expression—'Went into a far country' is derived from the state of things in Judea in the time of our Savior. Judea was subject to the Romans, having been conquered by Pompey about sixty years before Christ. It was, however, governed by Jews who held the government under the Romans. It was necessary that the prince or king should receive a recognition of his right to the kingdom by the Roman emperor, and in order to this that he should go to Rome; or, as it is said here, that he might receive to himself a kingdom. This actually occurred several times. Archelaus, a son of Herod the Great, about the time of the birth of Jesus, went to Rome to obtain a confirmation of the title which his father had left him, and succeeded in doing it. Herod the Great, his father, had done the same thing before to implore the aid and countenance of Antony. Agrippa the younger, grandson of Herod the Great, went to Rome also to obtain the favor of Tiberius, and to be confirmed in his government. Apply the parable which Jesus introduced and what of its bearing upon the former text?

But this is not all we have to offer. "Joseph, of Arimathea, an honorable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus." Mark xv. 43. But why wait for the kingdom of God at this late date, if in existence and every man in it in John's day?

Jesus to the disciples in A. D. 33, said—"Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32. But why this promise if they had already received, and were in the kingdom?

Again, in A. D. 33, Jesus said to the disciples—Luke xii. 31,—"But rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you." But why seek if it had been given and they in it in John's day?

One more text we will add on this induction. On the morning of Christ's ascension, "When they (the disciples) therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel." Acts i. 6.

Now, to observe Peter's law of interpretation in view of a harmony of all these texts of Scripture, must we not accept of Luke xvi. 16, in a relative instead of an absolute sense?

Then to paraphrase the verse as we believe it teaches: The law of Moses and the teachings of the prophets were all that were given for the consideration of the people till John the Baptist. Since that time the glad tidings of the kingdom of God is proclaimed and every man—many men—embrace it.

THE HOLY LAND REVIVING.

A Land of Ruins—Efforts to Restore It—The Mormites—An American Colony—The German "Pilgrim Mission"—Movements of "Friends of Jerusalem"—Agriculture in Sharon—Jaffa Colony.

For many centuries Palestine has been emphatically a land of ruins. The population is but little more than a tenth of what it was when a "Land of Promise," and the very soil in many places ceases to produce the grape, the olive, and the orange.

But for several decades there has been a growing inclination among Jews and Christians in various parts of Europe to make an effort to restore it to its pristine beauty, and fit it for the second coming of the Messiah. Jews and Gentiles have gone thither in considerable numbers. The Jews have fancied they might restore the temple as of old, and prepare the way for their Messiah, while the Gentiles have still considered it the "Land of Promise," in which they might better their earthly fortunes.

A party of Russian Mennonites some dozen years ago settled on the plains of Sharon between Jaffa and Gaza, but the fever struck them and decimated their numbers, and they fled in despair, and sold all their improvements for a song.

Again, an American colony from Maine settled in the neighborhood of Jaffa, where, with material taken with them, they constructed houses, laid out gardens on the heights, and began with great enthusiasm. But in a little while obstacles and disappointments of every kind overtook them, they disbanded, and most of them in poverty returned to the United States by the aid of the American consul.

All these enterprises made the mistake of not going in the proper spirit; they went as adventurers to better their condition, and this they could not do with the Turk as a ruler and the Arabs and debased so-called Christians as dwellers in the land. What was needed for the work to insure the first element of success was the spirit of the martyrs.

Now this spirit was first found among the Germans, a company of whom went there and founded what was called a Pilgrim Mission, for the object of promoting colonization in a Christian spirit, Christianity and enterprise going hand in hand; but even this effort made a partial failure, and ended in the founding of a commercial house and an orphan asylum. The true men, who came to stay through good and evil times, were a race of Germans from the kingdom of Wurtemburg, who were disgusted with the rule of both Church and State at home, and who cherished in their hearts a secret longing to prepare in Palestine the land for the Messiah in second Advent, which they believe to be near. They termed themselves the "Friends of Jerusalem," and were ambitious to erect a national temple for the coming Lord.

They had originally sought aid and brethren on at their home in Wurtemburg as a Christian body, but were spurned and persecuted by both Church and State, the latter even refusing to intercede for them with the Turkish Government to obtain the privilege of buying land and settling in a body. They then sent messengers to spy out the land and bring them a report, which was by no means favorable. And still they persisted, and sent out a few determined men to try and make a beginning. Some of these were overtaken by sickness and death, a few remained in isolated positions, and some few returned. The great trouble was the poverty of the land and the persecution from all quarters.

But these pioneers learned much by bitter experience, and soon a company was formed under the very intelligent and learned Christian leader, Rev. Christopher Hoffman, that settled for a while in Beirut, preparing to reach Jerusalem by degrees. The intervention by the King of Prussia, (now Emperor of Germany,) who was interested in their undertaking, secured for them the privilege of acquiring property, and they commenced in that place various industrial pursuits, as well as schools and a hostelry, which were all greatly needed.

In a little while they moved to Haifa, at the base of Carmel, and settled on the heights, and built houses, and laid out gardens, and introduced a civilized Christian life, to the astonishment of the natives. Now a colony of them came to Jaffa and bought the deserted houses and gardens of the unsuccessful American colony. They are now a power in Jaffa, and, by their thrift, cleanliness, and order, they are producing a striking comparison between their own ways and improvements and those of the natives. Many of these latter, who were inaccessible to any other teaching, are now studying this valuable object-lesson. They come to decide, and they stay to look and wonder.

Again, another group of these Friends of Jerusalem bought the remains of the "Mission Settlement" at Sharon very cheaply; and with industry and thrift, together with a dogged perseverance, they are making this to bloom and blossom. Their principal occupation is agriculture, and many of these rich plains seem almost to entreat the passer-by to stop and cultivate them, and they may bring forth their rich products as of old. To this end they have already imported an American mowing machine, which operates to the terror of surrounding men and beasts. In this they are destined to have a long contest with the natives, who must finally be convinced in presence of their success.

Their colony in Jaffa is now engaged in the production of olive-oil and soap; the latter is being sent to America as an article of commerce and very superior and cheap it is. Oil, soap, oranges and lemons are now the principal articles of export, and the foreign commerce is increasing every year. At the same time they are making every effort to work into the interior. A party is already near Jerusalem, where a large colony will doubtless soon be planted. The founding of schools and asylums, as well as houses of entertainment for travellers and tourists, promises to give a large field for their efforts, and one in which they are becoming quite acceptable to the Turkish Government.

Vessels of the Jewish Temple.

The history of the vessels of the Jewish Temple, from their first introduction in the time of Moses the servant of God to their disappearance in the year A. D. 614, is somewhat an interesting history. One thousand four hundred and ninety-one B. C. we have the account of the making of the sacred vessels by the command of God to Moses. The material of these vessels was the most costly. The pattern for making them was shown Moses in the Holy Mount; and when finished they were placed in the tabernacle. We find them in possession of the Jewish nation under the reign of King David (2 Sam. vi. 3), on which occasion he brought the ark from Kirjath Jearim to the city of David, amidst great rejoicing by the nation, and David danced with joy before it. We suppose the vessels were with the ark at this time. See 2 Chron. v. 2, 5, 7. We see by this that they were in possession of the Jewish people in the days of King Solomon also. But in the days of Zedekiah they, together with the Jews, were carried away to Babylon, and the city of Jerusalem destroyed and plundered. Although the vessels were carried away to a strange land, they were not destroyed, for direct mention is made of them at the closing scene of the Babylonish dynasty. Belshazzar gave a banquet to his nobles in his palace, and the vessels of God's temple were brought out to be filled with wine and used as drinking cups. The hand-writing appeared upon the wall—the death-warrant of the impious king, and the same night Belshazzar was slain.

At the restoration of the Jews and their worship under Cyrus, king of Persia, the sacred vessels are mentioned again. Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord, and ordered them taken to the temple in Jerusalem. Here they remained until the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, who, after having smitten Egypt, returned and fought against Israel, and entered proudly into the sanctuary, and took away all the vessels thereof. But Antiochus did not retain them very long, for the Jews gathered themselves together under Judas Maccabaeus, and fought against their enemies, and acquired possession of their sacred vessels again. We read that after Judas had cleansed the sanctuary by aid of the priesthood, and rebuilt the altar in the place of the former which the heathen defiled, they brought the holy vessels into the temple. Judea became a province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards rebelled and Vespasian and his son Titus were dispatched with a powerful army to subdue them. They burned the temple, but preserved the candlesticks and vessels, and the rolls of parchment on which was written the law.

At the end of the great triumph given to Vespasian and his son at Rome, with long procession of haughty victors and drooping captives, was closed the beautiful temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. Josephus says, The golden candlestick, the book of the law, and the golden table formed the most distinguished part of the spoils on this occasion, and that Vespasian deposited the table and the candlestick in the Temple of Peace, while the law, and the purples of the sanctuary were lodged with great care and reverence in the palace.

In the year 455 A. D., the Vandals took Rome, plundered the city and carried away the seven candlesticks, the table of show-bread, and the vessels of the temple service to Carthage. Here they remained until the year 533, when Justinian sent his General Belisarius against the Vandals. Belisarius marched his army into Carthage. He next returns to Constantinople, the splendid capital of the Eastern Empire. The honors of the Empire were adjudged to Belisarius, and now, amid the gorgeous glitter of barbaric wealth, armor, golden thrones, beautiful statues, precious stones, we find the chief place given to the "holy vessels of the Jewish Temple." This was in the autumn of 533, A. D.

It is recorded that the superstitious mind of Justinian was troubled by fierce denunciations of a Jewish Rabbi, who predicted that prosperity and security would never rest with that nation which withheld from their lawful place these hallowed relics of a fallen people; and that the Emperor, in obedience to the promptings of this fear, freighted a vessel with his treasures, and dispatched her to the shores of Palestine. This almost reads like a fable, but we know that Justinian, imitating the example of Helena, mother of Constantine, built a splendid church at Jerusalem, which he dedicated to the Virgin. Huge stones were furnished for the building; Lebanon once more beat its mighty cedars; a vein of red marble furnished beautiful columns. And there come the last words from the pen of the historian, the closing record concerning the relics of a fulfilled dispensation. Gibbon tells us that the holy vessels of the Jewish Temple, after their long peregrination, were respectfully deposited in the Christian church at Jerusalem. Henceforth we know no more about them, not even a whisper; only we know that in A. D. 614 the Persians took Jerusalem by assault, and the rich offerings were pillaged in one day. This scene of desolation affords a view of the probable fate of these remarkable relics.—J. B. Clarke.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Humor and melancholy are twin sisters.

Many a man who has no fear of God is afraid of being seen of men when he is doing wrong.

The more a Christian enjoys of his God, the more he desires others to enjoy the same.

One good and honest life contains more solid arguments in favor of Christianity than a library full of theological books.

"There's a language that's mute, there's a silence that speaks,
There is something that cannot be told;
There are words that can only be read on the cheeks,
And thoughts but the eye can unfold.
There's a look we expressive, so timid, so kind;
So conscious, so quick to impart;
Though words, in an instant, speaks out the mind
And strikes in a moment the heart."

A truth often requires to be again and again presented to our minds to produce its full effect.

If you have been tempted to evil, fly from it; it is not falling into the water, but lying in it, that drowns.

No soul was ever lost because its fresh beginnings broke down; but thousands of souls have been lost because they would not make fresh beginnings.—F. W. Faber.

To win the prize, we never must
Slake joy our only zeal;
But if, with quiet, steadfast trust,
And self-forgetting soul,
We make God's will our daily thought,
Duty our daily care,
Then Happiness will come unsought,
An angel unaware.
Caroline May.

If any speak ill of thee, fly home to thy own conscience and examine thy heart. If thou art guilty, it is a just correction; if not guilty, it is a fair instruction.

If there be any true religion in us, it is much more likely to be discovered and drawn into actual exercise by an exhibition of the glory and grace of Christ, than by searching for it in the rubbish of our past feelings. To discover the small grains of steel mixed among a quantity of dust, it were much better to make use of a magnet than a microscope.—Andrew Fuller.

The greatest man is he who troubles himself the least about the verdict that may be passed upon him by his contemporaries or posterity, but who finds in doing good, honest work to the best of his ability "its own exceeding great reward."

O Blessed God, thou lovest best,
Within this world so false,
The humble, contrite hearts that rest
Upon Thy world-wide care;
Who, even when they weep with grief,
Can look up in Thy face,
Waiting Thy smile to give relief;
Thy time, for patient grace.

NOT AT REST.

Why does the skeptic ever insist on talking about a religion which he says is a fable? Why does the stock-broker ever and unceasingly talk up a bad lot left on his hands? Why did the foes of our Master refuse to be satisfied, until not only the victim of their hate was crucified and buried, but a seal must be placed on his grave, and a guard to patrol the tomb night after night? They could not hush those mutterings of fear and remorse. There may be not a breath of wind, yet there comes to the silent ship resting on the silent ocean a ground-swell that ever rocks it, but not to repose. Thus men try to seal down their sins and lock the sepulchre that they cannot further disturb their peace, but all in vain.—Presbyterian.

Many a Christian trusts Christ to carry him through the valley of the shadow of death, who does not rely upon Him to take him through the dread to-morrow. If you are Christ's you have no right to worry. He is a safe pilot. You can trust Him in the shallow, quiet river, as well as in the sea beyond.—Alliance.

LIFE'S PILGRIMAGE.

In dim, uncertain, winding ways
Our feet are oftimes led;
On husks and food that give no strength
Our souls are oftimes fed.
The wild, unceasing din of earth
Disturbs the inner calm;
The wormwood and the gall pollute
The honey and the balm.

The darkness and the gloom are felt,
The weariness and pain;
And thirsty souls long for the fall
Of promised "latter rain."
This mortal life is not all joy,
The perfect is to come,
When saints behold with beaming eyes
Their long-sought "harvest home."

THE RESTITUTION.

E. J. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 18, 1880.

WE are at home only a few hours each day this week, being engaged in holding meetings every evening at Argos, a town eight miles from Plymouth, which occupies our time every day from noon till midnight. To responses requested by some friends, we will give attention soon. Communications have accumulated on our hands, for some of which we hope to find room shortly.

AN advertising notice of the "Ladies Sewing Companion," will be found in another column of our paper. It is an exceedingly convenient and useful article, that is needed in every house. It is one of the few indispensable things that sells at sight. Its low price places it within the reach of all. Sold only through agents, to whom special territory is assigned. For terms, address "Adrian Cook Metallic Works," 183 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill. The ladies of this county can examine the "Companion" at Behring's old stand on Laporte street, in Plymouth, where they will find the agent, V. M. Chaplin, for Marshall county, Indiana. Persons, who write to Chicago requiring an answer, will inclose a three-cent stamp to insure a response.

For the two articles following we are indebted to the Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times, published in New York City. It may be well to state that H. Grattan Guinness, in his "Approaching End of this Age," claims that the 2300 years have a two-fold commencement and termination. He fixes the earlier beginning at B. C. 457, terminating A. D. 1843, and for another commencement he selects the first year of the era of the Seleucidæ, B. C. 312, and extends the period to A. D. 1989–90. We are inclined to the conclusion, that as the Jewish commonwealth was completely restored B. C. 420, that the seventy weeks or 490 years as the first part of the 2300 years, reached A. D. 70–73, and that the remaining 1810 reach 1880–83. The 1260 years of Mohammedan supremacy in the east, reckoned in solar measure, and commenced A. D. 622, would terminate 1882–83. A crisis is near:

THE SULTAN OF TURKEY.

Abd-ul-Hamid II. was born on August 6th, 1842, and is the fourth son of Abd-ul-Medjid, who died on June 25th, 1861. He was proclaimed Sultan on the 31st of August, 1876, as successor to his younger brother Murad V., who was deposed in consequence of his mental incapacity to transact public business. His installation was attended with all the usual congratulations and rejoicings. Hamid's mother dying young, he was adopted by a childless lady of his father's harem, who, out of the strongest affection for his mother and himself, made him heir to considerable wealth which she possessed.

Like his brother Murad, Abd-ul-Hamid was very dissipated during his father's lifetime, but his robust constitution enabled him to withstand those enervating excesses which utterly prostrated his brother. At the time of his accession to the throne a Turkish correspondent gave a very interesting account of this prince, whom he described as "thin and sinewy-looking, with bright dark eyes and a quick flashing glance."

In 1867 his uncle Abd-ul-Aziz Khan, who was then Sultan of Turkey, concluded a treaty of commerce with France and England, and in July of the same year visited the exhibition at Paris, and a few days afterward went to London, where he met with a most flattering and enthusiastic reception. The present Sultan accompanied Abd-ul-Aziz on his European trip, and contracted a taste for French clothes and French customs, many of which he has since introduced to his own household.

He is exceedingly fond of maps, both celestial and terrestrial, while the study of military, geological, and statistical charts constitutes his favorite pastime. It is reported also on trustworthy authority that he is neither a drunkard nor a spendthrift; indeed, if anything, he is somewhat "near" and parsimonious; he is fond of animals, of which he has a considerable menagerie, and is the husband of only one wife, living until just before his supreme investiture at a small palace at Kishak Hane with her and their children, and, according to the European custom, eating at the same table, and playing with the little ones like a model paterfamilias.

Nevertheless, he is a staunch member of what is called the orthodox Old Turkey party, and is very punctilious in his religious ceremonial observances, though "many-tongued rumor" says that he is not quite so strict a Mussulman and disciple of Mahomed as he professes to be. Though strenuously opposed to what is designated the Young Turkey party, he is no unreasonable fanatic, and is said even to be well disposed toward the Giaours—a term meaning infidel, and applied by the Turks to all disbelievers in the religion of Mahomed as the Prophet of Allah, and especially to Christians. He entertains, however, neither toleration nor consideration for the Greeks, whom he cordially and undisguisedly detests.

During the latter days of his brother's rule he was kept carefully under surveillance, and little was accurately known concerning him, save that, with commendable prudence, he persistently refused to ascend the throne until Murad's state was authoritatively pronounced to be hopelessly incurable, and that as a member of the "Old Turk" party he advocated war with Russia to the death rather than countenance in the most distant manner any compromise which should bring about a disintegration of the Ottoman Empire.

Since the treaty of Berlin in 1878, he has shown the greatest reluctance to carry out the reforms, both in Europe and Asia which were expressly stipulated. But upon pressure being put upon him in November last by the English government, the Porte submitted, and new pledges were obtained for the speedy and thorough performance of its treaty engagements.

Promissory notes are the well-known diplomatic coinage of the Sultan's ministers. For twenty years they have been pledging themselves to ameliorate the condition of the Christian populations of Turkey, with what results the world is but too familiar. However, on Saturday, the 8th of November last, the Sultan himself presided at a council of state, and exhorted its members to use every effort toward the regeneration of the country. The Turkish newspapers were at the same time peremptorily ordered by him, under pain of suspension, to cease their virulent attacks upon England.

THE DIFFICULTY ABOUT DR. KOELLE.

All anxiety arising from the reluctance of the Porte to honor its stipulations being allayed, and the task of reform appearing to have been fairly commenced, Englishmen were beginning to breathe freely again, when, at the beginning of the present year, Europe was suddenly startled by the announcement that the British ambassador had suspended official relations with the Porte. The reason for the movement on the part of Sir A. H. Layard was the utter disregard which the Sultan showed to his demands for the release from prison of a Mussulman schoolmaster named Ahmed Tewfik, who had been condemned to death for assisting Dr. Koelle, a Christian missionary, in the translation of the English prayer-book into Turkish. Dr. Koelle himself was returning home from the schoolmaster's house one evening last September, when he was arrested and taken to the police station. All his papers were impounded at the same time, and retained by the chief of the police.

Under these circumstances the Porte was expostulated with by Sir A. H. Layard, and an application made for the restoration of Dr. Koelle's papers, but no notice whatever was taken of the request. The British ambassador, therefore, on the 24th of December presented an ultimatum to the Porte demanding three things—that the missionary's papers should be returned, that the schoolmaster should be liberated, and that Hafiz Pasha, the police minister, who had been instrumental in securing the death sentence on Ahmed Tewfik, should be dismissed from office.

Every kind of pressure was used to induce the Sultan to yield. Even Germany and Austria united with England in asking the Porte to comply with the British demands. It was apparently felt that the time had come to let Turkey know in the most emphatic manner that Europe must have her will, and that Christendom would not tolerate the putting to death of a man in Europe for assisting a Christian in translating a Christian book.

On the 2d of January news arrived from Constantinople that Sir A. H. Layard had had a long audience with the Sultan on that day, and that the result had been satisfactory. The confiscated papers were gracefully handed over by the Sultan on the 3d instant, and official relations were resumed as soon as the requisite formalities had been observed.

And so, for the present, open and final rupture is averted. We say for the present, because whatever prudence may characterize the rulers of the Sublime Porte, the dismemberment of the Turkish Empire must be followed by its utter and irremediable ruin. A few years ago the maintenance of the integrity of the empire was made the object of such anxious effort on the part of the chief western kingdoms, that nothing seemed more improbable than its partition. But as has been shown in the prophetic work "Coming Wars," much has already been done toward its overthrow. Egypt and Greece have secured separate governments of their own; the Berlin treaty wrested away some of the finest of its remaining European provinces; and Syria is being prepared for a similar separation by the assumption of its protectorate by the British government.

Thus "The way of the kings from the East"—the Jews—is being prepared, according to the inspired prediction in Rev. xvi. 12, though the full restoration and conversion of God's ancient people will not be effected until the ushering in of the millennium, "when the Lord shall build up Zion, and shall appear in his glory" (Psa. cii. 16).

PROPHETIC IMPORT OF THE SULTAN'S CONCESSION.

The obliging and even submissive promptitude of the Sultan of Turkey in personally delivering back to the British Ambassador the papers of an arrested missionary, is one of many events which plainly evidence the nearness of the close of this dispensation and of the Second Advent of Christ.

Most extraordinary is the contrast between the mild and yielding temper of Turkey now, and its former haughty and fierce intolerance against Christians, when the Turkish Empire was, in Scripture language, the Second Woe to Christendom for 391 years, from 1453 to 1844 (Rev. ix: 13-21; 11). Evidently the mystic Euphrates is drying up, and the Advent of Christ at the Seventh Trumpet and the Seventh Vial is close at hand (Rev. xvi: 12-17).

In the ninth chapter of Revelation the Turkish or Ottoman Power is depicted under the emblem of countless armies of horsemen coming across the river Euphrates and overspreading Christendom in Asia and Eastern Europe like a cloud. And power to kill Christians is declared to be given to them for a year and a month and a day, i. e., 391 days, which in the year-day historical fulfilment denoted, according to general agreement of expositors, is 391 years.

Now it is most remarkable, as commentators have shown, that it was in A. D. 1453, when the Turks captured Constantinople, that they virtually completed their conquest of the principal provinces which thenceforth were necessarily called the Turkish Empire. This formidable persecuting empire then commenced its predicted 391 years of the Turkish Woe, which consequently ended in 1844. And it was on March 21st, 1844, that the Sultan abolished the persecuting law of killing Christian converts from Mohammedanism, and thus for the first time in the history of the Turkish Empire an edict of religious toleration was established in it.

The causes of this intervention of European Powers to obtain this remarkable edict were these: In August, 1843, a Christian Armenian youth, who, after becoming a Mohammedan under fear of punishment, had returned to his Christian faith, was put to death. This called for the interposition of the British Government and its serious remonstrances, and produced, in November, 1843, some promises of no longer punishing such converts with beheading. In December, 1843, however, a young Greek, who had become a Mussulman, having returned to his own creed as a Greek Christian at Bilegik, adjoining to Brussa, was executed. This drew forth a decisive dispatch from the English Government to their ambassador at Constantinople, demanding that Turkey should abolish, once for all, the execution of converts to Christianity.

It required the efforts of five European Powers, Austria, Prussia, France, Russia and England, to overcome the obstinate reluctance of the Porte to change the Turkish law. The difficulties were thus stated by the Turkish Grand Vizer: "The laws of the Koran compel no man to become a Mussulman; but they are inexorable both as respects a Mussulman who, after having of his own accord publicly embraced Islamism, renounces that faith. No consideration can produce a commutation of the capital punishment, to which the law condemns him without mercy. The only mode of escaping death is for the accused to declare that he has again become a Mussulman."

The Sultan, even on March 14, 1844, tried to put off the European Powers with a statement that the law did not admit of such a change; but the ambassadors refused to receive this. Their resolute firmness at length obtained the following "Official Declaration" of the Sublime Porte relinquishing the practice of Executions for Apostacy:

"The Sublime Porte engages to take effectual measures to prevent henceforth the execution and putting to death of the Christian who is an apostate from the Mohammedan faith. March 21, 1844."

The eminent Rev. E. Bickersteth, in his "Guide to the Prophecies," justly observed on this: "The date of this official declaration, March 21st, is very remarkable, as being in fact the first day of Nisan, the first sacred month of the Jews in 1844. And this is the more remarkable, as it is connected with the termination of the remarkable date of the 2300 years (Dan. viii. 14) which began with Ezra's commission to restore the sacrifices in Artaxerxes' 7th year in B. C. 456-7, and therefore ended on March 20th, A. D. 1844. (Ezra vii.) And on the first of Nisan, March 21, 1844, the (legislative) power of the Mohammedans to persecute Christianity passed away, and liberty was given for Christian worship, the true cleansing of the sanctuary.

"This is the more remarkable also as 1844 was the 1260th lunar year of the Mohammedan Calendar (which commences at the Hegira or Flight of Mohomet, A. D. 622), and so the closing year in Mohammedanism of that remarkable prophetical period of 1260 years. A letter from Tangiers, dated June 20, 1844, given in the public journals, stated: 'It seems that the Moors have always had forebodings of this year. For a long time they have been exhorting each other to beware of the 1260th year of the Hegira, i. e., A. D. 1844.'

"Another material point connected with this event is the passing away of the Turkish Woe of 390 or 391 years. (Rev. ix.) It is the general voice of Christian interpreters that the sixth angel sounding the second Woe Trumpet describes the Turkish woe. The importance of this fact will be seen by the prophecy in Rev. ix. 14-18. We are, therefore, clearly on the verge of the great events of the Second Coming of Christ and the Resurrection."

These sound views of Bickersteth, as above stated, are in the main agreed to by other expositors, including Mr. Grattan Guinness, in his "Approaching End of this Age."

No less than six prophetic dates apparently terminated in 1843-5, as follows:

BEGINNING.	SIX DATES.	ENDING.
B. C. 456, the capitulary of Manasseh and Ezra of the Ten Tribes.	2300 solar years, or 7 weeks + 62 weeks + 1 week, Dan. ix. 24.	End A. D. 1844.
B. C. 602, the overthrow of the throne of David.	2520 lunar years, directed to A. D. 622.	End A. D. 1844.
B. C. 457, Artaxerxes' decree to rebuild Jerusalem, Ez. vii.	2370 years, Dan. viii. 14.	End A. D. 1844.
A. D. 445, the completion of Jerusalem's Code of Laws.	1290 years, Dan. xii. 11.	End A. D. 1834-5
A. D. 622, the Hegira, when Modern Cities-Car begins.	1260 lunar years of Mohammedanism, Rev. xi. 2, 3.	End A. D. 1843.
A. D. 1453, the capture of Constantinople by the Turks.	391 years, Rev. ix. 15.	End A. D. 1844.

The momentous conclusion which these facts seem to bring us to (for we do not venture a positive assertion) is, that if the 1290 years did terminate in 1844-5, then the 1335 years which commenced with the 1290, and are only 45 years longer, will terminate about 1890 as the end of this dispensation and at the time of full blessedness. "Blessed is he that cometh to the 1335 days." (Dan. xii. 12).—M. Baxter.

AMERICAN RAILROAD PROJECT IN EGYPT.

BOSTON, Feb. 10.—A company organized in this city yesterday under a charter from this state dated Feb. 6, 1880, for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad from Cairo, Egypt, through Port Said and Damascus, to connect with the Euphrates Valley Railroad, about to be built by an English company. Branch roads are also provided for by the charter. The Turkish government has been applied to for concession of the necessary right of way.

Three thousand Turcomans under Haik Mohammed have crossed the River Oxus for Afghanistan.

Nine thousand buildings were consumed by the recent great conflagration in Tokio, Japan.

A dispatch from Berlin says it is reported here that a special alliance is about to be concluded between England, Germany and Austria.

BUCHAREST, February 14.—England, France and Germany will probably recognize Roumanian independence simultaneously in a few days.

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Jan. 26.—The latest report of the Ministry of Education shows a steady increase in public instruction throughout the Empire. The school attendance is now 2,600,000 to 3,000,000 scholars, however, unduly preponderating.

Numerous changes of policy here are attributed to the advice of General Grant.

The Chinese is completely subdued. Last year there were 108,000 cases, and 101,000 deaths, one case to every 500 inhabitants. In the southern districts the ravages were frightful. In Lochoo 725 out of every 10,000 were attacked.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A despatch from Vienna to the Daily Telegraph says: "Intelligence has been received here from an unimpeachable source to the effect that, at the time Gen. Roberts so unexpectedly found himself in a critical position before Cabul, the Russian General Abramow, governor of Samarcand, had secretly arrived at Derwaz, east of Cabul, the centre of agitation. There is no longer the slightest doubt but that a league has been formed in Central Asia, under the auspices of Russia, against English domination, and that the most prominent and influential member of the league is the Ameer of Bokhara, whose daughter married Abdurrahman Khan, the pretender."

French missionaries give a painful account of the ravages of famine in Mesopotamia and Kurdistan, Asiatic Turkey, where Christians, Jews and Mohammedans are all suffering.

DEATH OF FRED DOUGLASS'S ALLEGED OWNER.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 10.—Capt. Thomas Auld, who was formerly the owner of Frederick Douglass, died on Sunday last at his residence near St. Michaels, Talbot county.

The cyclopedias say that Mr. Douglass was reared as a slave on the plantation of Col. Edward Lloyd, in Talbot county, Md., until, at the age of ten, he was sent to Baltimore to live with a relative of his master. He secretly taught himself to read and write, and, in accordance with a resolution long entertained, fled from Baltimore and from slavery on Sept. 3, 1838, making his way to New York and thence to New Bedford, where he married and lived for two or three years, supporting himself by day labor on the wharves and in various workshops.

FLOOD IN THE CUMBERLAND RIVER.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 10.—The Cumberland river is still rising, 250 families have been forced to move from their homes in the various depressions. The lumbermen of Nashville have suffered heavily. The river is nine feet higher than ever before, being eighty feet above low-water mark. All the steamers in Upper Cumberland are reported higher than ever known, in consequence of a continuous rain for thirty-six hours.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—It is said that serious complications have arisen between England and Persia touching Herat. Negotiations have not been completely suspended, but they have failed for the moment.

DANGER OF FAMINE OVER.

LONDON, Feb. 16.—The Duchess of Marlborough, in a letter to the Lord Mayor of London, says: "The danger of famine appears over. If the charity of the public continues, no person in Ireland need be allowed to die for lack of food, but the committe, to bring their labors to a successful close, must spend over £40,000 per week for six weeks more."

PESHAWER, February 15.—In view of an expected attack on the British troops around Cabul by the end of February, preparations are being made to enable General Bright's division to move up and reinforce General Roberts.

A dispatch from Lahore announces that orders have been sent to Candahar for the army to advance to Ghuznee early in March. General Roberts has sent a native envoy to Ghuznee to confer with Mohammed Jan.

BERLIN, February 15.—Russia has been sending to Berlin and Paris firms with a view to a heavy loan.

BREVITIES.

INFANTICIDE IN THE EAST INDIES.

Infanticide was terribly common in the north-west provinces of India during the year 1878-79. The Inspector General of Police reports that no less than 26 per cent. of the female children born were killed. Among the poorer people a higher value is placed on the boys; and, therefore, when food is insufficient for all, the girls suffer most.

A FAMINE IN PERSIA IS REPORTED.

It is so severe that people are selling their children for food. Mr. Cochran, one of the American missionaries in Persia, has forwarded an appeal which says: "Already bread riots and mob violence have ruled in the markets two days the past week; some have died of hunger, and the signs are that many more must perish. The Christians are the poorer and more oppressed and suffer the most. In the direction of Bagdad the famine is very severe, and many are fleeing hither. The condition now is terrible, and before us is blackness and darkness. The help needed is beyond our power to give, and we know not of where to ask for help, except first to entreat that the mercies of the Lord may turn again to us, and then to ask the merciful aid of Christians to whom God has given more abundantly. This is the appeal of five thousand Christian families in our immediate vicinity, and indirectly of ten times as many Mussulmans and Jews in this district."

BURIED OAK TIMBER.

In deepening a river in the neighborhood of Norrkoping, says the Timber Trades Journal, in order to make it accessible for ships of heavier draught, among several objects of interest brought up from the bottom eight oak trees were found at a depth of seven feet under the old bottom. The bark was almost decayed, and when it was taken off the wood was found to be hard and black, resembling ebony. The trees are supposed to have been lying in the earth 900 years. The trees have been sold to a firm of joiners, who intend using them for cabinet work.

THE EMPRESS EUGENIE.

The Empress Eugenie has intimated to the Union Steamship Company her intention to embark in their Royal mail steamship German in March next for conveyance to Natal, en route to Zululand, for the purpose of visiting the spot where her son lost his life. The Empress will be accompanied by several ladies and gentlemen, and a small retinue of servants. The German will leave England with the Cape of Good Hope mails on the 23th of March and her great speed should insure her reaching Natal in ample time to allow the Empress to arrive at her destination by the first of June, the anniversary of her son's death. To accomplish this, the German, after leaving Cape Town in the performance of her mail duties, will proceed direct to Natal before carrying out her engagements at intermediate ports. Although special arrangements will be made by the Union Steamship Company in regard to accommodation, it is understood to be Her Majesty's wish that no state or ceremony should be observed.

The project is still discussed, in Russian journals, of connecting the Caspian and Black seas by a system of canals, according to the designs of M. Daniloff, an eminent engineer. The proposed water courses are to comprise a canal of 300 versts in length from the river Terek to the watershed of the Manitch, which links the Don with the Caspian; a canal of 320 versts from the mouth of the Kutave to enter the Volga, near Astrachan; a third of 350 versts from the mouth of the Kutave westward through the valley of the Manitch to the Don; and, finally, a branch from the canal to Serebriakoff on the Caspian. By means of another special branch to the Black Sea, in the direction of the westerly portion of the Manitch, it is proposed, according to M. Daniloff's comprehensive plan, to provide a complete water thoroughfare between the Volga and the Don, the Black and Caspian seas.

At a meeting held in Boston, January 10–11, 1880, Mr. C. W. Tibbetts, of Dover, N. H., thus spoke of the Palestine Railroad. He called attention to the important fact that the Company being organized in Massachusetts, under the "Foreign Railroad Act" of the State, would give it great advantages. He pointed out upon the large map the location of the road: Starting at Port Said, at the mouth of the Suez Canal, it would follow the coast of the Mediterranean, a few miles back from the shore, very nearly in the track of the old Roman highway; passing through El Arish, Gaza, Askelon, Asadod, Ramleh, Lyda, the Plain of Sharon, the mountain pass of Megiddo, into the Plain of Esdraelon; thence north of the Sea of Galilee to Damascus, and the Euphrates River, where it will connect with the "Euphrates Valley Railroad," now in process of construction by an English Company. This road would have branches to Jerusalem, Jaffa, Nablus, (the ancient Shechem,) Acre, and Beyrout, Aleppo, Iskanderoon, and perhaps others. Mr Tibbetts spoke of the expense of starting the enterprise. The charter here would cost but fifty dollars. Two thousand dollars would probably secure the right of way in Turkey. The survey would not be expensive. The route is mostly level; the only mountainous region of the main line being from Esdraelon across the Jordan; and in crossing the Jordan, the road would not enter the depression below the Mediterranean level, but cross the river far enough north to keep above the level of the sea.

The mustard plant, so small in this country, in the valley of the Jordan is often ten feet high. Sometimes it is as tall as a horse and its rider. Its stem is about one inch thick. Small birds such as goldfinches and linnets settle among the branches in flocks for the seed, and sometimes much larger birds are seen in these trees.

POETRY.

Seek and Find.

TO MISS LIZZIE SWARTZ.

Go thou to God's Best Book and earnest seek,
For what is covered from the careless eye;
Thy lost condition learn and Mercy's plan.
Whereby to gain o'er death the victory.

Dig, as for treasure hidden in a field,
And finding, go sell all thou hast and buy;
Vain pleasure sell, and fame, and luxury,
And wile the fadeless for eternity.

Seek for these "the priceless pearls of truth,
Then hold them fast, and thy dear Lord obey,
That, hundred-fold, the present time may give,
The future, pleasures that shall never decay.

Accept the ancient promise of thy God,
Just what He says to all that abide believe,
For this is Faith, that lacking, none can please,
Nor blest reward of future crown receive.

Scorn not to wear the pilgrim's lowly dress,
Nor fear to walk with humble pilgrim band,
He works out well who carries garb of pride,
Seeks God to please, yet takes the world-ling's hand.

Mark as the Master was, the child must be,
As brave for truth, as patient bearing scorn;
Firm in the Faith, nor moved from Hope away,
That looks to glorious resurrection morn.

The tried gold buying, that he may be rich,
And raiment white of those who overcome,
That, in the Book of Life, may be his name,
His place, in Heavenly Father's home.

Notes of Recent Travel and Sojourn with the "Household of Faith"—Number 5.

A. H. MACRUDER.

THE SEQUEL OF THE MOODY MEETINGS—THE CHURCH AND THE CAUSE AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The Moody movement proved Cleveland to be like Athens at the period of Paul's visit—Acts xvii.—"in all things too superstitious," or, as the Diaglott version better renders it—"extremely devoted to the worship of demons" (false gods). Indeed, such is undoubtedly true of all the modern Gentile cities. They are antitypes of the heathen cities of antiquity. This is not to be wondered at, for they teach the very same doctrine in religion and philosophy. This, at first sight, may seem to be a bold assertion, but it is susceptible of easy proof. At Athens, as it is written, "Certain philosophers of the epicureans and of the stoics encountered Paul"—and they denounced him as a "babbler"—a setter forth of strange gods," and the reason is added, "because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection." Now, it is familiar knowledge that these philosophers believed and taught the doctrines of the inherent "immortality of the soul;" that is, that men being already endowed with immortality never die—that, in fact, they do not really die—that they only seem to die, and that when the breath, which the ancients called the soul, goes out of the body at death, the man continues to live on, in Elysium (their heaven) or in Tartarus (their hell) forever. What candid man will deny that such is now the accepted orthodox doctrine preached in all the churches, both Catholic and Protestant, in Cleveland, and throughout "all Christendom?" It is true there is some unimportant difference of opinion among these sects as to what they call the intermediate state; the Catholics claiming a purgatory as a sojourn for their dead, and some Protestants setting apart a fanciful Paradise for their saints. But, as both are stout champions of that hoary heathen falsehood—the immortality of the soul—first invented and palmed off on the credulity of our first parents in the garden of Eden, by the serpent, who told them they "should not surely die"—each practically dispenses with and ignores the great foundation corner-stone of the Christian's faith and hope—the resurrection of the dead. This, the Bible teaches as God's plan of salvation, and the only hope of future life—of man's escape from the perpetual dominion over him of death and the grave.

That the "Orthodox" do practically dispense with the resurrection as the means of our coming to life again, from the death state to which Adam's sin consigns us, is proved by their own confession of their faith in the immortal soul theory. Now, if that doctrine be true, there is no such thing as death, man lives on forever on earth, in purgatory, in heaven or in hell, and there can be, obviously, no resurrection from the dead, if man never dies. Thus the Bible doctrines of future life only by the resurrection—of immortality to man only in and through Christ who, being the resurrection and the life, only hath it to bestow,—is completely overthrown and disproved. It was because of this same false doctrine, insidiously propagated by the philosophers in the church at Corinth, that Paul wrote his masterly and conclusive arguments contained in 1 Cor. xv. In it, he reasons: If there be no resurrection of the dead; "if the dead rise not (verses 16-18), then they that are fallen asleep (i.e. dead) in Christ are perished"—(live no more)—a position wholly at war with the immortal soul theory, which affirms constant and continuing conscious life to the departed, whether they ever rise from the dead or not. Now, the doctrine of future life which Paul preached, that is, by means of resurrection, was widely variant from the creed of the Athenian philosophers, for they characterized it, when preached by Paul, as strange and new (Acts xvii. 19, 20), and they "mocked" at it (verse 32). We know that these prototypes of the modern evangelicals, preached and taught the immortal soul theory as their successors, religious and philosophical, do to this day—which teaching, as we have seen, is logically subversive of Paul's resurrection doctrine, for both cannot be true. Nor is this the only vital difference between the philosophers of old and modern preachers, for it is written in the seventh verse that Paul preached that, "there was another King (besides Cæsar), one Jesus," thereby stirring up the people, even to the extent, as they said, of "turning the world upside down." Now, let the people observe that no such revolutionary preaching as this is ever heard now-adays from the Orthodox Gentile pulpits, for it is notorious the modern evangelicals do not teach, for they do not believe in Jesus as that King, whom, as Paul taught, when he came back from his Father's right hand, should overturn Cæsar's throne (the present Gentile governments among men) and erect his divine kingdom on its ruins. Let Mr. Moody and his clerical colleagues, like the apostles, "preach through Jesus the resurrection of the dead"—Acts iv. 2,—let them denounce as false and pernicious the Pagan dogma of innate immortality in man—the going to heaven or hell at death; let them proclaim the second coming of Christ in great power and glory to set up God's kingdom on earth—Dan. ii. 44; Luke i. 32-34,—to sit on the throne of his father David in Jerusalem and reign visibly over all nations, and to judge the wicked at a future judgment day, and we shall see in how short a time their churches will be deserted, their salaries and supplies cut off and "Othello's occupation gone." Why? Because this Gentile, apostate generation, like their Jewish types in the days of Jesus and the apostles "will not endure sound doctrine," 2 Tim. iv. 3-4, having so long had their ears turned from the truth unto fables by the preaching of these very "evangelists." Hence, though having eyes, the people see not, and ears, they hear not. Jesus truly prophesied of these days, saying, "As it was in the days of Noah, ... Likewise as it was in the days of Lot .... even so shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed," Luke xvii. 26-31, asking, very significantly, (Luke xviii. 8), "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Until he comes, his faithful servants must obey his command to preach the gospel of the kingdom among all nations as a witness, and that the few of every generation as they appear in this transient, moving panorama of human existence, who are of good and honest hearts, may hear and heed, if they will, the joyful proclamation of life, blessedness and immortality, offered to them by him "who only hath immortality" to be bestowed at his coming and in his kingdom.

It may be well to put on record the sequel of the Moody meetings in Cleveland. It appeared, after all the time, labor and money expended, the ingathering of converts was very meagre. After all the long-continued efforts, urged on by all the "evangelical churches," as they complacently style themselves, their disappointment must have been great, that only a paltry few of the multitudes who thronged their assemblies, "professed conversion"—too few, indeed, to excite any special concern as to the division of the spoils among the flocks of the eagerly expectant clergy. Such a result proves what has been often remarked, that of the crowds who attend the Moody meetings and who are supposed to be anxious religious enquirers, far more than one-half are mere lookers-on—led by curiosity—coming to see what would happen, to hear the stirring music and to view the vast crowd. They care little or nothing for the religious aspects of the occasion, and, in short, are composed mainly of that kind of people who frequent the theatre, the circus, the horse race, the fair and cattle show or any other place of popular amusement. Such, alas! are the natural fruits of the modern, clerical evangel preached to the people in this enlightened nineteenth century.

It affords the writer no pleasure to record such unwelcome facts—facts enacted under the eye and with the connivance of the avowed friends of the cause of Christ. Would that it were otherwise; but we cannot forget that the New Testament is filled with cautions and warnings against the assaults, bitter and virulent, on the cause of truth, by professed and zealous but mistaken friends,—attacks of such a nature and so insidious as "to deceive even the elect, if it were possible." Often these very friends, from ignorance or want of due attention to God's word, know not what they do. But these of us who, with that word in our hands and reading these warnings therein written, dare not keep silence, but must sound out the alarm, in hope that some of these honest but mistaken revivalists, such as Moody and Sankey & Co., who, like ancient Israel, "have a zeal for God but not according to knowledge," may hear and take heed in time.

Whether we regard the immediate or the final fruits of these revival excitements, they are always pernicious and unhealthy. The whole system of religious conversions, by any other agency than God's word, is a deplorable blunder. Such conversions are deceptive and ensnaring. Their last state is worse than the first, for, unless their victims are awakened in time to the delusion, they postpone or "neglect the great salvation" provided by the true gospel and carry the deception to their graves. The history of all great revivals is the same. Their fruits are never permanent. The offspring of fear and fright, of feeling and emotion, resting not on reason or faith, their results are necessarily transient and temporary. Who ever heard of a sane man being always in a state of passionate emotion—of chronic excitement in religion? Take one as an example of all.

Many of us may remember the great revival of 1859-60, in Ireland. Mr. Nelson, a Presbyterian minister in Belfast, gives us this testimony concerning it. He says frankly: "The revival was made to rest, for its reality, on certain extraordinary conversions which have since proved false and wicked, the consequence being an immensely increased immortality in Ulster."

Again, another extract declares. "Many of the earlier revivalists whose mental calibre could not stand the excitement of the movement have found a permanent home in lunatic asylums, while multitudes of others, puffed up with spiritual pride, have fallen into worse diseases than those of the mind. Many who three years ago were distinguished as revivalist preachers are now drunkards and outcasts; some now lying in prison charged with crime."

Have drunkenness and immortality decreased in the district where the revival chiefly prevailed? The very contrary is the fact. Thus judged by its fruits, the revival movement in 1859-60, must not be considered as "a refreshing stream of God's grace," as some have not hesitated to call it, but as a withering blight which has parched the ground which it seemed to refresh, and has left behind it fruits, the full bitterness of which will never be fully known until the day of doom.

But these deplorable effects are not confined to the victims of the delusion alone. Other incidental mischiefs follow. In this connection it is remarkable that, in the report of the "National Christian Convention of Protestant Divines and Laymen," assembled in New York in 1868, "Mr. Moody, of Chicago," says the report, "made the noteworthy remark that city missions had proved failures, on the ground that the wrangling among the different sects, prevented the creation of permanent congregations from the converts made." Thus we see confusion naturally following in the wake of fanaticism. On the last day of the convention, Mr. Moody said also among other things, "What we wanted was live preaching to reach the masses; that opera singing in churches can't do it." Yet we know that Mr. Moody still travels with his choristers, Sankey and others, whose performances are supplemented by the resounding organ and the martial Kent bugle. Doubtless, he thinks that instrumental is better than operatic music "to reach the masses." Alas! he has never tried the apostolic method of reaching the masses, i. e., by preaching the gospel of the kingdom to them, and the speedy coming again of Christ, the King of Israel, to rule the world in righteousness. This might prove the most powerful agency to the desired effect. Will he learn himself and teach others the divine plan?

Saved by Baptism.

By the ark, "a few, that is eight persons were carried safely through the waters" of the flood. "And immersion, a representation, of this now saves us, * * * by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

There are many persons who contend that salvation is not dependent upon baptism, that all that is necessary is to have faith, and live a moral life, and God will save. But the apostle here argues, and likens the ark saved those eight persons from the flood, so baptism now saves us; that it so connects us with the resurrection of Jesus Christ as to save us by that resurrection. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death certainly we shall be also in that of his resurrection." "We have been entombed with him by the immersion into that death, that as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father so we also should walk in the new life."

If we have died with Christ, we have been justified from sin, our old man was crucified with him, so that the body of sin might be rendered powerless, that we might no longer be enslaved by sin.

Though we count ourselves dead by sin, (having to pass under death), yet if sin does not reign in our bodies, if we do not obey its desires, we can count ourselves living by God in the Anointed Jesus. We present ourselves to God as if alive from the dead.

Baptism is not a washing off of the dust that collects upon the body, "not a putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God." We answer to God by being baptized, that we believe, by dying with Christ, we shall also live with him through a resurrection of the dead; live, to die no more. A man may be instructed in, and believe the Gospel of the kingdom, but until he obeys from the heart that mold of instruction, he has not a good conscience; he has not been made free from the law of sin and of death. He is still condemned. The law of sin is death. His mouth is vain, he is yet in his sins. The dread, the wages, the penalty, still hangs over him. Fear of coming judgment will not let his conscience rest. He has not put himself into a position to have his sins taken away; never complied with the conditions where Christ's death and resurrection can avail him anything. He has not made answer to God.

Christ is the antitype of the ark. Noah was saved because he went in by a door into the ark, he was saved because he obeyed, because he complied with the conditions of salvation.

God proffers to save us from the second death, if we will come into Christ, the ark of safety through baptism. "As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." If we have not been baptized into Christ, we have not put him on, we have not become Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise. It is only through baptism that we are adopted into the family of God; there we take Christ's name, there we figure his death and resurrection, and have God's pledge given of our own future resurrection to an endless life.—It is useless to say that God can save us anyhow; that our consciences are at rest about the matter. There are a great many people who are at rest as to taking any steps towards their salvation. But God has not promised to save them, a great many who hope to be saved, who do not believe a word of what he has promised. But will he save them? Did he give Israel "the rest" when he refused to believe? Did he continue the throne to Saul when he disobeyed? Satan loves to lull us to rest. He loves to make us believe it not necessary to do quite as God says; almost will do, but almost will lose us ourselves, will deprive us of the kingdom.

"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of your sins," then will your sins be remitted, then will you make answer of your faith to God, then will you be out from under the sentence of condemnation. "They that gladly received the word of Peter were baptized." If you have received the word, be baptized. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

Ancient Manuscripts.

Many MSS. were written for the use of scholars during the dawn of the revival of letters, in the 13th and 14th centuries, and in the first half of the 15th, and even after the art of printing was discovered, before it came into extensive use, the practice of copying MSS. was still continued.

The oldest MSS. extant are those of the sacred Scriptures; some of these go back 1000 years, and some at least 1500. The Codex Cottonianus (of which only fragments have escaped the fire in which it was burnt), and the Codex Vaticanus date back as far as the 4th century, and Codex Sinaiticus, discovered by Tischendorf in the middle of the present century, in the convent of St. Catharine, on Mt. Sinai, whence its name, is supposed to date about the middle of the 4th century.

No classical MSS. are of equal age, the oldest not dating back earlier than the middle or end of the 9th century. The oldest MS. of Herodotus, who wrote about 400 years B. C., is dated A. D. 950, and that of Plato, who wrote about the same time, A. D. 895. The oldest MS. of Homer, known as the Townsend MS., in the British Museum, is as recent as the 14th century. But there is a Syriac palimpsest of Homer which dates back as far as the 5th century; this, however, contains only 2000 lines. Another MS., containing only the 10th book, was found in the hands of a mummy, at Moufalout, in upper Egypt. Another partial MS. of Homer was found, in 1825, by a French gentleman, on the island of Elephantine, also in upper Egypt. This is regarded as unquestionably the oldest classical MS. extant, dating back probably to the times of the Ptolemies. It is beautifully written in capitals, and was in a good state of preservation when found. The Herculanean Rolls, we also know, are necessarily old, and there are some Greek papyri which date before Christ. Not a single one, however, of the thousands of MSS. existing, whether they be of the Scriptures or the classics, is original, i. e., written by the author's hand, but does a vestige of the originals remain, but they are all copies of copies, and all the work of a comparatively recent date.

DIED.

McKIM—At Mount Troy, Ind., Feb. 27th, Hiram McKim, aged three-score years and three months.

Elnora was a firm believer in the Abrahamic faith, and leaves others almost of a like precious faith baptized. She had a quiet, sweet disposition and a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price, and always seemed to be about to depart. She leaves a devoted husband and little babe. O, may we be so fortunate as to meet all our children where sorrow being no more, we can all sing praises to God and the Lamb forever. Yes, dear ones, we hope to meet you all in that happy land, where parting is unknown, and where the inhabitants never say they are sick. Then let us be faithful unto death, that we may receive a crown of life. Dear brother, do not cry, I do too, poor! Perhaps you are using that tobacco weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment of the sin that is in the use of it—to poorly subdue that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $300, and will they please give us their views. Can you help a poor cause. My name is Abraham Pontius. I am 52 years old. I have a large family to support. I have a small farm of seventy. I work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear editor, I will enclose $3.00 to commence on. I send Thy Kingdom Come, of the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell.

Notice.

Having closed my labors as Pastor of the Church of God, Mount Zion, I am now ready to engage in Pastoral labors in other congregations, or as the Lord may open the way for me as an Evangelist, as the door may open.

Jan. 27, 1881. G. W. GILLILAND.

Republic, Clark County, Ind.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

We will commence a series of Scripture Lectures, Feb. 2, and continue about two weeks. And by request of the brethren at East Plum River, will attend the conference to be held there Feb. 20, 21 and 22, if no preaching brethren.

J. W. HENSHAW.

The Lord willing there will be a conference at East Plum River, Carroll county, Ill., to commence Friday evening at 7 o'clock, Feb. 20, 1880, and continue over Sunday. Humility.

CAROLINE MAY.

Humility is not alone
A prostrate bending at God's throne,
Where we confess, with self-abasement low,
Our sin—and—sorrow—helplessness;
Although that duty must be
Deepest before the Deity.

But after prayer—in life—prayer,
When the full heart can better feel its care,
Its latest wounds fresh probed, and healed,
And not one chastisement withheld,
Whether the—best—and—sore
The test of our humility.

We love from power, and go away
Fresh for the battle of the day;
And then, perchance, some angry word,
Some envious—or—hasty deed,
Or false suspicion, may make us
Pardon upon our—self—petition.

Do reddening cheek and eye of fire
Flash quickly back indignant ire?
Or, slow to anger, do we prove
Our meekness—gentleness—and love,
By silence, and by coldness?
For Meekness is Humility.

Perhaps some thorny trial lies
In wait, to catch us by surprise.
Some friend, whom we had deemed so sure,
Whose friendship would for life endure,—
Has cooled and changed and turned away,
And all our hearts with sore dismay.

Do we believe this trouble springs
From chance, or, that the pain it brings
Is not the very pain God meant
Should come with the best—what—event?
O trust in God: for Faith must be
The groundwork of Humility.

Perhaps there falls a withering blight
Upon the plans that once looked bright;
Shrouding the goal for which we aim,
Filling us with a sense of shame,
That, though we work with earnest heart,
No end accomplished crowns our art.

Does the long failure of success
Our courage weary, and depress?
Honor is God's. Its time is set;
The "due time" promised is not yet:
Patience must first perfected be,
For Patience is Humility.

In disappointments, griefs, and cares,
Let daily duty test our prayers.
Jesus will grant us, as we ask,
His willing aid for life's hard task:
With grace, and then with glory, He
Will crown all true Humility.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Character and Proximity.—No. 1.

J. P. WESTHEIMER.

John was then surrounded by the waters of the great sea: and had been familiar with seas during much of his life. Whenever the Roman earth occupied his vision, the great sea occupied a very large division: when the new earth comes under view, this new feature attracts his attention, a beautiful earth without a sea.

2. The principal objects and agents seen, require the literal interpretation. The words and terms used are the following: "New heavens," "New earth," "New Jerusalem," "Tabernacle," "Men," "People," "Tears," "Sorrows," "Crying," "Pain," "Former things," "All things new," "Alpha and Omega," "God," "Son," "Classes of persons," vs. 8, "Lake," (old earth,) "Light," "Wall," "Gates," "Twelve tribes," "Foundation," "Apostles," "Golden reed," "Shape of the city," "Stones," "Temple," "Sun," "Moon," "Nations," "Kings," "Day," vs. 25, "Night," vs. 25, "Characters," vs. 25, "River," Rev. xxii. 1, "Street," vs. 2, "Tree of life," "Fruit," "Leaves," "Healing," "Candle," "Light."

3. The earth and its drapery must be as literal in the seventh age, as in the six previous ages.

4. Symbols are generally literal objects or agents selected from the natural world, and are, therefore literal.

5. The early Christian fathers gave these chapters a literal interpretation. Mystic theology is of more recent date. Many other reasons might be added, but these are sufficient.

The most remarkable change between the condition of the earth in its sixth and seventh ages will be in the amount and distribution of their waters, an earth in more than Eden loveliness, yet without a lake, or a sea, or an ocean, watered by one river flowing out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. It is quite impossible to conceive the infinite variety of physical changes that would grow out of such a varied arrangement of its waters. The earth, increased in magnitude, surrounded with pure, uniform, and cloudless atmosphere; with its ancient lake, sea and ocean beds filled with groves of the tree of life, and watered by the pure river of water of life, and we have an element of human development and happiness quite unknown to this age. What a vast increase of population would find room on the sites of these now useless waters.

3. The coming age (the new earth) will be vastly superior in its climate. It is said that there is no night there; consequently these alternations in the temperature are unknown. It is also stated, that "in the midst of the street of it (New Jerusalem the capital of the new earth) and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bore twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month," continually, which implies that the changes of seasons, are excluded. There being no large bodies of water. The climate would be mild and quite uniform. The idea has been advanced, that, at the fall, the earth was tilted at an angle of twenty-three and a half degrees, causing the changes of seasons; should the planes of the ecliptic and equator again become coincident, the climate of Eden would be restored. We do not pretend to say what changes will follow the new order of things: of this we are certain, that it will be perfectly adapted to the pleasure and the health of its inhabitants.

4. The seventh age of the earth will be more productive. During the reign of subjugation, the official reign of Messiah which is introductory to the joint reign, the land of Israel, the seat, or territory of the fifth monarchy, is very productive. This will appear from Isa. lxv. 17 to the close; also from other passages.

What may be said of the land of Israel, will be true of all the earth. The new arrangement is designed for the happiness of a righteous nation, and will be filled up to subserve that end.

5. The coming age will be superior in its light. Let it be kept before the reader, that we are investigating the physical aspect of the future age; that it is the seventh geological epoch of the earth's existence. In former ages its light has been progressive; and that such is to be its future, we design to show. What is light? It is unessential. It is inherent in the Deity. "God is light." 1 John i. 5. The evidence of God's continued being is seen in light; it is the reflection of the face of Jehovah, we can not look upon it and live. It must be tempered to our present condition. Should we stand on the moon and look upward we should see the face of the sun. Stand upon the sun and look upward and we would gaze into the fountain of light.

We shall speak of natural light only, the light of the first Eden, and which shall be the glory of the new earth.

A few specimens of the light of the coming age have been seen in the sixth, or present age. "And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven; and there was thick darkness in all the land of Egypt three days: They saw not one another, neither rose any from his place three days; but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings." Ex. x. 22, 23. "And the angel of God, which went before the camp of Israel, removed and went behind them; and the pillar of the cloud went from before their face, and stood behind them: And it came between the camp of the Egyptians and the camp of Israel; and it was a cloud of darkness (to them) but it gave light by night to (these—Israel): So that the one came not near the other all the night." Ex. xiv. 19, 20. "In the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light (pillar) of fire." Ps. lxxviii. 14.

Moses was on Sinai forty days and nights, at the giving of the law. "And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone; and Moses put the vail upon his face again until he went in to speak with him." Ex. xxxiv. 25.

"At the transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 2, And (Christ) was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light."

"And as he (Saul) journeyed, he came near Damascus; and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven." Acts ix. 3.

In Paul's descriptions he uses the following: "There shone a great light round about me." Acts xxii. 6. "And they that were with me saw indeed the light," vs. 9. "And when I could not see for the glory of that light," 11. "At mid-day, O King, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun." Acts xxvi. 13. The light was so intense as to eclipse the noon-day sun and make him blind.

Peter saw the light at the transfiguration; also in prison. "A light shined in prison." Acts xii. 17.

These specimens teach us the literality of the light of the coming age, both in its morning, (during the reign of subjugation) and in the meridian brightness of the joint-reign of peace. The prophets speak of the light of the reign of Messiah.

In Isaiah xxx. 25, 26, (Bishop Lowth). "And on every lofty mountain, and on every high hill, shall be disporting rills, and streams of water, in the day of the great slaughter, when the mighty fall. And the light of the moon shall be as the light of the meridian sun; and the light of the meridian sun shall be seven-fold; in the day when Jehovah shall bind up the breach of the people; and shall heal the wound, which his stroke hath inflicted."

In Isaiah lx. 19, 20. (Lowth). "No longer shall thou have the sun as a light by day; nor by night shall the brightness of the moon enlighten thee. For Jehovah shall be to thee an everlasting light, and thy God shall be thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down: Neither shall thy moon wane: For Jehovah shall be thy everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." "And it shall come to pass in that day, (that) the light shall not be clear, (nor dark. But it shall be) one day, which shall be known to the Lord, not day nor night, but it shall come to pass, (that) at evening time it shall be light." "And Jehovah shall be king over all the earth." Zech. xiv. 6, 7, 9.

In some instances the prophets look through the reign of subjugation, in to the joint reign.

2 Peter iii 13, and Rev. xxi. entire, and the xxii. to the 5th verse inclusive, refer to the joint reign. The light of that reign is clearly defined in chapter xxi. 11, 23, 24, 25, and in xxii 5. "Having the glory (light) of God; and her light (was) like unto a stone most precious, even; like a jasper stone, clear as crystal." vs. 11. "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten; and the Lamb (is) the light thereof. And the nations of them who are saved walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there." vs. 23, 24, 25. "And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign forever and ever." vs. 5.

The light of the coming age is not the reflections of his creatures, but direct radiations from the Father and the Son, the fountain of all glory. It is not obscured by night, nor by tempest, neither is it ever the subject of an eclipse. Always in the cloudless sky, and always shining.

Double and single reflections are required to temper the light to the wants of this age, but for the crowning epoch, it will be the radiated light of the deity himself.

The earth in the coming age is filled up on a grand, and most magnificent scale, she puts on her wedding garments, for the reception of her husband and Maker. All things are ready for the dwelling place of the Messiah, the second Adam, and his called out and chosen. All enemies are subdued. There is a clean obedient universe. The joint-reign of peace dawns, whose setting is on the other side of the endless ages.

Summary:—Our outline view of the character of the coming age has been so extended that a summary is considered quite necessary. In doing this we do not propose to confine ourselves to the thoughts already presented. If any new feature is seen we shall give it a passing notice.

1. Our aim has been to show that the coming age is a geological era, and therefore literal, since geological changes take place in the earthy materials.

2. A seventh age is quite as possible as any one of the previous ages before it was ushered in, for we cannot fix any definite limit to the creative power of Jehovah.

3. It is likewise as probable as the creation of any of the previous ages.

4. It is also as literal; for no one can be a crowning supplementary age without partaking of their nature; no figurative age of the earth.

5. It is a necessity; since the new type of life. A pure, holy, and immortal family could not dwell in such an abode.

6. It is quite reasonable that the earth should have such an age; for, so far, the earth has always been adapted to its type of life. If it should be otherwise in the seventh age it would disprove the identity of their Maker.

7. Such an age is the subject of promise. This earth reconstructed, refitted and refurnished, must be the new earth; since, in no other location can the great original promise have its accomplishment. God's oath made to Jesus as the principal heir, and to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, as joint-heirs, is, to this day, unaccomplished. The land promised was on this earth, as shown by its boundaries. There can be no substitution.

8. Peter has described a great revolution accomplished by fire; and he has stated that the new earth was to be the abode of righteous persons; and affirms that this would be according to God's promise.

9. With such a literal age promised, in what more appropriate language could it be described, than that used by Isaiah, Zechariah, Peter and John?

10. The coming age has its character from the events included in it, some of which we shall repeat. We shall name only its leading events. The morning of this period is for the Messiah's official reign of subjugation. The first events in order being the advent, rapture, marriage, descent to the Mount of Olives. Zech. xiv. 4, 5. The overthrow of the nations. Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. The cleansing of the sanctuary, the land of Israel. The settling up of that land; its divisions; city of Ezekiel; the capital city of the reign of subjugation. The final conflict at the close of the thousand years. Rev. xx. 12. The new heaven and new earth, and the beginning of the joint reign which is endless. He reigns officially till he has subdued all his enemies; then jointly with the Father.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I enclose $1.00—$2.00 to send the paper to Mr. Henry Tyler, Butler Center, N. Y.; $1.00 to send it for six months to Mr. Robert Tear, Seneca Falls, N. Y., and $1.00 I send for the "Free Will Offering." I assure you it affords me much pleasure to find some who will promise to read them and take an interest in the teaching of Christ and the apostles. Now if they will lay aside early education and prejudice and take the apostles' teaching as literal as they would most any other kind of reading matter they would find no difficulty in getting at the truth. I think THE RESTITUTION is an excellent paper to aid one in understanding the Bible correctly, and to encourage one to live Christ-like. We have the beauties of God's promises set forth so perfectly plain by some of its contributors that it seems as if a child could understand the whole plan and purpose of God in bringing man to the perfect state of holiness he designed him to be at the beginning, though the first man Adam failed, the second Adam has opened up a way whereunto we can attain to that perfection by obedience to his command.

Now I do not say it is impossible for one to understand these things under the teachings of modern preachers. If they should teach this Gospel of the kingdom as Christ told the apostles to, they would be obliged to give up their positions, for the mass don't want that kind of doctrine. Their teachers are not like Paul, who when he believed that Jesus was the Christ he at once forsook his vocation regardless of what those that had hitherto been his fellow-workers might say of him or what they might do to him, and preached the Gospel of the kingdom, though he suffered many things on account of it he counted it gain to suffer for so good a cause. 2 Tim. iv. I am afraid if one like Paul should stand up to-day and be as bold as he was in defense of the truth he would meet with every hit as much opposition as he did, and that, too, among professed Christians. I am sorry to say they have a zeal but not according to knowledge. Popularity is the order of the day, the love of money, and high position is what they want. (Read 2 Tim. i. 1–8; iv. 3–14). Paul was not ashamed to preach Christ for he knew in whom he believed; he also says, "Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my Gospel, wherein I suffer trouble as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound, therefore, I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." It is a faithful saying, for if we be dead with him we shall also live with him; if we suffer we shall also reign with him; if we deny him he will also deny us.

Dreadful thought to be denied by Christ. How much better it would be to take up the cross and follow him while it is called to-day. What if we have to forsake friends, and perhaps very dear ones, too, how much better friend we have found in Christ. He will never forsake nor turn us away—earthly friends are changeable and untrue.

Dear readers, we need to read Paul's teachings more and learn to live by them and take them as our guide. We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. It is one continual warfare. O that we might be able to say with Paul, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Now we live if we stand fast in the Lord, for God hath not called us unto uncleanliness but unto holiness. O how much there is for us to do. I am afraid we are too careless, we are not lively enough in the work; we must not be hearers only but doers of the word. Truly the harvest is great, but the laborers are few; there may be some right near us that are thirsting after righteousness. How can we tell if we don't look to it? Let us be diligent, so that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

I don't know but I am too tedious and lengthy in my letter, but I hope you bear with with me. I would like to ask through THE RESTITUTION if the Lot Glover and P. Plummer that are mentioned in the paper by Bro. Stephenson are parties that once lived in a place called Alden, Iowa, some twenty-three years ago, and do they remember David Funk? and how he and they first began to die for these truths? if so, I would like to hear from them and their dear families.

My husband fell asleep in Christ about fifteen years ago, but we mourn not as those that have no hope. I expect to meet him in the morning of the resurrection, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord, wherefore we can comfort one another with these words, "Be sol hope."

Yours in the faith with a hope of an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

MRS. M. A. FINK.

Spencer, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:—By your permission I will present your readers with a short exposition of the following text of Scripture:

"I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book." Rev. xxii. 9.

Before entering into an exposition of the above text let me briefly say that there are three different theories on the above text, advocated by three different classes. By the one class it is claimed that the angel that appeared unto John was one of the prophets in a disembodied state; i. e. it was simply the naked spirit of one of the prophets. By a second class it is claimed that he was one of the prophets in a resurrected state, or that he was at least one of the many that came out of their graves after Christ's resurrection and appeared in the city. And there is a third class, with which I am identified, who hold that the angel simply claimed to be a fellow-servant with John, and with his brethren the prophets, and a fellow-servant with all them who keep the sayings of the book. The last idea seems at once to suggest itself to the reader of the Greek text. Let it then first be noticed that our English possessive pronouns have no representative words in the Greek language; that relation being expressed by the preposition "of," which written variation according to the Greek text. Thus: "I and my father are one."—"I and the father of me are one." "If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died."—"If thou hadst been here, the brother of me had not died." "Thy brother shall rise again."—"The brother of thee shall rise again." Now, let the above text be written out according to this axium, and its true meaning will at once be discovered.

"I am the fellow servant of thee, and of the brethren of thee—the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book."

From this we see at once that it is an elliptical form of speech, and that if the ellipsis were filled up, it would stand thus: "I am the fellow-servant of thee, and the fellow-servant of the brethren of thee—the prophets, and the fellow-servant of them which keep the sayings of this book."

Now, it does seem to me that by this arrangement, no one at all conversant with the principles of language, can fail to see the true import of the foregoing text, and that the angel simply wished to inform John that he was only a fellow-servant with John and the prophets and all who keep the sayings of this book. And so he forbade John to worship him.

Once more. By this arrangement it must, at once be apparent to any one versed in grammar, that the text under consideration is a compound sentence, containing one subject, and three predicates, the first two constituting simple sentences, and the last a complex sentence. Now, as any thing compounded of two or more separate parts may be separated into its simple parts, so also may this sentence be analyzed and separated into three separate sentences without altering or changing its meaning. Thus:

1. "I am the fellow-servant of thee." 2d. "I am the fellow-servant of thy brethren—the prophets." 3d. "I am the fellow-servant of them which keep the sayings of this book."

Thus it is clear that all that the angel claimed was, that he was a fellow-servant in common with John the prophet, and all who keep the sayings of the book. All servants of one common Master—God. Hence he says to John: "Worship God;" not me.

Persecution in Russia—Cruelties Perpetrated Upon Heretics by Orthodox Peasants.

The Central Court at Elisabetgrad was occupied on the 8th of November with the trial of a group of thirteen peasants, ringleaders in a melancholy series of cruelties which have disgraced the town of Voznessensk, in the Government of Kherson. In this government there are considerable numbers of a sect called "Stundiste," who deny the efficacy of the ceremonies of the Greek Church, and base their religious views solely on the teachings of the Bible. They hold meetings for the study of the Scriptures and prayer, but have no officiating clergy. They are said to be the descendants of Russian soldiers who at some rather remote period were quartered for a time at Potsdam, and who were converted from the Greek faith by the efforts of German missionaries. Returning to Russia, they were banished to one of the military colonies in the then almost uninhabited south, and their descendants are now numerous in that district. Under the direction of the government, efforts have recently been made to bring these people back to the Greek faith, but their sound Biblical doctrines have been proof against all the solicitations of the Greek priests. It appears that the discomfiture of the clergy excited the fanaticism of the orthodox peasants, and a meeting was held under the presidency of the chief man of Voznessensk, before which some leading members of the Stundisti were arraigned. The meeting called upon them to sign a declaration of recantation, publicly to conform to the ordinances of the Greek Church, and to express their readiness to receive 600 blows if they should relapse into Stundistism. Under intimidation the declaration was signed by some, but many stoutly held out. It was then determined that those who refused should be publicly flogged, the next day being fixed for the execution. All the country people in the neighborhood flocked in to witness the performance, and about a thousand spectators were gratified by a spectacle of great suffering. Zenovi and Prascovia Shimenko, man and wife, were particularly distinguished by their firmness under persecution, and consequently by the severity of the torments inflicted on them. Vladimir Fedoroff and others, holding the woman by the hair, gave her fifty blows with rods. Then Efrem Shinarenko commenced beating the unfortunate creature. Fatigued at last, he called upon the half-fainting woman to ask forgiveness of the crowd, to kiss the cross, and to repeat a prayer. With death apparently before her, this frail creature's courage and confidence deserted her not. She refused to ask forgiveness, she rejected the crucifix, saying that it was not lawful to make a representation of God, and for a prayer she said aloud, "God, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Such desperate constancy was not to go unpunished. Since rods were of no avail, a knout was prepared, and soon her agonies were renewed under a shower of blows, administered by a young peasant, Efeem Kosheralieff. The flogging only ceased when she was too far gone to exhibit any sense of pain. Although medical evidence testified to a very narrow escape from death, Prascovia has recovered, and when called as a witness before the court, she said, "I am an evangelist; I and my coreligionists know no other source of religion than the gospel. We cannot recognize the sanctity of images, but we do not refuse intercourse with the orthodox in affairs which are not contrary to the principles of honor and faith." The example of intolerance shown by the government in its treatment of the Molokhani and other sectarians is not unnaturally followed by a half-barbarous and fanatical people.

A Severe Test.

Many years ago Colonel Lehmanousky, who had been twenty-three years in the army of Napoleon Bonaparte, arose in a temperance meeting, tall, vigorous, and with a glow of health on his face, and made the following speech: "You see a man of seventy years. I have fought two hundred battles; have fourteen wounds on my body; have lived thirty days on horse-flesh, with the bark of trees for bread, snow and ice for drink, the canopy of heaven for my covering, without shoes or stockings on my feet, and only a few rags on. In the desert of Egypt I have marched for days with the burning sun upon my naked head, feet blistered in the scorching sand, and with eyes, nostrils and mouth filled with dust and with a thirst so tormenting that I have opened the veins on my arms and sucked my own blood. How did I survive all these horrors? I answer that, under the providence of God, I owe my preservation, my health and vigor, to this fact, that I never drank a drop of spirituous liquor in my life; and Baron Larrey, chief surgeon of the French army, has stated as a fact, that of the six thousand survivors who safely returned from Egypt, all of them were men who abstained from ardent drink."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the personal advent of the Righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a "purely belief of the Gospel," repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Coming Age—its Proximity—Metallic Image.—Dan. ii. 31-44.—No. 8.

J. P. WEETHEE.

What noted event is in the near future? Messiah's personal, official reign of subjugation; "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet." 1 Cor. xv. 25. Christ, when on earth, was a prophet like unto Moses. Deut. xviii. 15, 19; Acts iii. 22, 23. He is filling the office of the great High Priest. Heb. viii. 4. He comes to subdue his enemies and reign with his bride on the earth. Rev. v. 10. We have dwelt on the nature of that age in our previous numbers. We shall now follow various chains of prophecy to the vicinity of that event, that we may fully ascertain our position relative to those events.

The metallic image (of Dan. ii. 31-44.) contains our first chain of prophecy. This has been called by a learned prelate "The almanac of prophecy," since it includes all minor dates. By attention to its instructions we can very readily ascertain in which of the twelve months we are now living, and how near its close. Should we find that we are near the end of its twelfth month, it would appear evident that a new almanac would soon be required; or another method of noting passing events would be introduced.

For the benefit of new subscribers, we shall be allowed to dwell more at length on points somewhat familiar to others. Still, we do not wish to presume too much on the intelligence of any one, since the prophetic Scriptures belong to the higher department of the science of divine things. We must be familiar with the past in order to discern the future.

Nebuchadnezzar's dream, (which had given him uneasiness) had utterly escaped his memory. On the failure of his wise men to recall the vision and to give its interpretation, they were commanded to be put to death. The appointed executioners came across Daniel who was brought before the king, and thus begins: "Thou, O King, sawest, and beheld a great image. This great image, whose brightness (was) excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof (was) terrible (gigantic). This image's head (was) of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet (that were) of iron and clay, and break them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This (is) the dream; and will we tell the interpretation thereof before the King. Thou, O King, (art) a King of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron; forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all (things): and as iron breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided: but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And (as) the toes of the feet (were) part of iron, and part of clay, (so) the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, (but) it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. ii. 31-44.

Since the days of Nebuchadnezzar four great empires have arisen—the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman. These kingdoms have been Gentile. The interpretation of the image, as given by Daniel, describes four, and only four, whose symbols constitute the five metals in the colossal image. Their history completes the vision of the image, and with it all Gentile domination. The Gentile rule, symbolized by the image, began about 603 years before Christ. The empire of Babylon continued about seventy years when it was overthrown by Cyrus, the Persian, B. C 538. See Dan. v. 31. Darius Cyaxares, son of Astyages, was king of Media. Cyrus allowed his uncle, Darius, to have the honor of his conquests as long as he lived, hence it is said, Darius, the Median, instead of Cyrus, the Persian. The Medo-Persian empire, denoted by the silver breast and arms, continued from B. C. 538 to B. C. 331, when it was overthrown by Alexander the Great, at the battle of Arbela. The Greco-Macedonian empire, established by Alexander the Great, king of Macedon, B. C. 331, continued about 300 years, to the battle of Actium, B. C. 31, when it was conquered by the Romans. The Grecian soldiers were clad in armor of brass, hence called "Brazen-crested Greeks." The symbol is, therefore, brass. The fourth empire was Roman. It made a conquest of nearly the entire world, and continued a powerful, undivided empire for more than three centuries. After which, the barbarous nations, from the north of Europe and Asia, out of the northern, Gar-man, or German hive, swarmed into the empire, mingled with the Romans, and finally overthrew the unity of the empire. Having given an outline, allow us to enter into particulars.

Let us present a concise analysis of the symbols of the metallic image. The four Gentile monarchies, named above, are brought to view, in the books of Daniel and Revelations, under a great variety of symbols, as various attributes are designed to be revealed. Some classes of symbols are intended to represent their wealth; others, their strength, while others show their actions, and their general characteristics. Still we find no repetition. Each symbolic vision brings to notice some new feature. It is necessary, therefore, that all these symbols of each vision should be well understood that the prophetic history of these four monarchies be made familiar.

What national attributes are shown in the vision of the metallic images? Why that form? Why those divisions? Why those metals?

1. Why that form?—What form? Does the Bible give the form? All pictures give it a human form, and we are willing to accept such as its shape. "Florus, in the proæmium to his Roman history, represents the Roman empire under the form of a human being, in its different states from infancy to old age. A stupendous human figure, therefore, was not an improper emblem of sovereign power and dominion; and the various metals of which it was composed not unfitly represented the various kingdoms which should arise; while the order of the succession is clearly denoted by that of their parts."—Bagster.

The image, probably erect; its feet on the earth, its head aloft, glittering in metallic brightness, a symbol of riches and pride; with its silver breast and arms, its belly and thighs of brass, its legs of pure iron, its feet and toes of a mixture, decreasing in splendor as it approaches the earth. The Babylonian was an empire of gold. Dan. iii. 1. The Medo-Persian empire was strong but inferior in wealth as silver is less valuable than gold. The Grecian armor showed that, with that nation, brass was the symbol of its empire. The symbol of the pure Roman family is iron, denoting strength. Clay denotes weakness and division. From the head proceed the elements of power to the whole system. So from the Babylonian empire, the following nations obtained much of their wealth, and many elements of their glory. These five metals were joined into one great image. So have the Gentile monarchies been united into a great imperial system of human rule. The image had, perhaps, all the members of a human body, yet it was lifeless; it was not an actor. In its head were all the organs (visible) of sense. It had two eyes, two ears, a nose, and a mouth. It had a breast and two arms, two hands, ten fingers, a belly and two thighs; two legs, two feet, and ten toes. Some members we have supplied, since they are not given. Those named are the following: (1.) head, (2.) breast, (3.) arms, (4.) trunk, (5.) thighs, (6.) legs, (7.) feet, (8.) toes. The words supplied are: (1.) eyes, (2.) mouth, (3.) ears, (4.) nose, (5.) hands, (6.) fingers, (7.) ten, twice, (8.) and two, five times. What authority have we to supply these words, since they are not named by Daniel? Simply, that they are the same and number of human members; not that they are used as symbols. This we must strictly regard, in our exposition. We are not allowed to supply members and numbers and then give them a symbolic interpretation. Daniel has interpreted all the members that are used as symbols. He has said that the head, of fine gold, was the king (kingdom) of Babylon; the breast, arms (not two arms) of silver, was another—inferior kingdom; and that another third kingdom, would be of brass, answering to the belly and thighs, and that a fourth kingdom should be strong as iron—(the legs); that the feet and toes (not ten toes) should be a mixture of iron and clay (two races). This mixture divided the kingdom (verse 41). This is the only division named. Clay is a symbol of another people, mingling with the Roman family, producing weakness and division. These are the features of the image that have symbolic meaning. As to the first three monarchies, there is a great uniformity of interpretation among expositors. That the pure iron represents the undivided Roman empire, is also admitted. The difficulty lies in the symbolic mixture of iron and clay in the feet and toes of the image.

What does the clay symbolize? On this allow us to express our thoughts more fully. The agency of the clay, or, at least, its office is clearly stated. It formed a part of the feet and toes. It is an element of brittleness, and of weakness. There was no union between the iron and the clay; the iron is strong, the clay is brittle. Iron and clay will neither weld nor mix. Still this constituted a part of the feet and toes, or a part of the fourth monarchy. It is a civil element, since the whole image is a symbol of nationality. "They mingle themselves with the seed of men (Romans), but they (the new family) shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." The image is a symbol of four kingdoms and only four. The clay is not another kingdom, but an element of weakness in the fourth kingdom. Such an element has existed.

Its History.—The learned Bagster thus remarks: "The Roman empire became weakened by a mixture of barbarous nations, by the incursions of whom it was torn asunder about the fourth century after Christ." And at length it lost all its original vigor. It was partly strong and partly broken. Since he devotes so much of his interpretation to this mixture, we shall give a more full exposition of this mixture from authentic history. This clay family was German, or Garmen, or all-men. Eleven nations were of German origin, viz.: Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Suevi, Vandals, Goths, Franks, Burgundians, Saxons, Heruli, Lombards and Allemanni. They mingled themselves with the Romans, 1. as slaves; 2. as soldiers; 3. as allies; 4. as conquerors.

1. As slaves.—Under the reign of Diocletian and his associates, the captives barbarians, (Germans) exchanging death for slavery, were distributed among the provincials, and in those districts which had been depopulated by the calamities of war. One of the conditions which Alaric imposed on the Romans, was the giving up of all slaves who could prove their title to the name of barbarians, when 40,000 resorted to his standard. Gibbon says, "Roman slaves consisted of barbarian captives, taken in thousands by the chance of war, and purchased at a vile price." It was once proposed to discriminate the slaves by a peculiar habit; but they feared that this step might acquaint them of their strength.

2. As soldiers.—In the time of Aurelian a treaty was made between the Romans and Goths, by which the latter agreed to furnish two thousand cavalry for the Roman army; and also to supply sixteen thousand youth, of the best families, for recruits. Gibbon says that "It was by arms of a very different nature that Gallienus, the Roman emperor, endeavored to protect Italy from the fury of the Germans. He espoused Pipa, daughter of the king of the Marcomanni, a Suevic tribe. To the father, as the price of his alliance, he granted an ample settlement in Pannonia, a Roman province. The native charms of unpolished beauty seemed to have fixed the daughter in the affections of the inconstant emperor, and the bonds of policy were more firmly connected by those of love But the haughty prejudice of Rome still refused the name of marriage to the profane mixture of a citizen (iron) and a barbarian (clay); and has stigmatized the German princess with the opprobrious title of concubine of Gallienus." ( )

3. Hence they were Roman allies.

4. As conquerors.—The barbarians under Alaric, Genseric, and Attila, were victorious; yet their dominion was short-lived. We date the mingling of the barbarians as conquerors of the Romans, at the fall of the western empire, A. D. 476, under Odoacer, the first German king of Italy; and Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths. Under Theodoric, the barbarians were more highly esteemed than the Romans. The revolutions of three centuries had made the slaves, masters, and the masters slaves.

"Under the reign of Theodoric, and in the happy climate of Italy, the Goths soon multiplied to a formidable host of two hundred thousand men, and the whole amount of their families may be computed by the ordinary addition of women and children. These unwelcome guests were irregularly dispersed over the face of Italy, and the lot of each barbarian was adequate to his birth and office, the number of his followers, and the rustic wealth which he possessed in slaves and cattle. Fashion, and even convenience, soon persuaded the conquerors to assume the more elegant dress of the natives (Romans); but the two classes of people he kept distinct, reserving the Italians for the arts of peace, and the Goths for the service of war."

They mingled but did not cleave. In the time of Caligula, the noblest chieftain of Germany or Britain was no more esteemed than a horse. In three hundred years they were elevated to the highest offices among the Romans.

This will be finished in our ninth number, in which we shall notice the stone kingdom, and where we are in this chain of prophecy.

Notes of Recent Travel and Sojourn with the "Household of Faith"—Number 5.

A. D. MAGRUDER.

THE SEQUEL OF THE MOODY MEETINGS—THE CHURCH AND THE CAUSE AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

I remained in Cleveland a fortnight, comprising two Sundays, on which I met with the Church and spent the intervening time in social, fraternal intercourse with the church members, from house to house. This enabled me to become personally acquainted with most of the brethren and sisters. Truly, this was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord which I greatly enjoyed.

The brotherhood in this large city and its surrounding country, embracing the outlying colony of Collinwood, comprises, I learned, more than sixty members, composed of natives and of various foreign nationalities, but all united and harmonious in the faith and hope of the gospel. Besides their regular First Day meeting to break bread and keep the ordinances at Beck's Hall, corner of Case and Woodward Avenues, they meet together at least once a week at each others' houses, for social worship and Bible reading. These occasions are found to promote kindly associations and mutual comfort and instruction in the word of truth. They have capable and fluent speakers among them, and all the male members are probably well able, or can become so, to sound out the word and speak to the instruction and profit of those who hear. With such materials for usefulness in the Master's vineyard the Church at Cleveland can venture, not merely to hold her own—to stand successfully on the defensive for the truth—but to become aggressive, and, like Caleb and Joshua, under the divine blessing, through Christ strengthening them, carry the war into the enemy's country. Without the least disparagement of the zeal and devotion of the Cleveland Church in particular, I avail myself of the occasion here offered to give expression to some advanced ideas on this subject, of a more active propagation of the faith and hope of the gospel than we, as a people, have hitherto attempted. By the word and the Providence of God are we not all called to a higher and a nobler mission to our fellow men than others who know not the way of life—the means of salvation and the path of truth, which our heavenly Father, by his merciful arrangements has so freely and abundantly made known to us? Does not the very fact that we are entrusted with the clear knowledge of the gospel of the kingdom of God—a revelation which, though freely offered to all, is to other religious teachers of this age, a sealed book and virtually unknown, carry with it a correspondingly higher obligation to embrace all possible, wise means to make it known to our contemporaries? What is the meaning, otherwise, of the divine exhortations addressed to Christ's disciples, to "let their light shine"—not to hide it under a bushel—to sound out the word of the Lord in the high-ways and by-ways of the land, to contend earnestly for the faith, to fight the good fight of faith, to be valiant for the truth, and to use the talents entrusted to us whether ten or one? These are the precepts addressed to us in the word of the Lord. Now, let us consider the examples of those divinely inspired men whose faith we are to follow and whose "acts" we are to imitate.

If we consider, first and foremost, "the apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus," in what light does the subject appear? See him at the early age of twelve years, sitting in the temple of God with the doctors, both hearing them and asking questions; in the synagogue at Nazareth, taking the book of the prophets and standing up to read, "preaching the acceptable year of the Lord," even at the hazard of personal violence and the loss of his life for propagating an unpopular doctrine, condemned by the religious teachers of his day. Undeterred by this opposition Matthew records, chapter iv., that, in all Galilee, in Decapolis, in Judea and Jerusalem, and from beyond Jordan, he taught the people the same divine but unpopular truth, and, regardless of the perils of the situation, ceased not to preach the word of the Lord and to expound the gospel of the kingdom to all who would hear. So too, with the apostles, and the primitive disciples, they began in Jerusalem, and being scattered thence by persecution, they fled into the country and "went everywhere, preaching the word." We have seen Paul's method of proceeding in Athens. Luke records in the Acts that, at Philippi, Paul went to "the riverside where prayer was wont to be made, and there sat down and spoke unto the women which resorted thither," and here Lydia was taught and believed; and the apostle reminds the Thessalonian brethren that he "was bold to speak unto them the gospel of God with much contention;" and we learn that, in Ephesus, in Corinth and Rome, he did likewise; in Ephesus, "disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus," and both there and in Rome, though a prisoner, receiving all who came unto him, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching the things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. Again, he is careful to charge his son Timothy "to preach the word—to be instant, in season and out of season;" and by his preaching to reprove and exhort and to stop the mouths of gainsayers. Such holy ardor and burning zeal for the instruction and salvation of our fallen race, puts to shame, I fear, our tame and languid work in preaching the same doctrine, and should stir us up to greater diligence in following such glowing examples.

The best means of attaining this object—of reaching the masses—of arousing and awakening our dying race to a sense of their great loss, in rejecting or neglecting the great salvation freely offered to all in the gospel proclamation, must be left to the discretion and wisdom of Christ's disciples in the particular age and country in which they are called to act. In our day and generation, the printing press seems to be the chief agency for reaching the ears of the people, and in large cities especially, this instrumentality can always be made successful, if wisely used, to bring the people together to hear the word preached. Let us suggest, though, that it is not sufficient to rent a hall and occasionally to insert a notice of our meetings or lectures, in one or more of the daily papers, which is our usual custom. We must do more than this. In the words of the Master, we must "go out into the high-ways and hedges and compel them to come in." We must print placards and hand-bills freely, and in striking and pungent terms and with large capitals to attract attention. These should be posted freely on and near the place of meeting, and, adopting the wise example of the children of this world in this respect, (for we are taught we may lawfully imitate them in that which is good), we should engage messengers for a small charge, easily to be had in active boys or men, and have our notices widely circulated on movable boards or banners in all the crowded thoroughfares of the town or city. In this way, supplemented by our own personal, individual action, we may, like the first apostles at Jerusalem, succeed in "filling the whole city with the doctrine," and thus extort from the public a full hearing. When the people leave thus been brought to hear, we must be very diligent not to offend by virulent philippics against their cherished creeds, which, through ignorance or preconception they have adopted, but, by calm and candid but earnest appeals to, and reasonings from the Scriptures, shew them "the more excellent way" they teach. Let this be done in a series of meetings, not less than three or four, and as many more as times and circumstances may permit, and in such a church as that at Cleveland, and others similarly situated, there is room to believe that the increase may be, soon, an hundred fold. There is yet another agency for which all cities are available and for which Cleveland, in her wide avenues and ample squares and parks, offers, in suitable weather, peculiar advantages. It is the Sunday open air street preachings. They have in the splendid public square and park, centrally situated at the head of and fronting on Euclid Avenue, another Mars Hill—an Areopagus, in which almost the whole city can come, and free air, ample space and refreshing shade. If Paul, and other orators, could commodiously address the vast throngs that frequented the Athenian acropolis, may not a far more practical people—Americans—utilize a far greater field in the noblest of all causes, the most beneficent of all missions?

I have been led to offer these latter suggestions, not because of their being original with me, for such means, as we learn from the British journals, have long been in use in England and Scotland, and with good success; and it is, doubtless, to the neglect in this country of such an obvious plan of advertising, that we are to attribute the empty benches that often greet us, uncomfortably, in our halls of meeting. Having been battling for the truth and following the light wherever I could discern it for thirty-five years of my more than three score life, I use the license of an elder brother to offer these hints to those who may live longer and profit by what may be good in them.

THE RESTITUTION.

J. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEB. 25, 1880.

WE have spent but little time at home for the last ten days, and have been out till midnight nearly every night of the time. Our paper is about full, and if it were not, we do not feel disposed to write at length now. If some things have been neglected we shall now try to give them attention as soon as possible. We hope to have quite an interesting number next week.

FOR ten successive evenings we have been engaged in endeavoring to preach the gospel, nine of which we spent at Argos. Brother H. Barnhill was present eight evenings, and occupied the time on Sunday evening, as we were then at Plymouth. Comparatively full audiences convened to listen to our discourses. According to the measure of our ability we earnestly tried to present as themes of interest, the Saints' Inheritance, the Kingdom of God, and eternal life through the Lord Jesus Christ. We did not neglect the great question—What must we do to be saved? We made a special effort to show that God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, and that we could only be made the righteousness of God in him; and that, consequently, the sinner must come into Christ to meet the pardoning, reconciling God. This led to a comparatively full exhibition of the first principles of the gospel—repentance, faith, and baptism—as prerequisites on the part of the sinner in order to a participation in all the "spiritual blessings" that God the Father bestows, through his rich grace, on those who are in Christ; and that "redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins" was only granted in the Mediator. As a result of our meetings at Argos, and of one held on Sunday by Brother Barnhill at the Antioch meeting house, two yielded the obedience of faith. As a result of our meeting at Plymouth one made the good confession whom we expect to immerse next Sunday. To God be all the praise.

NEWS ITEMS.

ATTEMPT TO DESTROY THE IMPERIAL FAMILY.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 18.—There has been an abortive attempt made to kill the Imperial family by exploding a mine under the guard-room of the Winter palace, which is immediately under the dining hall. Owing to accidental delay the Imperial family had not entered the latter at the usual time. The explosion made a hole in the floor of the dining hall ten feet long and six feet wide, and occurred just about the usual dinner hour of the Imperial family.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 18.—The following is the official account of the explosion in the Winter palace:

"At about 7 o'clock last evening an explosion occurred in the basement of the Imperial Winter palace, under the principal guard-room, by which eight soldiers of a Finland regiment of the guard then on duty were killed and forty-five injured. The flooring of the guard-room and several gas pipes were damaged. Official inquiry into the cause of the explosion is proceeding."

FAMINE AND DIPHTHERIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 21.—The news from the interior of the Empire is heartrending. Famine and diphtheria are decimating the population. The provinces of Saratof and Kief, which annually export in ordinary times enormous quantities of grain, had scarcely any crop last year. The calamity is aggravated by want of fodder for the cattle, and the peasants are forced to sell them. In the Caucasus the famine is still greater, where the people are committing suicide and selling their children.

INVESTIGATING.

The dynamite exploded in the Winter palace was contained in a metal box, the cover of which has been found, but no electric wire or trace of a battery can be obtained.

THE FAMINE IN SILESIA.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21.—An earnest appeal is made for the famine-stricken people of Silesia, Germany. One hundred thousand people are suffering.

TROOPS TO SUBJUGATE THE TEKE-TURKOMANS.

BERLIN, Feb. 18.—It is said that General Skoboloff will command the Russian main army of invasion, numbering 20,000 troops, marching from Tashkend across Bokhara to Merv, with the view of operating in the rear of the Turcomans, while two other armies, starting from Tchikislar and Krasnovodsk respectively, will form a junction with him before the end of May.

RAVAGES OF DIPHTHERIA.

VIENNA, February 23.—Diphtheria is raging in Central Russia. It has carried off, since last November, over 40,000 persons in the provinces of Charkoff and Poltava alone, and in the neighborhood of Walki whole villages have almost died out.

THREATENING NOTICES.

Gourko, governor general of St. Petersburg; General Dreutein, chief of the Imperial Police, and General Zourboff, prefect of the police of St. Petersburg, have received notices from the Nihilist committee informing them that they need not trouble themselves to make arrangements for an illumination on the occasion of the Czar's anniversary, as the revolutionists are preparing for such an illumination as has not been seen since Nero burned Rome!

ANOTHER ACCOUNT OF THE EXPLOSION.

LONDON, February 23.—Alexander of Hesse, in a letter to his wife from St. Petersburg, says: "We were proceeding through the large corridor to his Majesty's apartments, when suddenly a fearful detonation was heard. The flooring was raised as by an earthquake, the gas extinguished and we were left in total darkness. At the same time a horrible dust and smell of gunpowder or dynamite filled the corridor. Some one shouted that a chandelier had fallen in the saloon where the table was laid for dinner. I hastened thither with the Czarewitz and the Grand Duke Vladimir, while Count Adlerberg, in doubt as to what might happen, held back the Emperor. We found all the windows broken and the walls in ruins. The dinner had been delayed half an hour for my arrival, and it was owing to this circumstance that the Imperial family had not yet assembled in the dining hall."

SELECTIONS.

Simple Faith Rewarded.

Spain is much larger than England, Scotland and Ireland together; and with Portugal it is a peninsula. It is a very lovely country, with a beautiful bright blue sky, and the sun almost always shining, especially in the southern part, where the beautiful orange, lemon and lime trees flourish, scenting the air with delicious perfume of their fruit and flowers which cover the trees at the same time. But though the sky is bright and the soil very fertile, the poor people are in gross darkness, for very few of its millions of inhabitants know anything of our precious Savior, without the knowledge of whom man is in darkness, and must live in darkness through all eternity; so it is no wonder we want all these poor Spaniards to have the precious Bible, that they may learn about Jesus as the "Light," the "Way," the "Truth," and the "Life."

I will now tell you a little story of something that happened the other day in Valladolid, a town in the north of Spain, where I was staying for a short time. The King of Spain, Alfonso, XII., was there for a few days, and, as usual, there was a review of the troops. This took place on Sunday; for, sad to say, the Sabbath is not kept in Spain.

The Bible Society has in Valladolid, a colporteur, named Augustine, a young Christian man about the same age as the King, who felt a great desire to place the Scriptures in the monarch's hands, but how to achieve it he did not know. He had seen him standing in the balcony of the palace the day he arrived, and marked how sad and pale he looked, and longed for him to possess that true joy and comfort in sorrow which the Lord alone can bestow.

So Augustine determined to try at all risks to place in his hands a pretty little New Testament with gilt edges, the prettiest we have in Spanish, although its cost is only seven-pence. After service in the morning, Augustine set off for the scene of review, distant a few miles from the town, without waiting to dine, although, according to Spanish custom, he had taken no breakfast and now was hungry; but the desire was so strong to fulfill his purpose that he could not wait. Soon it began to rain very fast, and poor Augustine became wet through, but this he was accustomed to, and did not mind. He asked God to help him, and was so happy he scarcely felt the wet. However, soon he said to himself: "It's no good going on, for I shall not see the king in such a rain as this." So he went into a little shop by the roadside to wait and think what he had better do. Presently he heard some carriages approaching, and some one said: "It is the king!" upon which Augustine ran forward in the pelting rain, with a murmured prayer, and put the little book into the king's hand, through the open window of the carriage, saying in a loud voice: "Viva el Rey," (God save the King). He then departed without molestation, although soldiers surrounded the carriage, and it is against the law in Spain to give away in the streets or houses, or even expose to view, any religious Protestant book, much less the Bible, which is entirely prohibited.

The hand of God was visible in all this, and you may imagine with what joy of heart poor Augustine returned, cold and wet, but full of thankfulness for what the Lord had permitted him to do.

On the following morning there was to be another review of the troops, and Augustine felt anxious to go, as previous to the king's arrival in Valladolid he had done a good work amongst the soldiers selling many Gospels, and having nice conversations with them about Jesus, and the value of their souls, to which they had listened attentively, and some seemed quite touched as he told them of the Savior's love to fallen man. On being warned by a friend that "there might be danger in going to the camp," he replied: "How can I fear anything when the king himself received my book; and, besides have I not the King of kings with me? If we are not ashamed of Him He will never be of us." In this hopeful spirit Augustine set out for the encampment. On arriving, and asking admittance of the guard at the entrance, he was refused, under the plea that no one was allowed to speak or sell anything to the soldiers. Just as he was turning away, feeling rather sad at heart, as you may imagine, after such a decided refusal, an officer approached and asked what the young man wanted. On being told, he said to Augustine: "You may enter, although it is against the rules; but mind, I forbid you selling anything."

"May I speak to the men?" asked the colporteur.

"Of course," said the officer; "as much as you please to those who are not on duty."

You may imagine Augustine's joy and thankfulness for this unlooked for permission; indeed, he could scarcely believe it to be true, until he remembered that before he left home that morning he had asked the Lord to rule and guide all his movements; and this was the answer to his prayer. Augustine soon found himself in the midst of the soldiers to whom he had sold books, who began eagerly to question him concerning the Gospel, and in a short time he was surrounded by quite a crowd of anxious inquirers, many wanting to buy books; but of course he refused to sell any, telling them where he might be found when they were at liberty to buy. Whilst busily occupied in explaining some Scriptures in which they found difficulties, a general approached with his subaltern, and, after the usual morning salutation, Buenos dias (good morning), with which rich and poor always accost each other in Spain when first meeting in the morning said: "Are you not the young man who gave the king this little book during the storm?"

"Si senor" (yes, sir) answered Augustine, rather tremblingly, for he recognized the general as the gentleman who sat beside the king in the carriage on the preceding day when he gave the book, and naturally feared he was going to be severely reprimanded, at least, and sent off the ground immediately; but on the contrary the general, noticing his timidity, smiled pleasantly, saying, "Well, my good fellow, his Majesty gave me the little Testament, and here it is; now I want you to oblige me by writing in it," and conducting Augustine into a sumptuous tent, in which there was a table supplied with pens and ink, bade him be seated, and after asking his name said, write thus on the blank page of the book: "To His Majesty, King Alfonso, XII., from Augustine Garcia." Then a little below: "Presented by His Majesty to General A., with date and place."

The general then thanked him kindly, told him he was un buen muchacho (a good fellow), that he was very glad to have seen him, and that he could continue his conversation with the soldiers as long as he liked.—E. A. Corfield.

Decay of Conscience.

If we probe the national heart deep enough we shall find the real cause of our adverse condition to be a drying up or an extinction of conscience—an inward rottenness of the moral life. All classes, without distinction of social condition or sex, have seemingly but one ambition and one aim, and that is to acquire wealth and to give reign to their tastes and passions.

This is an age of sensuousness and of sensuality—a scarlet age; an age in which the aristocracy of intellect and of heart is made to stand in the shadow of the vulgar—an age when the Aspasias, the Messalinas and the Pompadours, with their slaves, lead and dictate with an imperious will in the realm of the social.

Example, with the prestige of ostentation manifested in the glitter of gold, the gleam of precious gems, in the sheen of costly fabrics, and in the fever of dissipation, is deadly as the exhalations of the Upas. Surely as effect follows cause, does crime in all its manifold forms follow the example of luxury and sensuality. These were the forerunners of the decay of Greece and Rome. Neither genius nor virtue can withstand their corroding influence. Intellect, conscience, and refined sentiment perish in their presence. We, to-day, in our numerical majority, are a nation without conscience—a nation of demagogues, of blasphemers, of drunkards, of embezzlers, of riotous livers, of adulterers and of fornicators. We have the symbols of virtue and of religion, and yet only the symbols. We lift the cross, but only as the semi-Pagan military legions of Constantine lifted it on shield and banner.

It is not in finance, nor in sectionalism, nor in the greed of landlords, nor in the presence of the Chinamen, that principally lies our trouble, but it is in the want of a national conscience, of popular sobriety and simplicity, in the want of the true spirit of Christianity. Give us this, and all things that give national peace, prosperity and grandeur, follow as surely as effect follows cause. Give us this, and individual and public wealth increases, communism expires, drunkenness and all crime disappears, and industry, and invention, and enterprise, thrive.

A republic without conscience is a form of government without promise. Its veins and arteries carry the seeds of inherent revolutions, anarchy and decay. Without conscience there can be neither morality nor religion, and without these society has neither foundation, pillar or prop. So if we would bring the republic up to the proper plane of prosperity, let us first incarnate conscience in our entire individuality. Then under the power of an honest intellect and motive, all the true economies of government will inevitably spring into being beautifully and symmetrically wrought.

Reminiscences of Romanism.

The announcement of addresses or "Reminiscences of Romanism," to be delivered by the Rev. Fathers B. L. Quinn and Fred W. Wood, ex-priests and converts to Protestantism, drew to Lincoln Hall last evening an assembly that packed it to its utmost capacity, and probably as many were turned away as found admission. Before the addresses devotional exercises were opened by a prayer from Rev. S. Kramer, and continued by singing and reading a chapter from the Scriptures. Father Quinn was then introduced, and commenced his lecture by stating that the work he and Father Wood were engaged in was conducted under the auspices of a supervising committee of leading Protestants of New York and other cities, and that they intended to carry the war against Romanism into the very camp of the enemy. The Roman Catholic Church, the speaker said, was the greatest organized enemy of liberty that existed, and the work against its power for evil was one that required brave, earnest and fearless men—men, in fact, who did not fear death. The speaker created quite a sensation at this point by warning the audience to remain perfectly quiet in case of an alarm of fire, as it was a regular artifice of their enemies to create such alarms at their meetings.

The lecturer continued in a most scathing and sweeping arraignment of the Roman Church, which, he said, was founded in deception and fraud, but directed his remarks chiefly to the subject of the great power wielded by the Church through the medium of the confessional. Through this channel, the speaker said, the secrets of Protestant families were carried to the ears of priests, and that important matters were passed to the bishops, and even to the Pope, who, the speaker said was better informed in the affairs of this country than many of our own public men, and who, according to the speaker, has had his eye fixed on this district for many years. He said that a priest who does not know the secrets of every family in his parish, both Protestant and Catholic, was disqualified for his position. According to the speaker, the Roman Church was not so much a religious organization as a political government, and one which required the sole and exclusive allegiance of its subjects. It is a fundamental principle of the Church that no oath between a member and a heretic or a heretical government is binding, and the speaker boldly asserted that the Roman Catholics do not respect their oath of allegiance to this government. He cautioned the people to beware of electing a Roman Catholic or any one who leans to Romanism to the presidency, as such a man could not be otherwise than a tool in the hands of the Pope. The speaker dilated at considerable length upon the demoralizing influence of the beliefs in the power of absolution by the priests, and claimed that it was destructive of virtue and integrity, the most depraved creatures, he said, going for absolution week after week, and finally dying in their iniquity, with the assurance that their sins have all been wiped out. The lecturer made some most startling statements in relation to the morality of the Catholic clergy, asserting that their power over the women of their flocks was too often perverted to base uses. The lives of priests, he said, was calculated to subvert morality, and the characters of young men who enter the priesthood with the highest and purest aspirations are often entirely changed by the influences to which they are subjected. Among other statements upon this point the speaker asserted as a fact within his own knowledge, that there now existed in Canada a secret religious order of women, who dedicated themselves to serve the lusts of Catholic priests, and this order, he said, was now becoming established in this country. The speaker claimed that the Roman Church had proven a curse wherever it predominated, and mentioned Spain and Ireland as instances of the misery it has entailed upon the people over whom it has had the ascendency, and concluded with a fine peroration, to the effect that the only security of our institutions lay in the prevalence of the principles of honor, integrity and purity among the people and not in the power of priests.

Father Quinn has a fine delivery, and spoke with evident earnestness and sincerity. At the conclusion of Father Quinn's address, a collection was taken up, after which Father Wood was introduced, but made only a few remarks, owing to the lateness of the hour. He is a German and speaks with a decided accent. He said that he was compelled to endorse the statements of Father Quinn. They were working, he stated, against the system of the Roman Church, and not against the people. He was for many years a priest devoted to his Church, and came to this country to spread its doctrines here, but claims that revelations of the immoralities of the priesthood which he received in the capacity of confessor, drove him from his faith. The audience was composed chiefly of persons in sympathy with the speakers, and frequently applauded. Fathers Quinn and Wood will speak at the Union chapel, on Twentieth street, this evening, and to-morrow at the Congregational Church.—By Father Quinn.

How Bar-room Liquors are Made.

There may be seen daily on Chestnut street, says the Philadelphia Bulletin, a man dressed in faultless apparel, with a great diamond on his breast, vainly endeavoring to out-glitter the magnificent solitaire on his finger. In a German university he learned chemistry, and not even Liebig knew it better. His business is the mixing and adulterating of liquors. Give him a dozen casks of deodorized alcohol and the next day each of them will represent the name of a genuine wine or popular spirit. He enters a wholesale drug-store, bearing a large basket upon his arm. Five pounds of Iceland moss are weighed out to him. To raw liquors this imparts a smoothness and oleaginousness that gives to imitation brandy the gilbness of that which is matured. An astringent catechu that would almost close the mouth of a glass imitated is next in order. A couple of ounces of strychnine, next called for, are quickly conveyed to his vest pocket, and a pound of white vitriol is as silently placed in the bottom of the basket. The oil of cognac, the sulphuric acid, and other articles that give fire and body to liquid poisons, are always kept in store. The mixer buys these from various quarters. They are staples of the art.

He Drinks.

Tell me a young man drinks, and I know all the rest. Let him become captive of the wine-cup, and he is the captive of all other vices. No man ever runs drunkenness alone. That is one of the carrion crows that goes in a flock. If that beak is ahead, you may know the other beaks follow. In other words, strong drink unbalances and dethrones, and makes him the prey of all the appetites that choose to alight upon his soul. There is not a piece of sin upon this continent but finds its chief abettor in the places of inebriety. There is a drinking-place before it, or behind, or a bar over it, or a bar under it. The officer said to me that night, "You see how they escape legal penalty; they are licensed to sell liquor." Then I thought within myself, the Court which licenses the sale of intoxicating liquors, licenses gaming houses, licenses libertinism, licenses diseases, licenses death, licenses all crimes, all sufferings, all diseases, all woes. It is the Legislature and Courts who swing wide open this grinding, roaring, stupendous gate of the lost.—Talmage.

BREVITIES.

In the Japanese Bible it is found necessary to transfer from the English only two words for which an equivalent could not be found—"hyssop" and "amen."

Telegraphic communication between Mozambique and Zanzibar, Africa, is now complete by means of the English cable, which now connects those districts.

PROGRESS AT JERUSALEM.

The fact that a steam engine is being erected in a flour mill in Jerusalem is a startling announcement, but it is an evidence of the progress of civilization. The "infidels" who have thus introduced modern inventions to the "Holy" city are a firm of Wurtemburg colonists, who, with the characteristic enterprise of the Teutonic race, are doing all the Oriental Powers will let them to make the historic and old World city march with the times.

Lieutenant Seaton, U. S. N., attributes the origin of the Desert of Sahara to the destruction of the forests with which the banks of the Saharan streams were once lined. The inhabitants, being a pastoral people, destroyed the forests to secure pasturage. "Consequent upon the destruction of the forests, the periodical rains were replaced by short though violent storms, the waters from which, instead of soaking in, as in the past ages, slipped by on the rocky masses, carrying away the rich surface mould, and bringing about the drying of the springs, and, as a direct consequence, of the rivers."

YEAR.

The Egyptians, it is said, were the first who fixed the length of the year. The Roman year was introduced by Romulus, 753 B. C., and it was corrected by Numa, 713 B. C., and again by Julius Cæsar, 45 B. C., who fixed the solar year as being 365 days and six hours. This was denominated the Julian style and prevailed generally throughout the Christian world till the time of Pope Gregory XIII. The calendar of Julius Cæsar was defective in this particular, that the solar year consisted of 365 days, 6 hours and 40 minutes, and not of 365 days and 6 hours. This difference at the time of Gregory XIII. had amounted to ten entire days. To obviate this error Gregory ordained in 1582 that that year should consist of 355 days only; and in 1751 it was ordered to be so used in England; and the next year eleven days were left out, the 3d of September, 1752, being reckoned as the 14th, so as to make it agree with the Gregory calendar.

DECLIVITY OF RIVERS.

A very slight declivity suffices to give the running motion to water. Three inches per mile in a smooth, straight channel gives a velocity of about three miles an hour. The Ganges, which gathers the waters of the Himalaya mountains, the loftiest in the world, is, at 1,800 miles from its mouth, only about, 800 feet above the level of the sea, and to fall these 800 feet in the long course the water requires more than a month. The great river Magdalena, in South America, running for 1,000 miles between two ridges of the Andes, falls only 500 feet in all that distance; above the commencement of the 1,000 miles it is seen descending in rapids and cataracts from the mountains. The gigantic Rio de la Plata has so gentle a descent to the ocean that, in Paraguay, 1,500 miles from its mouth, large ships are seen which have sailed against the current all the way by force of the wind alone—that is to say, which, on the beautiful inclined plane of the stream, have been gradually lifted by the soft wind, and even against the current, to an elevation greater than that of our loftiest spires.

Tracts! Tracts!

A new edition is now ready of my large, handsomely printed, seven-page, double-column tract, entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom Briefly Stated in a Series of Bible Lessons." This edition is not donated as the former, and hence the price will have to be forty-five cents per hundred; and even this does not cover the actual expense of publication and postage. The present edition is a large one, and makes twenty thousand copies of this tract that have been printed within the last three months. Let every brother send for some. Take fifty copies if you cannot distribute more. For years I have tested the efficacy of distributing judiciously written tracts and seen the good and cheering results. Send orders to Wiley Jones, Norfolk, Virginia.

The Lord will destroy the house of the proud; but he will establish the border of the widow.

POETRY.

He Comes.

JOHN L. WINCH.

He comes: for him we're waited long;
He comes a conq'ring king;
This has inspired our sweetest song—
Nor shall we cease to sing.

He comes with power to save and bless;
To pour the healing balm;
To reign in truth and righteousness—
Lift up the voice in psalm!

He comes in night, the dead arise
To meet their coming Lord;
All tears are wiped from weeping eyes,
As promised in the Word.

He comes to crown the waiting bride,
O shout the glad news!
Ye hills and vales on ev'ry side
Echo the joyful strain.

In view of this who can be sad,
Our joyous hymns we'll raise.
Let ev'ry longing heart be glad;
All tongues be turned to praise.

He comes, ye rebel sinners hear
To seal your awful doom;
Your godless hearts will quake with fear:
Your faces gather gloom.

He comes, but not in lowly form.
As when before he came;
He comes in wrathful cloud and storm,
In tempest and in flame.

He comes with fiery scourge of rod,
To lay the spoiler low;
To smite with his avenging rod
The stubborn-hearted foe.

To him as universal Lord,
The nations far and near,
Will bow in honor to his word.
In reverential fear.

His law from Zion shall go forth
To islands of the sea;
To distant lands, to south and north,
Till all shall bend the knee.

Till swords, that drenched in human gore,
The plain and mountain brow,
Shall be re-forged forever more
To point the useful plow.

Beyond the discord and the jar,
Sweet peace, made sweeter still,
By contrast with the din of war,
Shall earth and heaven fill.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I was glad of your article in regard to more writing on practical religion. I think just what we need, is more practical work and more of the spirit of the Master. If you will give me a little space in the paper I should like to write a short piece to the readers of THE RESTITUTION, especially in Michigan. Now, brethren, let us make, as it were, a new consecration this winter and awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed. Romans xiii. 11 is a good lesson for us. From this exhortation of the apostle it would appear that the Church at Rome was not as zealous for the truth as they should have been. They may have been very active in other matters, but in the cause of Christ they had become careless, which, therefore, called forth the apostles' exhortation for them to be up and doing while the day lasts, as each one brought them a day's march nearer home.

Now, the church of to-day has no Paul to make personal appeals and to exhort them to love and good works, but it has a record of his teachings, and of his exhortations and his glorious example. Brethren, it is high time to awake out of sleep, for I verily believe that the night is far spent, and the day is near at hand. Now, as a united body, we are doing but little for the cause of Christ, which is the dearest of all causes to us if we would take heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we should let them slip. Individual members may be doing something, but one or two in a place cannot do the work as valiantly as they could if all would just concentrate themselves together. Although we do not know the day, nor the hour, when our Lord will come, still, from prophecy, we are led to believe that his coming is not far distant. If we knew that he would come within a month, or a year, there would be no need of exhortations to awake out of sleep, for not many thoughts would be given to the things of this world, but, having food and raiment, we should be therewith content; and the servants of mammon would be left to worship at their ungodly shrine alone, for the child of God would have a nobler work to perform. He would be busily engaged in laying up treasures in heaven, and spreading the news of the coming kingdom. But, because we do not know the appointed time, is that any reason why we should fall into a sleep of carelessness? Should we not rather be ever looking for and always ready to receive him? You know that Jesus impressed upon the disciples the necessity of being ready, for he said, "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing or in the morning lest he coming suddenly and find you sleeping." Mark xiii. 35-36. Then let us be up and doing if we can only do as the poet sang, "Only an armor bearer, standing proudly at our post." When the Lord Jesus shall come we may exclaim, "This is our God; we have waited for him." May this be the earnest prayer of every one of us, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," for anarchy and blood-shed are rampant all over the world, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of those things that are coming on the earth. Yours in the hope,

L. H. CHEESEBROUGH.

Goldenrod, Mich.

Editor Restitution:—I am away from all the brethren of the Abrahamic faith, and feel anxious to see some light spring upon a knowledge of the precious truths of the Bible, and as I am absent from all the brethren, and my lot seems to be a lonely one, I am resolved to fight for the cause, and I want weapons to help myself with, for I do think there is a work for all to do, and this is the time to bear the cross if we would wear the crown at the second coming of our dear Lord.

I would be truly glad if some preaching brother would pass this way. I think that at least some good might be done here. I remain your brother in the faith, looking for the soon coming of our redeemer. D. A. CARKER.

Mount Sterling, O. Co., Ind. T.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find five dollars for the benefit of the paper. I am not ready to send a New Year's gift, but hope you can find a place for it such. I was glad the discussion on the question of the resurrection was to stop, as I love to lend my paper and did not want to put such articles in the hands of our opponents. I often thought when reading those articles, if the Savior was to speak face to face with those Brethren as he once did with Peter he would have said "What is that to thee, follow thou Me." "That is none of your business, I have sent you to teach the living, not to quibble about the dead. God will take care of them." I hope you will find enough of good reading to fill their place. If I was capable of writing for the press I think I would do so sometimes, but as I am not, I must be content to serve God in my weak manner as best I can in this place without ever hearing the word preached in its simplicity. I hear preaching enough and prayers enough to convert a world if it was the right sort and done in the right way. I remain yours in hope, and may God bless you. REBECCA MCLAIN.

Mercer, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will find one dollar for which you will please send me one copy of your excellent paper, THE RESTITUTION, according to terms. I have never been a subscriber until now. For the last four or five years I have made the things spoken of by all God's holy prophets since the world began my study almost day and night, the result of which is almost miraculous. I was taught from my infancy to believe things not spoken of by the above named prophets. But Oh how thankful I am that I lived in this age of the world.

J. T. FREEMAN.

Bet Cove, P. O.

Editor Restitution:—I will try to have the brethren to continue taking the paper, and persuade as many more as I can to subscribe for it. I want to do all the good I can in the sight of God; and just as little harm as I possibly can, for I still have the hope of a future life, based upon the promises of God, looking for that blessed hope to be revealed at the second coming of our Lord and Life Giver, and I am fully persuaded in my own mind that the time is not far distant in the future. Let us remember what Christ said to the apostle, "I say unto all, Watch!"

Yours in the faith,

ROBERT BAKER.

Girard, Asa.

Editor Restitution:—It may be due the readers of THE RESTITUTION to announce myself as yet in the field of perseverance striving to make my calling and election sure. The banner of the cross is still my boast, for the crown for the faithful ones is sure to follow in due time. In contemplating our holy religion, I regard it as a success, for God and Christ are at the helm; and Satan must yield his claim. Many things look dark and ominous, but God is too wise and powerful to suffer defeat. He created man for his glory, and will he not accomplish it? Oh! it is good to trust in him. Can we not, when we remember how ample are the provisions of his grace, in the gift of his Son, and the assurance of the inability of the law to save? Surely, this is wondrous love, that faith is now the modus operandi of salvation. It is true, there is a pagan multitude which will meet a final overthrow in the programmes of judgment, and their present whereabouts may be occult, but God will know them at the final assizes of that day. The principal seat may be found near the Vatican of papal supremacy and adherents. I deem the beautiful flights of revelation, by the Prophet Isaiah, and others, setting forth the final consummation in the richness of infinite wisdom and glory, surpassing human ken, as ample for all our toil and disgrace, if needs be, in the Master's service here, and it may be, auxiliary in the ages to come. Those called at the first resurrection will, doubtless, subserve important purposes according as we understand God's programme of restitution. It seems to be a mystery, expressed by Paul, that, in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he will gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him I apprehend that the work will be thorough and abiding. Our coming out to await the Master's coming and contend for truth, was not only our privilege, but duty, and the more I contemplate the discrepancy of doctrine, the more I am persuaded that immortality comes through Christ, not by way of Adam. Now, let us not be weary in well doing, for we shall reap, if we faint not; for he is faithful who has promised. Love to the scattered flock. My age eighty-five past and sight quite dim.

In love and respect,

R. WILLARD.

Editor Restitution:—Inclosed please find one dollar to apply on my paper, for I can't do without it. Brethren and sisters, how often we are told that we, as a people, do not believe in a change of heart. Nothing can be farther from the truth. We are rallied on this point, and claim that, before man can be saved, he must have three changes, each one of which brings him one step nearer the final rest. The mind is, by nature, full of sin, and needs the gospel to enlighten it and thus turn man away "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God;" when this is done, he has met with a moral change. Then he is called to lead a new and holy life. Here, then, we have one change. Now, the law demands obedience to its requirements, and he must become a citizen by loyalty. This brings another change. Now, he is a legal heir to the inheritance. Paul tells us of the third and last change: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead in Christ shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Then we see man must have three changes before he can enter the kingdom of God.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed please find one dollar which apply on my subscription to THE RESTITUTION, and oblige, as we live sixteen miles from meeting of our belief we prize THE RESTITUTION very highly, as it is all the preaching we have. I love to read the letters from others scattered around. May the Lord hasten the time when our Deliverer shall come and restore all things. What a glorious thought to think what is in reserve for us if we only live faithful. May the Lord help us so to live that we may be prepared to meet each other in the kingdom.

Editor Restitution:—I have just closed a meeting at Remington with good results. Brother McDougle obtained the Disciple meeting house for me, and we had a very good meeting. The result was, three were immersed into the Christ, one of them, Brother Oppy, of the Methodist church; and he will make his mark in the world, for he is posting himself as fast as he can, and meets his former brethren, preachers, and all, and arms them with the sword of the spirit. There is a faithful little band in Remington that are making their mark in the community. Brethren Babb and McDougle are workmen that need not to be ashamed. May God bless them all, and save them in his everlasting kingdom.

Editor Restitution:—The paper is still precious to me. I hope I shall be able to read it and compare the spirit of the brethren and sisters with the spirit of Christ, as I find it in his word. What a comfort to know that our Savior knows and pities our weakness. My paper and Bible is all the preaching I have. LOIS NEWELL.

Lapeer, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed you will please find $4.50,—two, to apply on this year's subscription for my paper, and the balance for a copy to an intelligent lady that has attended all the meetings I have held in the school house in their neighborhood. She has read copies of THE RESTITUTION that I gave her with so much interest that she expressed a desire to have a copy, but could not get the money to send for it. I proposed to send, and take in exchange for, such things as they could spare from farm produce, and, by so doing, can add another subscriber, which takes the last dollar I have. I did want to add my name to the list of $3.00 fund assistants, but I cannot do so possibly now, and have taken this course to increase the list of subscribers. I am, as ever, waiting for the consolation that will be given at the appearing of our Savior.

Yours, etc., F. R. STEES.

Cleveland, Ills.

[To increase our list is the very object most to be desired. Should this be done, to a sufficient extent, the paper would become self-sustaining without a relief fund. We thank our brother, and all others for aid whether in procuring subscribers or on the relief list.—ED.]

Editor Restitution:—It is with feelings of pleasure that I am permitted to seat myself this evening to let you know what I am doing in the vineyard of the Lord. I gave a discourse on the evening of January 25th, to an interesting congregation, on Adventism, its Relation to Theology; and on the 15th of this month I am going to commence to give a course of six lectures. Subject, on the 16th, will be—"For what Purpose is Christ Coming?" This is a subject that ought to interest all lovers of God's truth, of the speedy return of Israel's King. I thought it a duty to work in the vineyard of the Lord, for the laborers, truly, are few, and the fields are beginning to look already white. Yes, that glorious era will soon dawn in splendor. The days are growing evil as the day of the Lord approaches, and all eyes are turned toward Judah's land, and soon will the nations of earth be thrust in the great commotions of war. When they cry peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them. Then let us be on our guard. We know not as yet what the day may bring forth. O let us watch and pray, that we may be able to stand before the Son of Man at his appearing. We know not as yet whether our passport is good, for it is only the person that has his or her name enrolled in the Lamb's Book of life. My friends, let us have on the bridal robe so we can welcome the Bridegroom. Fill up your lamps now and let your light shine before the world, for soon we may be called and not have on the wedding garment. With these thoughts to an intelligent people, I will close, hoping to meet you all in God's everlasting kingdom under the whole heaven. Amen.

DANIEL FIKE.

P. S.—Also say to the brethren that we will, hold the Lord's Passover at my house, in Books county, seven miles due south of Stockton, Kansas, on the 20th of March, 1880. All are invited to come and make this a joyful meeting. Come one, come all.

Yours in the bonds of love, D. F.

Editor Restitution:—As my subscription has nearly run out I will send you two dollars for renewal. I am striving hard against great odds to be prepared to meet him when he comes, who is the hope of all that put their trust in him; but the cross is a heavy one. It does seem as though the devil has martialed all his forces for the purpose of destroying the last vestige of hope that is left for poor degraded and fallen man. But we must not, we dare not, abandon the hope we have in the blessed Jesus, the great restorer, the hope of the world; and the only hope that the poor, weak, mortal sinner has. "Hold fast that thou hast till I come. Amen." Come, Lord Jesus, and do not tarry, for we are waiting for thee. All thy saints are longing for thee to come. We do groan in the flesh waiting for the adaption of our mortal bodies that we may be clothed upon with that great deliverance from this corruptible, for we know that in this age we have no safe abiding place. But our faith and our hope says that it is but a little farther in the future and the blessed Jesus says, "I come quickly." Hold fast, beloved, for he that hath promised is mighty and able to do all that he has said he would do. Our cross seems heavy and hard to bear now, but the prize is at the end of the race; if we are faithful we will receive. I hope that every one who has called upon his name will continue faithful, for yet a little while he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

J. A. WILSON.

Harlan, O.

In Christ There is Strength.

What a beautiful expression. It is said of those who wait upon the Lord that they shall renew their strength, they shall not grow weary. When we abide in Jesus, O how much strength it gives us. Dear readers of our much loved paper, I can say he is my shepherd. I shall not want, he is my strength and my Redeemer; in him I'll put my trust. We have the Savior's own words before us, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Yes, it is a sweet rest which the world can neither give nor take away. When we are out of Christ, we are without hope and without God in the world. Then when we are Christ's we are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise, and with an eye of faith we can look forward to the time when Christ will vacate the Father's throne and in robes of royalty step into the shining car of glory whose wheels shall, on the burning pathway of the heavens, roll down to earth.

Dear brethren, let us strive to be Christ's at his coming, whether we be dead or alive. Let us walk circumspectly, having our garments unspotted from the world and our lamps brightly burning. Oh let us be faithful a little longer, for soon, very soon, the Bridegroom cometh.

S. F. CHAMBERLIN.

The One Pattern.

What a glorious fact it is that there is one life that can be held up before the eyes of humanity as a pattern! There were lips that never spake unkindness, that never uttered an untruth; there were eyes that never looked aught but love and purity and bliss; there were arms that never closed against wretchedness or penitence, there was a bosom that never throbbed with sin, nor ever was excited by an unholy impulse; there was a man free from all undue selfishness, and whose life was spent in going about doing good. There was One who loved all mankind and loved them more than himself, and who gave himself to die that they might live; there was One who went into the gates of death, that the gates might never hold us in; there was One who laid in the grave to take its damp, its coldness, its chill and its horror, and taught humanity how it might ascend above the grave; there was One who, though he walked on earth, had his conversation in heaven, and took away the curtain that hid immortality from view, and presented us the Father—God in all his love. Such an one is the standard held up in the Church of Christ; it is a Church that rallies around the cross and that gathers around Jesus; and it is because he is attractive and lovely and glorious that they are coming from the ends of the earth to see the salvation of God.—Bishop Simpson.

Notice.

Having closed my labors as Pastor of the Church of God at Muddy Fork, I am now ready to engage in revival efforts in either congregations, or enter the field as an Evangelist, as the Lord may open.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AMBOY, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 22, 1879.

Editor Restitution—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and invite its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $3.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I ask this appeal in a special manner to those who have hitherto done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that precious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment are we who claim to be the elect of God, sorely stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $3.00, and will they please give us their cause. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 63 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 40 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $1.00 to commence on. I need THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to see you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

Amount published previous to this $119 99

POETRY.

"I Would Not Live Alway."—Job.

I would not live alway—live alway below!
Oh no I'll not linger when bidden to go;
The days of our pilgrimage granted to mortals,
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer;

Would I shrink from the paths which the prophets of God,
Apostles and martyrs so joyfully trod?
Like a spirit unblest e'er the earth would I roam,
While brethren and friends are all hastening home?

I would not live alway; I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
Where seeking for rest, we find hotter arousal,
Like the patriarch's bird, and no resting is found;

Where hope when she paints her gay bow in the sky,
Leaves its brilliance to fade in the night of despair,
And joy's fleeting angel never sheds a glad ray,
Save the gleam of the plumage that bears him away.

I would not live alway—thus felt red by sin,
Temptation's fiercest strong in a within,
In a moment of strength if I gave the alarm,
Beware the victory is mine (in vain's agony;

Even the rapture of pardon is sampled with fear,
And the cup of thanksgiving with penitent tear;
The festival trump calls for jubilant songs,
But by spirit her own plaintive prolongs.

I would not live alway—no, welcome the tomb;
Since Jesus has lain there, I dread not its gloom;
Where he deigned to sleep, I'll too bow my head,
All peaceful to slumber on that hallowed bed.
Then the glorious day-break, to follow that night,
The sweet gleam of the angels of light,
With their clarion call for the sleepers to rise,
And meet the Lord Jesus descending the skies.

Who, who would live alway? away from his God,
Away from God's kingdom, that blissful abode,
Where the rivers of pleasure flow o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns;
Where the saints of all ages in harmony meet,
Their Savior and brethren transported to greet,
While the songs of salvation exultingly roll,
And the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul.

That heavenly music! what is it I hear?
The notes of the harpers ring sweet in mine ear!
And see, soft unfolding those portals of gold,
The King all arrayed in His beauty behold!
Oh give me, O give me the wings of a dove,
To adore Him, be near Him, entwapt with His love;
I but wait for the summons, I list for the word—
Alleluia—Amen—evermore with the Lord.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Kingdom of God.

BY O. M. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S FOURTH QUESTION.

Paul wrote in A. D. 64 to the Colossians, and said: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son." Now if the kingdom was not in existence when Paul wrote this letter, as you claim it was not, how could these persons have been translated into it? What of the word "into?" Do you change it to "unto," or "for," or "in order to?" Will you please give us a fair exposition of the text?

REPLY.

Of the word eis here rendered "into" it is of very frequent occurrence in the writings of the apostles and we might say as context requires variously rendered. In this same Colossian letter, iv. 11, it is well rendered "unto." In Acts ii. 38, it is rendered "for," and might have had the full adjunct—"in order to." In Matt. v. 35, it is rendered "by"—as "swear not by Jerusalem." We will not cite other cases, but will remark that of the word in the text you have cited I prefer the radical idea of "into" to any thing else. I do not desire a substitution for it of "unto," or "by," or "for" or anything else, but "into" I conceive to be the apostles' meaning.

Next, there are three Greek particles, the ideas contained in which we would ever do well to consider. I mention them together as by way of contrast in idea they seem often to associate themselves. They are en, ek, and this word of our text, eis.

En denotes rest within.

Ek transfers an object from position within a given relation or space to a position without.

Eis the opposite of ek also is transitional in its meaning, and transfers an object from position without a given relation or space to a position within, and also denotes a forward movement, an object or end to be obtained by the transition however far in the distance that object or end may be.

Since then, eis—the opposite of ek—the word under consideration denotes a transfer from position without to position within, there are two important questions arising relative to this transition here described, which the Bible alone can settle. These questions are:

1. Does this transition consist of one act, or a series of acts?

2. Is this transition momentary, or otherwise?

To the first question then, that the transition does not consist of one act alone, but of a series we shall argue.

1. That it is so understood by almost, if not all orthodox people everywhere. They accept of the idea that the church and the kingdom are one, that to be the church is to be in the kingdom. Then, that baptism is a door into the church, it enforces a door in to the kingdom. Ye, notwithstanding [illegible] are none of these, ministers [illegible] accepted, with such, that baptism [illegible] Lord—dedicated to everybody else—will serve as a door into any where or anything. But [illegible] connected [illegible] Therefore [illegible] then they understand [illegible] This point we have [illegible] ordo, but this is sufficient [illegible] all.

2. That the [illegible] transition to consist [illegible] I will cite a few [illegible] word forming [illegible] this to that of [illegible] hand.

1. Matt. vi. 13—"Lead us [illegible] evil"—into temptation.

2. Matt. xxvi. 41—The very [illegible] —into" —into.

3. Matt. xxvii. 27—[illegible] saith [illegible] —into" [illegible]

4. Matt. xxiv. 18—Let him [illegible] —into the field.

5. Luke i. 80—He grew [illegible] of Israel unto"—time," or [illegible] age.

6. Luke xxiii. 7—[illegible] tion "unto" time" [illegible]

7. Luke xx. 7—Come [illegible] shall be made "into" stone" [illegible]

8. Luke ii. 4—[illegible] made "into" stone."

9. Luke ix. 1—No [illegible] ever "into" disease.

10. Luke xvi. 9—[illegible] to"—"into" the everlasting.

11. Luke xii. [illegible] to"—"into" the earth.

12. Acts vii. 21—Nor [illegible] for"—"into" her own.

13. Rom. i. 16—God's power unto" —"into" salvation.

14. Rom. vi. 3, 4—Baptized [illegible] Christ.

15. Rom. vi. 22—Fruit [illegible] —"into" holiness.

16. 1 Cor. viii. 10—I will eat no flesh "while"—"into" [illegible] the world stands.

17. Eph. i. 11—We are [illegible] —"into" the day of redemption.

18. Eph. ii. 21—Increase "into" holy temple, (Diagott).

19. Eph. iii. 21—"Throughout"—"into"—during all ages.

20. Eph. iv. 15—Come "unto"—"into" a perfect man, "unto"—"since" the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Christ.

Thus I have given twenty occurrences, in all of which the transition denoted by the word eis unmistakably consists in a series of acts, to which I might add fifty other occurrences, which I have at hand, in which the word stands in connection with forever, where it denotes during ever, or during the ages.

With this point thus well established, our second question is easily answered, and we might say is already answered. But in addition to what I have already given I will cite a few additional cases exactly to the point. Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter "into" the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. Here the transition denoted by eis is not by one act, but it consists in at least two—a birth of water and a birth of the Spirit. Nor is it a momentary act but one that continues from the time the glad tidings of the kingdom is heard till finally consummated by a resurrection to the power of an endless life.

Next, Luke in giving a history of the travels of Paul and Barnabas says that on a certain occasion they visited Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, "Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." Now there are a few points about this text very significant upon the point in hand.

1. Here are disciples not yet in the kingdom.

2. The transition is not one act but all the acts and events of tribulation.

3. The transition is not momentary, but reaches over all the time and over all the events of the Christian life and is only consummated at the resurrection.

Again, in this same Colossian letter written A. D. 64, iv. 10-11, Aristarchus, Marcus, Justus, and Paul are all presented as yet outside of the kingdom and as co-workers eis—"unto," or "for," or "into" the kingdom. But why would these four distinguished disciples yet be on the outside if the language of your text was one in every way consummated?

But look again. Two years later Paul writing to Timothy, 2nd letter iv. 18, says: "And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me eis "unto" his heavenly kingdom." Paul yet upon the outside of the kingdom.

[illegible] Thessalonians, iv. "And [illegible] we are alive [illegible] also [illegible] power [illegible] Lord [illegible] Thessalonians, ii. And [illegible] Thessalonians, i. 5—That [illegible] counted [illegible] kingdom [illegible] —will serve as a door into any where or anything. But [illegible] connected [illegible] Therefore [illegible] then they understand [illegible] This point we have [illegible] ordo, but this is sufficient [illegible] all.

2. That the [illegible] transition to consist [illegible] I will cite a few [illegible] word forming [illegible] this to that of [illegible] hand.

1. Matt. vi. 13—"Lead us [illegible] evil"—into temptation.

2. Matt. xxvi. 41—The very [illegible] —into" —into.

3. Matt. xxvii. 27—[illegible] saith [illegible] —into" [illegible]

4. Matt. xxiv. 18—Let him [illegible] —into the field.

5. Luke i. 80—He grew [illegible] of Israel unto"—time," or [illegible] age.

6. Luke xxiii. 7—[illegible] tion "unto" time" [illegible]

7. Luke xx. 7—Come [illegible] shall be made "into" stone" [illegible]

8. Luke ix. 1—No [illegible] ever "into" disease.

9. Luke xvi. 9—[illegible] to"—"into" the everlasting.

10. Luke xii. [illegible] to"—"into" the earth.

11. Acts vii. 21—Nor [illegible] for"—"into" her own.

12. Rom. i. 16—God's power unto" —"into" salvation.

13. Rom. vi. 3, 4—Baptized [illegible] Christ.

14. Rom. vi. 22—Fruit [illegible] —"into" holiness.

15. 1 Cor. viii. 10—I will eat no flesh "while"—"into" [illegible] the world stands.

16. Eph. i. 11—We are [illegible] —"into" the day of redemption.

17. Eph. ii. 21—Increase "into" holy temple, (Diagott).

18. Eph. iii. 21—"Throughout"—"into"—during all ages.

19. Eph. iv. 15—Come "unto"—"into" a perfect man, "unto"—"since" the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Christ.

Thus I have given twenty occurrences, in all of which the transition denoted by the word eis unmistakably consists in a series of acts, to which I might add fifty other occurrences, which I have at hand, in which the word stands in connection with forever, where it denotes during ever, or during the ages.

With this point thus well established, our second question is easily answered, and we might say is already answered. But in addition to what I have already given I will cite a few additional cases exactly to the point. The Kingdom.

I have said that Christ is to be the kingdom of God. I have also said that some persons in my opinion are in the kingdom of glory in this life. I have also said that Christ is to give unto him the throne of his father David, and he should reign over the house of Israel forever. 2 Sam. vii. 12; 1 Chron. xvii. 11; Jer. xxxiii. 17; Isa. ix. 7; Luke i. 32.

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, where is he that is born king of the Jews? When Herod heard this he was troubled; and when he learned of the chief priests that he had been born [illegible] where the prophets had said he would, he sought means to slay the infant king. He feared that the kingdom of Israel would soon be restored and he would be dethroned. Hence his direction in having all the children under two years of age in Judea put to death. When his mother brought him for the first time to Jerusalem that devout Simeon and the prophetess Anna, by direct inspiration, spoke of him as the consolation for which Israel was looking, and the one to accomplish in Jerusalem the very redemption that Judea was expecting.

When the guileless Israelite, Nathaniel, first saw him he addressed him as "Rabbi, the Son of God, the King of Israel." Christ did not deny but that Nathaniel was correct in his statement, but told him he should see greater things after that. When the 5,000 whom he miraculously fed in the wilderness, would have taken him by force and placed him on the throne, he withdrew himself for his time for that had not come; neither was that the way he was to receive the crown. Yet he did not utter a word of censure to indicate that they were wrong in looking upon him as the one who should hold earthly dominion and reign with earthly state like that with which they wished to invest him. When he made his triumphal ride into Jerusalem the people shouted, "Blessed be the King!" "Blessed be the kingdom of our Father David that cometh in the name of the Lord!" Hosannah to the Son of David!" What did they mean? Did they not thereby point to him as their expected Messiah, never the Jewish throne, establish an earthly empire and reign as a mighty prince? They certainly did; yet Jesus received it all with approbation and never so much as hinted that they were the least mistaken. And more, when the enraged Jewish officials came to him and complained of what had been said by the shouting people, he not only sided with the applauding multitude, but declared if these held their peace the stones would cry out! Did he not by so doing effectually set his seal of sanction to the proclamation, and declare himself the King of the Jews, who should restore and occupy the throne of David, and reign in Mount Zion accordingly as prophesied?

Again, when he was arrested before Pilate the only accusation his enemies could bring against him was that he claimed to be King. Pilate said he found no fault in him and three times sought to release him; but they cried out, crucify him, crucify him; we have no king but Cæsar; whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar." Pilate took this as justifying the charge, and [illegible] to crucify him, etc. Pieces of vessels [illegible] on every sea, to search for whales. Now I suppose there [illegible] of coal [illegible] from the earth in [illegible] than on the largest [illegible] that ever left our coast could carry away. Persons in six minutes of time to Portland, etc. All these wonders harmonize, no clashing, each adapted to all, but keep in progress, but the hand of God hastening to perform the right thing in the right time.

Mrs. Edgworth's first message was strictly true, "What hath God wrought." Daily we hear as one after another of these wonders are brought before the public. Their attention and surprise is manifested by repeating the question, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

Dan. xii. 6—How Long Shall It be to the End of These Wonders?

The answer seems to indicate that these wonders were connected with the scattering of the power of the holy people, (or people of the holy ones, as some translate, or Daniel's people.

I am in my seventieth year, and was quite a lad when the first steamboat came up to Hartford. The people gathered on the wharves waiting in suspense for this wonder to appear. Since that I have lived, through the [illegible] of steam applied to propelling all sorts of machinery. When a little boy old Mr. Ensign, one of our printers, printed off with one of two others the old paper, The Mercury, taking days. Now the steam press would do it in less than one hour. Since that the telegraph, the telephone, the [illegible], etc. Fleets of vessels [illegible] on every sea, to search for whales. Now I suppose there [illegible] of coal [illegible] from the earth in [illegible] than on the largest [illegible] that ever left our coast could carry away. CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—In looking over the Daily Inter Ocean of the 4th inst. I found the enclosed remarks, and I cut it out to hand you for insertion in THE RESTITUTION, as it is a plain statement of facts as they exist at the close of this the nineteenth century, with all of its boasted civilization knowledge, wisdom and religion. It is a glowing picture. It is an unanswerable argument against the progress of the Peace Societies and the world's conversion, as advocated by them. But it does confirm the words of Holy Writ, viz: "Of wars and rumor of war, nation rising up against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, famines, pestilence, earthquakes, etc.

"Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." The editor of the Inter-Ocean says "the outlook is not cheering." No, its not, to the great mass of mankind. They are perplexed. their hearts fail them in their efforts to solve the problem of "what is transpiring and what is to come."

But we who take the word of God for our guide, are not groping in darkness, nor doubts. We take courage and "lift up our heads (and rejoice) for we know that our redemption draweth nigh." Hence, we can see the value of God's word. Yea, we can tell our whereabouts on "the stream of time." We are resting the "haven of rest," we are "pulling for the shore of God's kingdom." We soon shall hear the proclamation, "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord, and God's Anointed." A momentuous question here propounds itself. "Who of earth's inhabitants shall inherit the coming kingdom?"

David in Psa. xv. gives a complete answer; so let us all take heed, lest we that think we stand shall fall. Oh that we all may have on the armor of God, so that when Jesus comes, we all may have an abundant entrance into the kingdom.

Yours looking for, and waiting for the King in His glory.

JOHN SISSONS.

Mount Ida, Inter-Ocean, Feb. 4, 1821.

We are approaching the close of the nineteenth century, the world is full of knowledge, and all the history of the past full of examples which should be used for the benefit of the living. And yet the civilization that comes from the schools and books seems wholly inadequate to check the tide of evil which sweeps the world, and leaves in its train sorrow for the race. The wires that underlie the ocean are daily freighted with the news of "failure of crops," of "starving millions," and the sorrow and ruin that threaten a great multitude unless relief is afforded. Upon the same wires is borne to us the news of "calls for troops" and war preparations of the largest magnitude. Intelligent Germany has already an army of 418,880 officers and men. She now calls for eleven additional regiments of infantry and two of cavalry. Russia has an army equipped and ready, numbering 507,116 officers and men. France has 502,097, and even little Italy has 359,615, while Austria has in active service 177,440. Add to these the army of Great Britain, and the "peaceable" attitude of Europe can be viewed at a glance. While millions are hungry and starving for bread, millions are marking time to martial music and keeping step to the beat of the drum. The plane lies idle on the bench, the trowel is unused, the plow is no longer bright in the furrow, and every kind of labor is paralyzed; homes and children are neglected in the efforts to bolster up the tottering wrecks of old monarchies, and the ambitions of reckless rulers. The outlook is not cheering. And as we boast of the wisdom and civilization of the nineteenth century, we have also reason to blush at its prodigality and crimes.

Love out their little hour.

When happy seasons end, and leave us sad, it is soothing to reflect that sadness will have an end also; that as the sunshine has given place to the shadow, so the shadow will be succeeded by the sunshine again. "Joy is sown for the righteous: and gladness for the upright in heart."

The hearts that now with sorrow ache,
Beneath some heavy blow,
Will from the shadows rise and break
The spell of all their woe,
And feel that life hath sunshine new,
And songs as sweet as birds',
If we but be humane and true,
And give them pleasant words.

To the Christian the little events of daily life tend wonderfully to his sanctification, though he may not know it at the time. This discharge of duty, this trial of patience, this denial of self, this loss, or suffering, or affliction, each, like the finishing stroke of the sculptor, here strikes off an excrescence, and there brings out a beauty of form or feature, till at last the work is completed, and the finished image is prepared for the temple.

Come then,—a still small whisper in your ear,
He has no hope who never had a fear;
And he that never doubted of his state,
He may perhaps—perhaps he may—too late.

The best knowledge is that which enables us to do our duty: to discern between good and bad, right and wrong, truth and falsehood.

Private prayer is the channel through which the Lord is graciously pleased to convey spiritual blessing to the soul. He knows all our wants, and, without our asking him, could supply them in the best manner and at the best possible time. But he will be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do for them according to the exceeding great and precious promises he hath given.

HAPPINESS.

A group of noble trees stands here
Before my cottage door,
And on a bough that reaches near
The upper chamber floor
There sits and sings a merry thrush;
No song could sweeter be;
And as he sings he brings a gush
Of happiness to me.
For in his song he tells of ONE
Who made him thus to sing;
Who knows beneath the summer sun,
Each smallest living thing;
Whose searching eyes run to and fro
Upon the earth, and see
Where best the strength and love to show
Of His infinity.

For the first time in the history of the Roman Catholic church, an Archbishop of that religious organization has been removed from office and his effects turned over to a coadjutor. This is the fate imposed upon Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, by Pope Leo XIII. The deposed prelate, whose sin was in having maladministered funds intrusted to his keeping, goes into retreat at a convent in Brown county, Ohio.

Microscopic holiness is the perfection of excellence. If a life will bear examination in every hour of it, it is pure indeed. To live by the day and watch each step is the true pilgrimage method.—C. H. Spurgeon.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Gospel "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the last examination of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for salvation.

True Manhood—Quit You Like Men, 1. Cor. xvi. 13.—No. 1.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Man was brought into being for a noble purpose. The completed ages of the earth reveal a progressive type of animated existence, from the radiata to the mammalia. At the close of the fifth epoch, no being had been created out of the material world adapted to terrestial life, and, at the same time, having a capacity sufficient to be its deputy governor. The fowls of Heaven, the fishes of the sea, and the beasts of the field were subservient alone to their Creator. They looked to Him for their daily food; by him they were guided. The law of instinct showed the Divine purpose; no being claiming a common origin, exercised any controling power over them. "In Him they lived, moved, and had their being."

God designed the world of animated nature to have a visible ruler, subordinate only to his own controling power. The plans of Jehovah made such a creation a matter of necessity—a creation out of the earth, to dwell upon, take care of, and govern the earth.

The earth had been fitted up for such a tenant before he was brought into being. Let us follow the history of that event as found in the Divine record. And God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth on the earth." So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he them: male and female, created he them. And God blessed them; and said unto them, "Be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every thing that moveth upon the earth." And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives and man became a living soul.

Such was God's purpose in man's creation. He formed him of the earth that he might have an intimate relationship to terrestial beings, and gave him a regal brain to exercise dominion over the world of inferior life. Such was Adam as he came out of the formative hand of his Lord and Maker:—an earth ruler with a Divine image. What noble attributes appear in man as he walks forth amid the bowers of Eden! He is its visible Lord and King, the noblest work of God; now in his royal manhood. Created a governor, he enters upon the duties of his responsible office,—the Divine link between God and his earthly creatures, holding it (the creation) as the centripetal power to the throne of its Creator. Such was Adam in his constitution and in his official station. Such was he in his true and higher manhood; his throne in Paradise, his dominion over all the air, earth, and sea. He looked upward upon the face of an approving Deity, and around him on the movements of an obedient life. In his appointed orbit he revolved until thrown from it by the seductive power of the arch-tempter.

Earth's garniture at the commencement of man's primeval state was well adapted to the character of the government then inaugurated: all was "very good." But when, through disobedience, he was deposed from his sovereignty earth felt in all her parts, the sad calamity. He gave rule over peaceful nature came suddenly to a conclusion. Without a visible head, cursed with barrenness, was subjected to all the eccentricities of lawless elements. Man was henceforth to be a wanderer from his home, the type of a Divine picture, and in human form returns to place man again in his original position; such as when first brought into being, and as he appointed in his first and higher manhood.

How was man affected by the fall? It reduced him to the physical, moral, and mental inabilities of childhood, to struggle again for the recovery of his forfeited rank and; for, let it be distinctly known, that man, out of his proper sphere, is in his helpless minority. An inspired apostle said, "When I was a child I spoke as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things." Who can doubt that man was reduced to the infancy of childhood? Trace his footsteps in history. Are not his acts quite as simple as those of childhood? Where can be found any true manhood among the nations of antiquity? View him during the past sixty centuries; where are the evidences of his noble origin? Contemplate his social and civil relationship. Contemplate him in all his changes, in poverty and in wealth, as a cottager or a King; what effort of a vigorous manhood has he exhibited? In what position has he yielded to the original law of his being?

All others of God's creatures, animate and inanimate, are obedient to law. They answer the design of their creation. See the vegetable kingdom in its species and classes. How exact in their law of physical development, so uniform are they in their production, growth and habits, that uniform systems are readily constructed, establishing the fact of their obedience to law. They develope in their own proper sphere. It is equally true in all the lower orders of animated nature. The population of the great deep move as on the morning of their creation. Their constitution and code of laws undergo but few amendments. Their language and habits of life are uniform, and similar. The lion's roar is the same in all ages, and in all its dwelling places. Insects are under the control of unvarying laws; so likewise of the fowls of heaven; their laws of instict are the same. The cock's crow is now as on the night of Peter's denial and bitter weeping. Glance your eye over the habitable globe; view its rivers, lakes, seas and oceans; its plains, hills and mountains—these everlasting monuments of obedience to immutable laws. Look upward. Gaze upon those systems wheeling through immensity of space, nightly celebrating the knowledge, wisdom, and power of their Creator. Are they lawless? How silent, how true, how rapid, how majestic their movements! Obedient to the laws of Jehovah they are ever active in celebrating his glorious attributes. Where through the extended fields of nature can be found a realm not under the control of law? They are in the orbit and yield readily to the Higher power.

Does man render such obedience to law? No law, human or Divine, has been sufficiently powerful to control his eccentricities. Possessed of lofty attributes, he has sunk himself below his humblest subjects, and brutalized his nature. He has reduced himself to a second childhood.

What part of his six thousand years sojourn on earth has developed any other character? any higher aspirations? Follow him as he flies before the angel out of Eden. What answer does he return as an apology for his first act of disobedience? Was it not exceedingly puerile? "The woman gave me and I did eat," as if that were an apology suited to his original manhood! Was it not an admission of the surrender of reason and duty to an unlawful passion? What is man's history for the first sixteen and one-half centuries? Where are any evidences of his manhood? His physical stamina of life reduced from 900 years to 120 years. Is not such a reduction of vitality a proof of the violation of the law of life? What evidence have we that his mental powers were not reduced to a similar shrinkage? What of his moral nature:—that which holds him responsible to God for his course of life? "Every thought of the imagination of his heart was evil continually." The deep moral depravity, and him Enoch, the waters of the deluge. One family alone could be found which had not lost any feature of its high estate.

But with the overwhelming calamity fresh, Noah and his family an effective lesson of Divine wisdom? What were their subsequent lives? how corrupt and fallen. See their off-spring occupied in building a house or refuge from a similar catastrophe—erecting a tower on a low plain! Had it been four miles on a lofty mountain there would have been a show of judgment; under the circumstances it was but an act of simple childhood. What childish views of the resources of the Deity! As if the plans of Jehovah could be circumvented by creatures of an hour.

True man to his national constitution. Has he exhibited anything higher than the weakest puerility? What end has he proposed in his great national schemes? Any plan to elevate mankind? Nothing higher than self aggrandizement. Trace him through Egyptian history. Enter the land of the Pharaohs. Examine their proud monuments, those that have stood the crush of empires. What elevated thoughts do they exhibit? Simply to perpetuate the name of noted monarchs whose memories have long since been forgotten. Money, valuable lives, and untiring research have failed to discover, when, by whom, and for what purpose, some of them were erected.

Did the Babylonian empire have any greater success in elevating mankind? It erected a universal dominion; but wherein did it resemble the original empire of unfallen man? It was where ever the children of men dwell, but where was the purity of Adam's dominion? It was the "head of gold," but lifeless in the power to renovate its population. It was no improvement on the Egyptian dynasty.

Medo-Persia was simply another face of human effort. It was in possession of greater energy but still more brutal, a devouring agent, but powerless to ennoble our race. It left man a wanderer in the great moral wilderness. No exalted motives are exhibited in their history; no power to restore the human family to its original purity and holiness.

The Grecian empire was a third experiment of human combination. But was it more successful? It is said that the Grecian was a reign of intellect. If so, it was intellect steeped in the fountain of moral pollution. The Grecian brain sent forth no pure waters. Corrupt morals were always popular with the educated Greeks. Nothing else was appreciated. In them it was fully demonstrated that the world by wisdom knew not God. What were the morals of Athens in the days of Paul? Their intelligence had no power to lift them out of the sinks of polluted idolatry. They admired Jupiter more than God, Apollo more than Jesus, and Venus more than the Virgin Mary. Their systems of philosophy were debasing, their practices still worse. They were constantly hearing and telling the news. They were the devotees of novelty. Like children they were happy when the disciples of some new thing. Christianity never secured a home in the refined city of Minerva. There was never a church at Athens. The Meek Spirit of the Son of God could find no rest in the proud Athenian heart.

What people were more sunken in vice than the citizens of Corinth? The Christian church planted in that city partook more or less of its impurities. Corinth was the centre of the worship of Venus the goddess of love. A thousand females, prostituted by her worship, daily crowded her temple. The Grecian effort to elevate man to the lofty position from which he fell through disobedience, was an educated failure.

Did the fourth empire, the Roman dynasty, have any better success in elevating man to his origina. sphere? With the advantages of the Son of God and his apostles they withered to their Pagan idolatry, till a spurious Christianity was enthroned in its capital. The four monarchy failed to elevate mankind. It developed great physical resources, and produced men of great attainments in human learning, but where did they show any moral improvement? Where can we discover any resemblance between the dominion of Adam and that of the beasts? These four monarchies, symbolized by the metalic image of the King of Babylon, are four human experiments, and in the sense of elevating the human race, gigantic failures. Having within them no enobling vitality, worthless as to human improvement, it only to be reduced to dust to give the all-conquering Kingdom of the stone.

The renovating power is not in man; nor is it the embodyment of the wisdom and power of any human government. Man is incapable of self-renovation. The fountain of his heart sends forth impurities. It must be cleansed by one pure in his nature, and with power to cleanse.

God has revealed the symbol of a fifth monarchy. A stone strikes the metallic image (symbol of human governments) and scatters its dust to the wind (Dan. ii. 44.) and a mountain fills the whole earth. This is Messiah's Kingdom, which shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. The reign of Messiah, the Son of the Most High will be one of righteousness, and endless, a reign of pure men under the guidance of pure and holy principles. Under this reign man shall be restored to his original sphere; such as he was in paradise before his dejection and banishment. Then will he yield as readily to law as those systems that roll about us through the universe. Then shall he reflect the Divine image, and be partaker of the uncreated holiness. His eccentric wanderings of six thousand years, shall terminate, in the full possession of his original exalted state, and as joint heir with Messiah reign on a purified earth, in the age of the Restitution of his true manhood. This honor have all the Saints. Praise ye the Lord.

Cast your eye over the earth. Mark the condition of its nations. What is the tendency of their movements? Are they in pursuit of the higher life? What mean those armies watching about tottering thrones? Is it not the hush before the rushing storm? How are the churches? Are they in expectation of the return of the Purifier? or do they labor for worldly gain? Who are seeking those things which are above. We should act like men, since the crown of true manhood is within reach of us, the crown of life kept in reserve for all that love Christ's appearing.

The Kingdom.

4. The kingdom of Israel restored will be God's kingdom or kingdom of heaven. This proposition needs but to be testified to by the Great Teacher himself to establish it. It will be seen in my last article that Jesus never in one instance denied his right to the kingdom of Israel; but that he asserted his right is evident, not only from the record but also by the conduct and accusations of his enemies. It must be remembered that during the three and a half years of Jesus' public ministry he never failed to preach a kingdom. Indeed it is recorded of him that "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent." Luke iv. 43. Thus teaching that he had been sent to preach a kingdom; he had preached it in some cities and he would still continue to preach the same in whatever cities he should preach.

"Well," says one, "I admit that he preached the kingdom of God, but I do not believe the kingdom of Israel will be that kingdom." Hold on now, don't be too fast in your conclusion. Come, and let us reason together. Did not Jesus promise his disciples positions in his kingdom? Did he not say to them, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father has appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel?" Did he not, don't you think, proclaim the very kingdom his Father appointed unto him? Well, that is the kingdom he appoints to his disciples and with which the tribes of Israel are associated. Did he not tell Peter that he and the rest of the apostles should sit on twelve thrones judging Israel when Christ should sit in his throne of glory; and that he would sit upon his throne of glory when he comes in his glory? Luke xxii. 29; Matt. xix. 28; xxv. 31.

Well, when Jesus comes in his glory with his angels the judgment will take place and the kingdom begin; and it will be said the kingdoms this world are become the kingdoms our Lord and of his Christ. 2 Tim. iv. 1; Rev. xi. 15.

Did Christ preach one kingdom and promise his disciples another? Well, he preached the kingdom of God and promised the kingdom of Israel. After his resurrection one said, "We trusted that it was he that should redeem Israel." Then for forty days he spoke to them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and then they ask him, "Lord, will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts i. 3, 6.

Now to what conclusion must we come? Why this: the kingdom which Jesus preached for three and a half years before his crucifixion and about which he spoke after his resurrection; that kingdom which he promised to give his disciples when he said "fear not, little flock; for it your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," will be the kingdom of Israel restored, although it is called by different names in the New Testament.

Jesus calls it kingdom of God in Luke xxi. where he tells what signs were to precede his second coming the last of which was to be himself coming in a cloud with power and great glory; then they would know that the kingdom of God was nigh at hand. He also said he would take his own throne when he comes in his glory. His own throne was the throne of David; none other was promised him. Thus associating the taking of his own throne with the ushering in of the kingdom of God; which events must be the same.

Again, he spoke a parable to his disciples because they were near Jerusalem and they thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear. Now what did they think was about to appear? Evidently the very kingdom he had promised to them and about which they inquired when they said, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" It was the kingdom of Israel that they expected was about to appear; but Jesus calls it in the parable kingdom of God. Luke xix. 11. It does not therefore prove two kingdoms, but one kingdom called by the two names.

"Well," says my objector again, "I believe the kingdom of Israel restored will be the kingdom of God, but my bible tells me of the kingdom of heaven; that I believe to be the upper and better kingdom." Not too fast, if you please; that is but another name for the same kingdom. Because some of the writers have used the name kingdom of heaven it does not necessarily follow that the kingdom will be located in heaven; but that it is the same as the kingdom of God will be seen by the following passages: Matt. xix. 23; Mark x. 23; Luke xviii. 24. Matthew says how hard it is for those that have riches to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Mark and Luke in giving the same both say kingdom of God. It is evident that they meant the same by kingdom of God as Matthew meant by the kingdom of heaven.

Matt. xiii. 31; Luke xiii. 18. Here Jesus, according to Matthew, resembles the kingdom of heaven to a grain of mustard seed; according to Luke it is the kingdom of God. Certainly not two kingdoms and both like a grain of mustard but one kingdom called by the two names. Matt. xiii. 38; Luke xiii. 20.

Matthew makes Jesus say kingdom of heaven, and Luke records his language of the same, even kingdom of God.

And now, objector, can you make out two distinct kingdoms because it is called by the two names?

It is also called kingdom of David, kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, kingdom of God's dear Son, and everlasting kingdom. Must we suppose there are as many different kingdoms as it has names? Again, Jesus says, "They shall come from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south and sit down in the kingdom of God." Luke xiii. 29. Matthew (viii. 11) records it kingdom of heaven. Now what Luke meant by kingdom of God Matthew meant by kingdom of heaven; for both were speaking of persons coming from three different directions and entering the kingdom. It is called God's kingdom because it will be the fifth monarchy of earth as foretold in the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream and Daniel's vision of the beasts; and will be set up by the God of heaven in the days of the fourth kingdom, Rome, in her ten toe state. See Dan. ii. and vii.

It will be the kingdom of heaven because it will far surpass any kingdom prior to it; will be located in the land promised to Abraham—that heavenly country of which Paul speaks in his Hebrew letter—with an immortal king, an immortal cabinet, tree of life reinstated to which the obedient and loyal among all nations may have access, eat and live forever.

Jesus the Light of the World.

Who is the light of the world? Jesus saith, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John xiii. 12. John says that he came "to bear witness of the light, that all men through him (Jesus or the Light) might believe. He (John) was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light." We who study the Bible, must study diligently, to be able to come to a right understanding of its teachings; the Word of God will be made plain to our minds if we will make it explain itself—which it will by close study.

Now God sent this Light into the world to lighten the darkness of mankind; but man, through gross wickedness and evil deeds, "hateth the Light, neither cometh to the light, lest these deeds should be reproved." Harken now, "he that doeth (the) truth cometh to the Light, that his deeds—the deeds of truth—may be made manifest that they are wrought of God."

But, alas; we find very few among the myriads of people in this world, who will come to the Light to see that these deeds are wrought of God; therefore, because of the hardness of their hearts, "they shall perish." But, he that believes in Jesus will not be condemned, for Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my words, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not be condemned; but is passed from death unto life."

The great love of God for mankind, is made manifest in that "he sent his only begotten Son" into the world that the world "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing they might have life through his name." Yes, he came to save the world from its wickedness and sin; but the world will not lay hold upon him who is the rock of their salvation; for Jesus says "many are called, but few are chosen." But, unto them which are called, "to them gave the power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." And if we be then the sons of God, then we are "born of God," and if "God so loved us" that Christ laid down his life for us, we ought also to love one another. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God....We love him, because he first loved us." For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous. For whosoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come, and has given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life. Amen.

THE LAND OF MIDIAN.

"The gold mines of Midian are again to the front," says the Times' correspondent at Alexandria, writing 29th December, "Captain Burton, who, in two visits to the regions near the Gulf of Akaba, found the ruins of many mining towns and traces of much mineral wealth, is now about to make a final survey on behalf of certain mining capitalists as a preliminary to extensive commercial operations. The Khedive is only to be asked for leave to work, subject to payment of a royalty on the minerals."

THE RESTITUTION.

A. A. CHAPIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 3, 1879.

BELIEVING that the most definite signs of the Lord's near coming are of a political character, and that the "times of the Gentiles" are measured by the subjugation and dispersion of the Jewish people, we have been giving quite an amount of space, in our paper, lately, to the present aspects of the famous Eastern Question. Prophecy positively demands that Jerusalem and Palestine shall be colonized by the Jews before the final establishment of the kingdom of God, and it is remarkable that political events are now tending in this very direction. We have taken an article for the present issue of THE RESTITUTION, from a very late foreign periodical relative to a scheme for colonizing the fertile country east of the Jordan. The nations are so jealous of each other that the only solution of the problem, as to who shall possess the land of promise when the Turkish grasp is broken, is to restore it to its original owners—the Jewish nation. The Ottoman's lease is just expiring, and the times of Gentile dominion and Israelitish dispersion near the termination, and, consequently, great political changes are just at hand. Those prophetical periods, that were supposed to terminate at the Second advent of Messiah, were given to measure events connected with Jewish dispersion and restoration, and they will be fulfilled in accordance with the purpose for which they were given. It is our own persuasion that two very marked periods will terminate within the next three years, and we look for surprising political changes in the east.

The Closing days of Christendom.

The following is given in the Rainbow as an extract from a work recently published in London. It is entitled "The Closing Days of Christendom, as Foreshadowed in Parable and Prophecy." By Burlington B. Wale. The specimen passages copied from the book, which we reprint, are worthy of careful reading and thoughtful reflection by all in these closing days of Gentile rule:

"THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES."

It seems to be a principle in the moral government of God, and in his dealings with the human race, not to permit a dispensation to pass away without premonitory symptoms of its approaching dissolution; symptoms and signs which, pre-announced on the inspired page, pass into historic fact as the dispensation draws to a close.

Considering that the incarnation and redemptive work of Christ are the central facts round which the moral history of the world revolves, and the pivot on which the hopes and the eternal future of redeemed man turn, it was not to be expected that such stupendous events should enter unannounced upon the stage of time and march across the arena without premonitory intimations, and accompanying phenomena, calculated to arrest and fasten the attention of mankind, and to direct the watchful observer to the event they were intended to illustrate and confirm. Nor were such prodigy and portent wanting, prodigy and portent of that startling character, which "left men no room to doubt the source from whence they came, or the purpose for which they were sent."

It was for the non-observance of these "signs" that our Lord so sternly rebuked the Scribes and Pharisees: "Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" What those signs were we have shown at length in the chapter, "The Aspects of Dying Dispensations," and shall therefore content ourselves with remarking here that there was (1) the chronological sign of Daniel's seventy weeks; (2) the celestial sign—the predicted star to arise out of the east (Numb. xxiv. 17), leading the wise men to Jerusalem; (3) the prophecy of Micah pointing to the place of Christ's birth; (4) the wise men coming from the far east with gifts and gold, frankincense, and myrrh; (5) the departure of the sceptre from Judah.*

Above all there were the moral and physical signs of Messiah's presence. As he himself showed in his reply to the messengers sent by John the Baptist, saying, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another? Go and tell John, the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, and the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them." This was the fulfillment of the prophecies in Isa. lxi. 1, xl. 2. The Savior did not proclaim his Messiahship, nor did he permit his disciples to do so; his works and miracles were to testify of that; yet the whole of these signs were disregarded by the religionists of that age - and were utterly ignored by the religious guides and teachers who should have been the first to have noted them, and placed them before the public mind.

Is there no parallelism between the "signs" which preceded and accompanied the first advent, and those which are to precede and accompany the second? We think there is. There is (1) the chronological sign (at least, if we accept the year-day theory); (2) the political sign, or the condition of the last of the four great monarchies; (3) the ecclesiastical sign, or the condition of the professing church as indicated in Matt. xiii.; (4) the signs in Dan. xii. 4, and others, the whole of which are dealt with at length in the different chapters of this work, especially the moral and religious features of the age, as explained in chapter ix. To direct attention to these signs, many of which are in operation around us now, is the special object of the author; and that the words of the Lord may have due weight on him that writes, and they that read, "Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that are looking for their Lord, when he will rise up from the wedding."

"THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES."

A clear apprehension of the meaning of the phrase which constitutes the heading of this chapter,—a phrase which originated with the Savior,—is all important to the proper study and understanding of unfulfilled prophecy.

What is the meaning of the term? When did the period indicated by the phrase begin? What are its special characteristics? Have we any Scriptural clue to its close? Are we nearing its termination? And if so, what are the circumstances which point more immediately to its termination? By what is it to be succeeded? These are questions which demand our most careful consideration, and to which, as far as possible, we shall endeavor to give Scriptural answers.

The phrase occurs first in our Lord's answer to the question of the disciples as to the signs which were to portend the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem (Luke xxi. 24). Speaking of the destruction of the city and the dispersion of the Jews, the Lord says: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." By this we learn that the "times of the Gentiles" stand intimately connected with and are representative of the subjugation of Jerusalem and Judea to Gentile dominion and control, and that when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled Jerusalem and the Holy Land shall be freed from their dominion and restored to their original possessors, the Jews. The language of the apostle in Rom. xi. confirms this. He says: "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part has happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written; there shall come out of Zion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

Remembering then, that the phrase, "the times of the Gentiles" means the subjugation of Jerusalem and Judea to Gentile dominion, we proceed to enquire into the origin of that dominion and the circumstances by which its commencement was accompanied.

From the moment that the Lord began to deliver Israel from Egypt, to conduct them through the wilderness, and to establish them in the promised land, up to the election and reign of Saul as king, the Jewish state was a theocracy, governed, and ruled over by God. The tabernacle was the palace, the dwelling place, the seat of the "Pilgrim God," the mercy seat was his throne,—the throne of grace, the holy of holies his throne room, Jehovah its occupant—the shekinal cloud the symbol of his presence on earth, and at Jerusalem over and among the Israelites. The cherubim, or cherubic figures above the mercy seat, were the heraldic supporters of the throne, and the conservators of the glory. "The mercy seat" was the covering of the ark, and the two combined constituted the throne of the Lord.

Now, in the days of Eli, this "throne of the Lord" was captured by the Philistines. But the Lord smote them with sore plagues, and thus compelled them to send it back. The time of Gentile supremacy had not yet come. In the days of Samuel, Israel demanded a king like the nations around them, and Samuel was sore grieved at the request; but the Lord said:—"They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected Me, that I should not reign over them." With the rejection of God, and the election of Saul as king, the Jewish monarchy was put upon its trial,—though the throne rightfully belonged still to God,—hence it is said of Solomon when he came to the crown, that "Solomon sat upon the throne of the Lord." Upwards of five centuries after the capture, and enforced restoration of the Ark, the "throne of the Lord," by the Philistines, Nebuchadnezzar besieged and took Jerusalem. The Jewish monarchy had been on its trial five centuries, and had failed, and with the conquest of Jerusalem by the king of Babylon the "times of the Gentiles" began. From this time the Ark, the "throne of the Lord" on earth, was missing; whether captured by Nebuchadnezzar, or buried by Jeremiah in Mount Nebo, as stated by the author of the Book of Maccabees, must remain unknown. But as a symbol of the Divine presence with, and rule over Israel, it left Jerusalem then, and has never since been discovered. In harmony with this fact, and as further illustrative of the idea involved in its loss, we find Ezekiel observing and chronicling the vision of the Shekinal cloud of glory, leaving the Holy of Holies; halting at the threshold of the temple, then for a time hovering over the doomed city, and then finally as it were reluctantly, disappearing on the mountain on the east side of the city (chapters x., xi.).

Now the symbol of the Divine presence and power had been with Israel a thousand years. It inaugurated their deliverance from Egypt at the "burning bush;" it came between them and the Egyptians at the Red Sea; it was a light to the one and a darkness to the other; it went before them to choose their halting places during the forty years wandering through the wilderness. It took possession of Tabernacle and Temple when the first was consecrated by Moses, and the other dedicated by Solomon. It rested for a thousand years upon the Mercy Seat, and reflected back its glowing responses upon the Urim and Thummim of the High Priest. The Prophet now sees it leave Israel, reluctantly depart from altar and temple, threshold and city, the "times of the Gentiles" had begun.

Contemporary with Ezekiel was Daniel. God gave to Nebuchadnezzar a vision of this bestowment of power upon himself, as the head of the first four monarchies, as the inaugurator of Gentile supremacy over Jerusalem. Daniel, inspired by God, recalled the dream to the memory of the despotic king, and interpreted it, "Thou art this head of gold." He was the first beneath whose feet "Jerusalem was trodden down," and from that hour to this, it has never been free from Gentile dominion and control. It passed from Babylonian rule to the Persian on the night in which Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom. It was while under the Persian rule that Nehemiah wrote the words, "Behold, we are servants this day, and the land which thou gavest our fathers to eat the fruit thereof, behold we are servants in it; and it yieldeth much increase unto the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our sins." When the Persian power was destroyed by Macedon, the rule over Palestine and Jerusalem passed to the Greeks, and from the Greeks to the Romans, and from the Romans to the Saracens and the Turks, as conquerors of that portion of the Roman empire, who are its possessors at the present moment.

Thus the "times of the Gentiles" have lasted already nearly two thousand five hundred years. Is there any indication that we are approaching their close? Yes, (a) the ideal of government in the mind of God, is the rule of one. When He created Adam He made him earth's autocrat. Adam by the fall lost his dominion. (b) The Jewish government was the rule of one, it was a theocracy; when Israel became unfaithful to its mission and its trust, the theocracy passed away. The times of the Gentiles began in the bestowment of power upon Nebuchadnezzar: "thou art this head of gold;" again it was the rule of one. Power in its origin and bestowment is divine—golden; passed into the hands of man it deteriorates. Darius could do nothing to deliver Daniel without consulting his counsellors, and even then, nothing against their will. Nebuchadnezzar cast the Hebrew youths into the furnace without consulting any one but himself, and if his counsellors had opposed the act, would probably have cast them into the furnace too.

The Macedonian monarchy was associated with, and limited by, a military oligarchy,—a farther remove from God's ideal of government (i. e. the rule of one), and so, represented by brass, a metal far inferior to silver, and still more inferior to gold. The depreciation of power continues, and "iron" becomes the representative of Roman power. But in its last stage the "iron" is seen seeking to effect an unnatural and impossible amalgamation with the "clay," in other words the monarchic principle,—the rule of one,—seeking to allay itself with the democratic principle or the rule of all;—a principle which has chiefly and marvellously developed itself throughout all Europe during the present century, and has within the last two years, been professedly recognized by and incorporated with the sinful despotism of Turkey.

Now it is while this principle is developing itself, and compelling its adoption by the governments of Europe, as in the present day, that the stone cut out of the mountain without hands is seen to smite the image upon its "clay-iron" feet, and God sets up his kingdom upon earth, and earth returns to the rule of one,—the second Adam, the "Lord out of heaven." The times of the Gentiles will have closed, the fulness of the Gentiles will have been brought in, and there will come out of Zion the deliverer, and will turn away ungodliness from Jacob.

The prophetic history of the four monarchies which was thus presented to Nebuchadnezzar under the figure of a great metallic image was presented to Daniel under the figure of four wild beasts, ravaging and desolating the earth. This is God's estimate of the four Gentile Monarchies. In both visions the teaching is the same;—the rise and successive subversion of four universal monarchies, followed by the setting up and establishment of Messiah's kingdom upon earth. But to the man of the world,—the Babylonian monarch, Gentile dominion is typified by a golden image,—while to the prophet, the man of God, it is represented by a wild beast! The closing scene in the first vision, is the demolition of Gentile dominion by the "stone" smiting the image; and then becoming a great mountain, and filling the whole earth; in the other, the investure of the Son of Man with supreme authority by the Ancient of days, and the "saints" associated with the "Son of Man" in taking the kingdom.

Now what is the summary and result of this vision's teaching? (1) It is manifest that no careful student of prophecy could have expected the setting up of Christ's kingdom upon earth while either of the first three empires were in their glory, before the fourth had appeared upon the stage. (2) Nor could Messiah's kingdom have been looked for while the fourth empire itself (the Roman) yet retained its individual unity, and had not been split up into a number of separate sovereignities by the inroads of the Goths, Huns, and Vandals; for the vision, by its explicit language, and the angel, by the interpretation given to the vision, would have forbidden such an anticipation. (3) Nor until three of these separate sovereignities had been uprooted by, and in the presence of, another little horn, by which their territories were appropriated, could the stone "cut out of the mountain without hands," be expected to smite the image, and supplant its rule. For (4) the "little horn" is seen to persecute the saints,—and thus a period of prolonged persecution follows the rise of the little horn, before it is consumed and destroyed, and its body given to the burning flame. [5] Nor even then could Messiah's kingdom have been expected, till the democratic principle "the clay" should arise in its power, and compel its recognition, and by forced amalgamation with the principle of autocracy, or despotism, the rule of one, symbolized by the "iron." But when the first three empires had passed away, and when the last—the fourth, the Roman, had appeared, and when that, losing its compact unity, had been divided by invasion and conquest, into a number of separate kingdoms; and when the little persecuting horn had appeared, and uprooted three kingdoms, and persecuted the saints; and when, as the last event in the series,—democracy had compelled its recognition and adoption by the kings of the earth and the autocratic principle:—then we have the fullest scriptural warrant for constantly and instantly expecting the setting up of Messiah's kingdom. As far as we can see or judge, we have reached the last scene and are gazing upon the last display of Gentile power,—as in a dissolving view it passes away in the glories of Messiah's reign.

* The sceptre was the tribal rod, not necessarily implying kingly authority, but a rod or staff, or official emblem indicating that royal or tribal rule (Num. xvii. 2). Every tribe had one. But the ten tribes had been dispersed, and ceased to be a collective people, centuries before Christ came. But Judah still retained its tribal unity, and therefore its symbolic sceptre rod, or ensign, up to the time that Christ came. Less than forty years after the crucifixion, it was broken, and the tribe dispersed.

† In Ezekiel xxx., where Egypt is threatened with desolation and captivity, the same phrase is used as is used here by the Lord to designate the period of Israel's desolation and captivity, verses 3 and 4. It shall be the "time of the heathen," i.e., the Gentiles. Chap. xxxvi., verses 34th verse.

‡ The "times of the Gentiles" evangelic is an interval between the "times" of the Jews. The "times of the Gentiles" began when Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem and the Jewish monarchy,—and that terminated the "times of the Jews." The times of the Gentiles are to continue through and during the existence of the four great monarchies, and when Judea is delivered from Gentile (Turkish) dominion, the times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled, and the "times of the Jews" return. Thus the exposition denotes the time of Gentile dominion over the Holy Land. And can the reader doubt, looking simply at the signs of the times, that when the Turkish dominion over Judea (already trembling to its fall), ceases, that the Jews will re-possess their own land, from which they have been exiles eighteen hundred years? The jealousy of the European powers will ensure this.

THE EMPEROR TO THE CZAR.

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—The Emperor William, in writing to the Czar his congratulations at the latter's escape from death at the time of the explosion in the Winter Palace, attaches great blame to the Russian police for disregarding the warning from the Berlin police that such an act was contemplated by the Nihilists.

EARTHQUAKE.

LONDON, Feb. 27.—A severe earthquake shock occurred at Yeddo on the 25th instant. No details.

BOTZEN, Feb. 26.—The Botzner Zeitung says: "We have the best authority for stating that the Castle of Stumelz, near Meran, Austrian Tyrol, was rented on the 23rd inst. by the Emperor of Russia for a provisional term of three months. A number of his servants have already reached the castle. The Emperor and Empress will probably arrive early in the spring."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 27.—The gymnastic societies of Eastern Roumelia have ordered Bulgarian priests in Eastern Roumelia to impose an oath upon their congregations to neither sell nor buy of Greek inhabitants or their friends. Foreign consuls have made a protest to Governor Aleko Pasha in regard to the matter.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 27.—The entire Russian fleet in the Aral sea has been ordered into the Oxus to participate in General Kaufman's campaign against the Turkomans.

Vera Sassulitch was arrested in the apartments of an officer of the marine, whose wife assisted in concealing her.

Warnings have been sent to the Government from Berlin that on the 2nd of March it is intended to blow up three of the principal streets of St. Petersburg.

Vera Sassulitch, the famous feminine Nihilist agent, who, on the 5th of February, 1873, attempted the assassination of General Trepoff, the Prefect of St. Petersburg, has been arrested at the residence of one of her friends in this city.

FIRE RAGING.

LONDON, Feb. 28.—A Copenhagen dispatch of Friday night says: "A fire now raging threatens the destruction of a large portion of the city. Fears are entertained for the British Embassy. The King and Crown Prince are present stimulating the exertions of the firemen."

LONDON, Feb. 28.—The town of Urfa, in Asiatic Turkey, supposed to be the site of "Ur of the Chaldees," has been nearly destroyed by fire.

FAMINE IN IRELAND.

The latest news is that destitution prevails in its most aggravated form. The people are crying for bread, and the state of affairs will, for weeks to come, grow worse instead of better, notwithstanding all the efforts made to relieve the distress.

FAMINE IN PERSIA.

From reports obtained from noteworthy sources, it appears that multitudes are in a state of utter destitution. It is said that more than half the population of Oroomiah are on the very verge of starvation. The oppression and plundering of the mountaineers of Kordistan, by the Koords, ever since the war between Russia and Turkey, has driven hundreds of families into Oroomiah, and hundreds have already perished. The crops have also largely failed in the Caucasian fields, and famine and pestilence are already raging there. There are not less than 30,000 starving families in the vicinity of Oroomiah.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

The highest principle is the highest expediency.

Trust not so much to the comforts of God as to the God of comforts.

H. Newton: If we are God's children, we need not fear the developements of his providence.

There were easy ways that ran around the base of the hill Difficulty, but the name of one was Danger, and of the other Destruction; the only right way was straight up the hill.

Blindfolded and alone I stand
With unknown thresholds on each hand;
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are opened, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid,
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
"Not as I will."

The grace that saves a man, will save another through him. If it does not, it is a kind that will not likely save either.

To venture upon the occasion of sin, and then to pray, Lead us not into temptation, is the same as to thrust thy finger into the fire, and then pray that it may not be burnt.

Works of love are more acceptable than lofty contemplation; art thou engaged in devoutest prayer, and God wills that thou go out and carry broth to a sick brother, thou shouldst do it with joy.

Many persons spend so much time in criticising and disputing the gospel that they have none for practicing it. As if two sick men should quarrel about the phraseology of their physician's prescription; and forget to take the medicine.

Dr. J. Walker: The turning point in every man's religious experience is, not when he says, "I believe," but when he says, "I will." A man is not a Christian in proportion to the amount of truth he puts into his creed, but in proportion to the amount of truth he puts into his life.

LOSS.

Once I lost a single pearl
In a sea of gloom and fear;
And it lay beneath the waves
Many a sad and empty year.
Then there came a voice to me:
"Cast thy net into the sea!"
So I cast, and drew the line—
Lo! twelve pearls encrusted mine!

Thus, whene'er the Father takes Precious gifts I fain would keep,
Somewhere in his sea, I know,
With his gems they safely sleep.
Melt the days, like dreams, away,
Till I hear the Father say:
"Cast thy net into the sea;
I have many pearls for thee!"

THE FAITHFUL SENTINEL.

When Pompeii was destroyed there were very many buried in the ruins of it who were afterward found in very different situations. They found some who were in the streets, as if they had been attempting to make their escape. There were some found in deep vaults, as if they had gone there for security. There were some found in lofty chambers. But where did they find the Roman sentinel? They found him standing at the city gate, with his hands still grasping the war-weapon, where he had been placed by his captain. And there, while the heavens threatened; there while the earth shook beneath him; there while the lava stream rolled, he had stood at his post; and there, after a thousand years he was found. So let Christians stand to their duty in the post at which their Captain has placed them.

Mr. Bergh Against Vivisection.

ALBANY, Feb. 20.—Henry Bergh delivered a long address before a joint committee of both houses to-day, advocating the passage of a bill to abolish vivisection. His argument was intended to show that the mutilation of dumb animals by scientific men was not necessary to the advancement of science, and he cited cases where living dogs had been "cut to pieces" merely to illustrate the palpitation of the heart. From long and close observation of the canine race, he was at times tempted to believe that these animals possessed souls, for he discovered in their intelligence the phenomena which existed in himself. Whatever conclusions might be reached on that point, it could not be denied that animals possessed the sense of feeling, for feeling did not depend on intellect. When a patriot or martyr was brought to the stake, he was enabled "to endure the rack or flame by the high and holy thoughts" which occupied his mind. The consciousness of his own rectitude armed him with invincible patience, but what was there to cheer the poor animal under the knife of the vivisector? After applying a most thorough system of torture to an animal, what was gained? Three surgeons were of one opinion, and the remainder of the party disagreed with them. He thought the inevitable consequence of perusing works treating of medical science, was astonishment at the conflicting opinions of its disciples. Great discoveries in medical science, he contended, were not made by vivisection. Harvey, to whom had doubtfully been assigned the discovery of the circulation of the blood, had left on record the fact that it was reflection which led to the discovery. He used magnifying glasses, and thus saw the pulsations of the heart in the transparent bodies of insects. Mr. Bergh characterized the slaughter of animals by vivisection as useless and wicked, and "a demoralizing spectacle to a rising generation."

The Two Servants.

(Tune—Webb—"The Morning Light.")

Thrice blessed is that servant
Who watcheth for his Lord,
And bleeds his toil and watching,
And sore is his reward;
He would not for one moment
The glorious rapture miss
Of welcoming his Savior—
Hour of transcendent bliss!

But if that evil servant
Within his heart shall say:
"My Lord His promised coming Doth very long delay."
And spend his time in feasting,
In drunkenness and sin,
In swiftly coming judgment
His punishment he'll win.

Lord, keep us watching, waiting.
Till that blessed hour shall come,
When Thou in clouds of glory
Shalt take Thy people home;
We crave Thy loving welcome,
Thy tender, sweet "Well done,"
Whether Thou tarry longer
Or come ere set of sun.

SELECTIONS.

[Glasgow Messenger.]

Proposed Jewish Colony in the Land of Gilead.

A correspondent writes to the Jewish Chronicle that in conversation at Constantinople with Mr. Lawrence Oliphant (ex-M. P., well-known author of Piccadilly, and contributor to Blackwood and other periodicals), that gentleman was kind enough to confide to him for publication the hitherto unpublished details of a scheme which he has been maturing for a long time past, and which has received the (unofficial) approbation of Lords Beaconsfield and Salisbury and others. There can be no doubt, the writer says, but that the Sultan's firman will shortly be given to the scheme. Mr. Oliphant, anxious to discover a means by which the Sultan might show that prosperity is possible under his rule, has, after mature deliberation, hit upon the colonization of Palestine by the Jews—a people composed of various nationalities—as the only possible solution of his problem which would not offend political prejudices. Mr. Oliphant said—"I have submitted a scheme to the Turkish Government for the colonization of the fertile and unoccupied tract of land lying to the east of the Jordan, now sparsely inhabited by tribes of nomad Arabs. This tract, which I myself have visited and examined, consists of the land of Gilead, and of the northern portion of the plains of Moab, which formed the former heritage of the tribes of Gad and Reuben. This country is far superior in productive capacity to the territory on the west of the Jordan, the mountains of Gilead rising to a height of upwards of 400 feet above the level of the sea, and being heavily timbered, well watered, and susceptible in the highest degree of agricultural development. They can scarcely be said to be inhabited, the plains in the south forming a lofty plateau about 2500 feet above the sea level, consisting of rich arable land, cultivated in patches by the Arabs; but with the exception of, the town of Salb Mur, there is no resident population nor landowners. The whole tract belongs to the government, which, omitting only a small sheep-tax levied on the Arabs, derives no revenue from it. The entire region proposed for colonisation comprises an area of about a million and a half acres, which would become the property of an Ottoman company, through whose agency, in conjunction with the Turkish authorities, it should be administered. . . . The fellaheen would flock over to be employed from Western Palestine, where they are in a state of extreme poverty. It is not intended, in the first instance, to utilise Jewish labor on the soil, but it is anticipated that out of 200,000 Jews in Asiatic Turkey (to say nothing of the millions in Europe), enough men of more or less capital could be found to become landlords. As an investment, farming in Palestine, when properly conducted, is most remunerative. The colony would be connected by rail with the port of Haifa, by way of the valley of the Jordan, which has a good incline in the whole way, presenting no engineering difficulties."

The same correspondent speaks of Sir A. H. Layard's cognizance of, and interest in, the scheme of Mr. Oliphant, and Lieut. Conder has since written expressing his approval of it as "founded on sound principles, and supported by able and influential men."

The Jewish Chronicle, of January 9th, devotes a leader to the scheme, which it regards as "the most feasible yet put before the world." We reproduce the substance of its remarks, as of peculiar interest. Whatever may come of this scheme, prophetic students cannot fail to be struck with several points in this Jewish avowal of faith in a coming restoration through a Messiah, who is to be "but a man of marvellous intelligence and power of influence and organization." Not the least suggestive points, perhaps, will be the confession of a preference for a scheme emanating from an "avowed freethinker;" and the foreshadowing of a welcome to any Messiah who may "come in his own name" with the appearance of plenty of worldly power at his back:—

"'Si le Messie viendra nos rassembler en Palestine' je le prierai de m'offrir l'ambassade de sa Majesté Judaïque a Paris!' It is such an observation as this, of a well-known French banker, which makes non-Jews ask us if we still seriously hope for the restoration, and, if it came, whether we should accept the position and leave the countries of our adoption. It is the old story of the Israelites returned from exile to their native land, longing for the hanging-gardens and the soft sensuous delights of Babylon. When Jeshurum waxed fat he kicked, and he wanted to remain in his well-stored manger. But there are many of the children of Jeshurum who have not waxed fat, and are lean and hungry, even as Cassius himself. The prosperous Jews form but a small portion of our brethren. Those who are comfortable and content are comparatively few. These, perhaps, would be loth to leave their assured and luxurious homes to find a new country and a new civilization. But those who are oppressed and unhappy long for the advantages which a reconsolidated nationality would give them. Oppression and persecution have kept our people, as a body, alive and homogeneous. The more the Jew is down-trodden the more he clings to the faith of his fathers and his observances. Liberated, and anxious to compete socially with his fellow-countrymen, he throws over the restrictions which are deeply respected by those whom he would conciliate by their abandonment with the simple result of making himself appear contemptible and sycophantic. It is oppression, and not prosperity, which will lead us back to our proper place in the Holy Land. It cannot be denied that at no period of our modern history have there been so many forces at work which tend directly to the Great Restoration. Signs and portents abound and the air is thick with rumors. Can these be the precursors of the event, or are they but evidence of the restless spirit of advanced civilization? Who can tell? Those who earnestly desire what is, or should be, inborn in their blood, can only wait and watch, assisting these movements to the best of their ability.

"Mr. Lawrence Oliphant's scheme contains the most feasible plan that has as yet been put before the world. At present, the matter is a purely commercial and administrative speculation; but the very practicability and non-sentimentality of its character is an assurance of its feasibility. Mr. Oliphant has, as we can avouch from personal knowledge, selected the very best spot available for the purpose (for who has not heard of the fertility of Gilead and its balms?), and has laid down conditions which contain the elements of prosperity. At present, the only requisite quality which our brethren possess, or adequately fulfil, is that of the possession of capital; and that they are asked to give, not as gift but as remunerative investment. This, to say the least of it, is a by no means judicious way of appealing to our feelings. We can place some of our proteges, our brethren in Palestine, in positions where they can be self-supporting, and teach them, at the same time, the industry which led to the rise of the nation; for, in the first instance, Hebraic prosperity took its rise in agricultural people and we shall become so again. The enormous extension of American industry and commerce has taken its origin in cultivation and farming, notably during the present year. A nation always begins by producing foodstuffs, and prospering in that, goes on to manufactures. It would be a great elevation of the Jewish character in the eyes of the world at large, could they prove themselves capable of conducting a colony, harmoniously and reputably, under the present lawless conditions of Ottoman rule. It must be a peaceful triumph worthy of the days of the Messiah, when all shall be peace. Even now, of their own accord, our brethren of Palestine are beginning to show that they appreciate the advantages to be gained from agricultural industry, as the letter of the same correspondent reporting Sir Henry Layard's conversation, which is the highest degree interesting and important, amply proves.

"Without being able to promise Mr. Oliphant our full support until we are in possession of all details of government, and of the knowledge of the individuals in whom the local government is to be vested, we can go so far as to say that, up to the present, the scheme recommends itself strongly to the consideration of all earnest and sincere Jews. We shall watch its completer development with intense interest and watchful anxiety.

"Almost coincidentally with the publication of Mr. Oliphant's plans comes the scheme of Mr. Cavalet. It seems strange, and yet most re-assuring, that two men of culture and thought have hit upon a similar scheme for the regeneration of Palestine and Syria. There are persons who think that the restoration is to be brought about by a supernatural coup de theatre, and that it cannot be accomplished without the intervention of startling and directly apparent miraculous means. The ways of Providence are inscrutable, and much that appears to us merely the result of natural evolution, may be, although not clearly visible, the silent working of the Great Power. There is no reason why all the prophecies, in which the vast majority of us devoutly believe, may not be fulfilled in an apparently natural and consequent manner. It is not our purpose to give any undue importance to Mr. Oliphant's scheme. It may be found not to hold water on close examination, but, on the other hand, it may be productive of vast and singular benefit. Mr. Oliphant is, avowedly, a free-thinker. He has no religious motives. Christianity is to him of as little consequence as Judaism. He is a likely politician with a theory to carry out and nothing more. Yet the least likely of us may be the instrument of Providence, and the least religious be guided by the hand of God. Heaven may lead a man of great intelligence, but of little faith, to become the precursor of the Messiah, who is to be, according to our belief, but a man of marvellous intelligence and power of influence and organization. Exceptionally superior qualities of mind may, not improbably, be the result of the inspiration of God. King Solomon, under whose reign only were the Jews completely united, was but a man, even endowed with human failings in the highest and most animal degree. May not the Messiah, who is to unite all mankind in the common bond of an universal method of worship of the Creator, and thus to bestow peace on the world—for the majority of wars and dissensions are the outcome of religious and political difference—be but the Strong Man, strong-minded and strong-bodied; the Cuning whom Mr. Carlyle imagined with his faulty philology, but true historical insight? Agricultural Colonies may not bring about the Restoration, but they cannot fail to benefit all who suffer from want of direction to their labors and from want of ailment. To wait for a miracle, directly visible, to assist in any work which may conduce to the great end, is to resemble children who, not strong enough to cast off parental leading strings and to assist in the Father's work, wait for Him to give them their daily bread, without doing aught to contribute, personally, to its obtention. To work and to pray is the surest means of accomplishing human aims, but to pray without work is to cast ourselves, indolently, on the mercy of him, who has put before real workers, earnest and ennobling labor. Laborare et orare."—M. W. S.

*"If the Messiah come to gather us back to Palestine, I shall ask him to offer me the post of Ambassador for his Jewish Majesty at Paris."—

Parable of the Prodigal Son.

Never certainly in human language was so much—such a world of love and wisdom and tenderness—compressed into such few immortal words. Every line, every touch of the picture is full of beautiful eternal significance. The poor boy's presumptuous claim for all that life could give him—the leaving of the old home—the journey to a far country—the brief spasm of "enjoyment" there—the mighty famine in that land—the premature exhaustion of all that could make life noble and endurable—the abysmal degradation and unutterable misery that followed—the coming to himself and recollection of all that he had left behind—the return in heart-broken penitence and deep humility—the father's far-off sight of him, and the gush of compassion and tenderness over this poor returning prodigal—the ringing joy of the whole household over him who had been loved and lost, and had now come home—the unjust jealousy and mean complaint of the elder brother, and then that close of the parable in a strain of music—"Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: for this my brother was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found"—all this is indeed a divine epitome of the wandering of man and the love of God such as no ear of man has ever heard elsewhere. Put in the one scale all that Confucius, or Sakya Mouni, or Zoroaster, or Socrates ever wrote or said—and they wrote and said many beautiful and holy words—and put in the other the parable of the Prodigal Son alone with all that this single parable means, and can any candid spirit doubt which scale would out weigh the other in eternal preciousness, in divine adaption to the wants of man.—Canon Farrar.

BREVITIES.

A Russian correspondent of L'Art gives some interesting particulars respecting the magnificent Church of our Savior at Moscow, the first stone of which was laid by the Emperor Nicholas in 1839, and which is now approaching completion. The most precious materials, such as jasper, porphyry, and malachite, have been employed in the construction of this splendid edifice, as well as the richest mosaics and carvings. No fewer than twelve bronze doors, ornamented with statues of saints, open from the four facades, each door being thirty-six feet in height, and weighing 2,000 pounds, while around the walls of the entire church are sculptured a series of bas-reliefs, with figures more than six and a half feet in height. While the exterior glows with mosaic, rich stones, and gilded cupolas, the interior, lighted by fifty-six large windows, vies with it in splendor by means of innumerable paintings, covering the whole of the walls.

THE LATE BARON ROTHSCHILD.

At one of the June meetings of the Mildmay Association of Female Workers, Mrs. D. Simpson gave an address on "Our Jewish Sisters," in the course of which she said: "A very touching incident connected with the closing weeks of Baron Rothschild's life was related to me the other evening by my fellow-worker, Miss Phillips. A friend of hers had ordered a particular hymn-book at his bookseller's, and on returning to get it the bookseller apologized for not having it ready for him. He said: 'The truth is, Baron Rothschild called and asked if I could furnish him with a book in which would be found the hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and yours was the only one that contained it, so I let him have it.' What led this aged son of Abraham to desire this hymn, we know not. It may have been a little word dropped by a Christian friend. At all events, may we not cherish the hope that his mind and heart were opening to the truth that Jesus, our blessed Jesus, is the Messiah, 'the King of the Jews,' 'the hope of Israel, and the consolation thereof?' And does not his will, bequeathing £10,000 to Jewish charities, and £5,000 to Christian charities, favor the hope?"

AN INSPIRED SCROLL.

A few days since there took place at one of the Synagogues of Baltimore the solemn reception of a copy of the "Shephar Torah," a parchment containing the five books of Moses. This sacred scroll is a present from Sir Moses Montefiore, of England, to the Jews in this city. It was written in Wilna, Russia, and the penmanship is of rare excellence, requiring a long period of time for its execution. The utmost care was taken in transcription, and at every recurrence of the name of God or Jehovah, the hands of the scribe were washed. The scroll is covered with a mantle of crimson silk velvet, richly embroidered with gold, ornamental gold fringe and surmounted with silver bells. The sacred scrolls are regarded with great reverence by orthodox Israelites, who have a tradition that a manuscript copy of the five Books has never been destroyed.

POMPEII.

Though the victims of the great eruption of Vesuvius in A. D. 79 lived so long ago they were our fellow-creatures, and it is impossible to recall their fate—especially, one might think, to recall it on the spot—without a feeling of horror. Sir William Gell estimated the number of people who perished at 1,800; but during recent excavations so many bodies have been found that it seems to have been far greater; and when we consider that, closely as the inhabitants were packed, Pompeii was still but a little place, the proportion of deaths appears large. It is, of course, satisfactory to the antiquary to reflect that the misfortunes of Pompeii have been a great gain to modern knowledge. The manners of the ancient Romans are better known to us by what has been discovered here under the ashes than by all the pictures or statues or writings existing elsewhere. The town had been very recently rebuilt, and the remains are chiefly of one period; but the decorations are remarkable for their rarity as well as for their freshness. In fact, the state of pictorial art in the first century would be almost unknown to us but for the frescoes from the house of the Tragic Poet, and the beautiful wall-paintings now in the Naples Museum.

[New York Times.]

While famine is raging in Ireland; while the civilized world, roused in her behalf, is giving her all possible assistance; while her emissaries are in this country appealing to the national benevolence; while boxes throughout the city solicit charity for a starving land—the dispatch from Rome, published the other day, that the Bishop of Kilmore and the Archbishop of Armagh had sent £850 as Peter's Pence to the Pope, must strike many hearts that have warmed toward the suffering Island with an unpleasant chill. This tribute to the Roman Pontiff has been much increased of late in Ireland. She has never been too poor—and extreme poverty has always been her normal condition—to send money to the Church, the mother beggar of all time. Peter's Pence are, like all funds contributed to the priesthood, wrung out of the poor by constant kindling of their superstitious prejudices. This is, indeed, a strange time to be extending pecuniary aid to the Pope, who simply serves as a pretext for incessant mendicancy. It is, to say the least, very impolitic just now to be sending money from Ireland, when everybody is urged to send money to Ireland to buy food. Any one might think the Irish prelates would remember that charity begins at home, particularly when charity is so eagerly solicited from foreign lands. If they have any money to spare, they should give it to the ragged, hungry, homeless wretches by whom they are surrounded, instead of dispatching it to the comfortable and pampered minions of the Vatican. This is more than robbing Paul to pay Peter, it is actually snatching bread from the mouths of the people to put gold into the purse of the Prince. We may well wonder how the Bishops can have the temerity to do this thing, under the circumstances, or how the Pope dares to receive such money. Having received it, how can he keep it? It is not only a disgrace to the name of religion, it is a disgrace to humanity. And he, the head of the so-named Eternal, Universal Church, the high priest of Christianity, the purest and loftiest exponent of goodness and charity, taking golden pounds from a famished land, to which generous souls of every nation and every creed are sending bread. What a venomous stab at charity! Truly this is stealing from starvation to enrich superstition.

[Christian Cynosure.]

In the town of Nablus, or Sechem, where Jacob bought the parcel of ground on which his well is still to be seen, there are now living about 140 descendants of the original Samaritans. The temple which was built after the captivity on the top of a mountain near Nablus has disappeared, but the old observances laid down in the Pentateuch are still kept up. A correspondent of the Methodist, who was there at the last feast of the Passover, says he saw the ceremonies carried out just as they were arranged by Moses. A few moments before sunset the congregation assembled with the Chief Priest and the elders for the sacrifice. They repeated portions of Scripture, and then seven rams were led out and examined by the High Priest to see that they were without blemishes, and exactly as the sun sank behind the sea their throats were cut. The blood of one was collected in a basin, and one of the elders, with a bunch of hyssop, marked the doors of the tents.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AKRON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Editor Restitution—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and insure its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I roll upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $4.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exception, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment: are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $4.00, and will they please give us their reasons. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Restless. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I was addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $1.00 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming Kingdom. So, farewell. ABRAHAM RESTLESS.

POETRY.

"The Time Is Short!"

BY AUTHOR OF "STEPS HEAVENWARD."

I sometimes feel the thread of life is slender,
And soon with me the labor will be wrought;
Then grows my heart to other hearts more tender.
The time is short.

A shepherd's tent of reeds and flowers decaying;
This night winds soon will crumble into nought;
So seems my life, for some rude blast decaying.
The time is short.

Up, up, my soul, the long-spent time redeeming;
Sow thou the seeds of better deed and thought;
Light other lamps, while yet thy light is beaming.
The time is short.

Think of the good thou might'st have done, when brightly
The sun to thee life's choicest seasons brought;
Hours lost to God in pleasure passing lightly.
The time is short.

The time is short. Then be thy heart a brother's
To every heart that needs thy help in aught;
Soon thou may'st need the sympathy of others.
The time is short.

If thou hast friends, give them thy best endeavor,
Thy warmest impulse and thy purest thought,
Keeping in mind, in word and action ever,
The time is short.

Where summer winds, aroma laden, hover,
Companions rest their work for ever wrought;
Soon other graves the moss and fern will cover.
The time is short.

Up, up, my soul, ere yet the shadow falleth;
Some good return to latter seasons wrought;
Forget thyself, when duty angels calleth.
The time is short.

By all the lapses thou hast been forgiven,
By all the lessons prayer to thee hath taught,
To others teach the sympathies of heaven.
The time is short.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Kingdom of God.

BY G. H. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S FIFTH QUESTION.

We learn from Psa. cx. 1, that Jesus was to ascend to the right hand of the Father and abide there till his enemies are made his footstool. From Heb. x. 12-13, and other texts that he is now occupying that position; from 1 Cor. xv. 23-28, that when he ceases to occupy that position he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father. How will you reconcile this position and these Scriptures with your idea of a personal reign of Christ over the nations here on earth?

REPLY.

I am led to believe that the difficulty existing in your mind relative to these texts, arises out of a very restricted sense which you give to the expression "sit at my right hand." Your question evidently portrays to me that you understand the Scriptures to teach,

1. That the word "sit" denotes a literal seat, absolutely so.

2. That, "at my right hand," denotes literally a relative position on the right hand of God as opposed to left hand, and,

3. That this position must be occupied, absolutely so, by Jesus till all enemies are put under his feet.

That this is the correct idea contained in these Scriptures we offer the following objections:

1. That Jesus has not occupied the sitting posture from the date of his ascension till now. For evidence,

a. Stephen saw him standing on the right hand of God. Acts vii. 55, 56.

b. Paul saw him while on the way from Jerusalem to Damascus. Acts ix. 3-5.

c. John saw him standing. Rev. v. 6.

2. That Jesus will not, and cannot occupy the sitting posture till the last enemy is destroyed, chronologically we offer,

a. When ready for the second advent he will leave the courts of heaven—or presence of the Father.

b. He will descend into the regions of the earth.

c. Then follows the shout. 1 Thess. iv. 16.

d. Next the voice of the archangel. 1 Thess. iv. 16.

e. This is followed by the trump of God. 1 Thess. iv. 16; 1 Cor. xv. 52; Rev. xi. 15.

f. Then the dead in Christ arise. 1 Thess. iv. 16-17; 1 Cor. xv. 52; Rev. xi. 18.

g. And this is followed by the shout of victory over the grave—the last enemy, to these, now vanquished.

Now if you or any reader of this article can make point seven preceds, and become the touch for point one, which you will have to do by your restricted view of the text, then I will surrender the case.

3. That the word rendered "right hand" is more liberal and general as to position, than right hand as opposed to left hand.

The Greek word in Psa. cx. 1 (Septuagint cir. 1) Dexioon the genitive plural of Dexios, is defined, "Favorably, auspiciously, prosperously, ingeniously, dextrously, cleverly."

The Greek word in your text in Heb. x. 12-13 is Dexia, nominative singular feminine of the same Dexios, and is defined by Groves—"The right hand; a pledge of honor, faith, fidelity; a bargain, agreement, covenant, promise." The Hebrew of Psa. cx. 1—Yah—men—is defined by Gesenius—"The right hand, as the pledge of good faith." Thus it is observable that the work denoted by the word can and may be carried on with the Yahvah—the coming one—the one to whom the address was issued, here on earth as well as while anywhere else as to locality.

4. The context of 1 Cor. xv. 22-28 forbids the narrow view evidently existent in your mind upon the subject. Let us investigate a little. The Apostle is treating of the resurrection.

Verse 1-4.—He calls the death, burial and resurrection of Christ fundamentally and necessarially considered: the Gospel.

Verse 5-11.—He gives the witnesses testifying to Christ's resurrection.

Verse 12-19.—He considers the resurrection negatively, giving the consequences provided Christ be not raised.

Verse 20.—He reaffirms his proposition, that Christ has risen.

Verse 21-22.—He presents Adam and Christ antithetically; death by relationship to one and life by relationship to the other.

Verse 23-24.—He gives the order in the resurrection. 1. Christ the first fruits. 2. They that are Christ's at his coming. 3. Then the end. Question:—End of what? Not the end of the kingdom, but of the resurrection, the subject under consideration in the chapter.

Now with these remarks before you, the only question of trouble that can still possibly arise is, does not the third order here spoken of in the resurrection follow too much in proximity to the second to admit of the reign of the Christ over the nations intervening? To this we reply:

That the words "afterwards" and "then," are virtually from the same Greek word. Then is from Eita, and afterwards is from the same word with the preposition epi prefixed, which preposition simply means on upon. Further the two words eita and epeita are defined by all Lexicons the same. Now if the word in the first case spans the time 1800 years and more between the first and second orders, may it not mark a long interregnum in the second? Let inspiration settle this question. Then to the testimony.

The Revelation, after describing the first resurrection and the position of those who have a part therein, in Rev. xx. 1-4—says in verse 5, "But the rest of the dead—as seen xiv. 13—live not again until the thousand years were finished." Therefore the difficulty is removed, and intervening the second and third order in the resurrection inspiration places the reign of the Christ over the nations for their subjugation and conversion.

One more remark on the text before we dismiss it. It is, that the deliverance of the kingdom from the Son to the Father as indicated in 1 Cor xv. 23-28 cannot be in the sense of absolute abdication. My reasons for this is,

1. That the Hebrew word Gad—rendered "until" in the phrase—"Sit at my right hand until I shall set thy enemies a stool at thy feet," Psa. cx. 1, does not restrict the word "sit," simply to the accomplishment of the work here described, but looks even beyond this for its complement. On the use of this word as thus described see Gesenius, page 761—"The sacred writers have not in all places assigned the extreme limit, (of the word God), but a nearer one, without intending however to exclude at all the time beyond. When a person setting off on a journey says to a friend: farewell till we meet again! he now thinks indeed chiefly on this nearer term, although he also wishes his friend to "farewell" in like manner after his return. These remarks apply to passages like Psa. cx. 1; cxii. 8; Dan. i. 21; Gen. xxviii. 15; 1 Tim. iv. 12."

2. That while the millennial period appears to be but one period or age, and that somewhat definite—see Rev. xx. 2-7, Christ's reign over the house of Jacob is expressed as to duration by eis tons aiooas—during the ages.

3. That of the duration of his kingdom it is said in Psa. cxiv. 13—"Good is Yahvah (the coming one) to the all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. Shall give thee thanks, O Yahvah (the coming one) all thy works and thy saints shall bless thee. To make known to the sons of men his mights, and the glory of the majesty of his kingdom. Thy kingdom is a kingdom of all eternities"—(Hagster's interlinear of the Psalms). The word eternities here is from the Hebrew word—Golaim—plural which does not mean one age, but a hidden number of ages—a succession of ages—all ages to come.

4. That absolute abdication seems to be in conflict with Dan. vii. 18. "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even for ever and ever." Standing connected with and at the head of this host is Jesus of Nazareth; and all taken together as one body they are the seed of the woman, to crush the serpent's head, Gen. iii. 15; and the seed of Abraham to bless the nations. Gal. iii. 16, 27-29. Rotherham, after discussing the words Golam and God and their combinations says of the expression—"Golam of God-ans" To the previous combination (referring to some former remarks) it might have seemed unlikely that anything could be added. What more could our weak minds desire than the ages of perpetuity? Extensively—nothing: intensively—one thing remained, namely, to characterize the ages to come as better in quality than the ages that are past. And this it was possible to do. Just as the holy of holies was the holiest, the best, the most beautiful, faultful, and precious of all the holy places of Israel, so it was possible to relate the ages to come with those gone by in the way of supereminency of character. The ages of perpetuity, which may be summed up as the perpetual age, will be in every sense the supreme age. That age will justify the ruler, realize the hopes, garner the fruits of all past ages. It will glorify the age-abiding God, who emphatically dwells in perpetuity. Isa. lvii. 15.

Example—Dan. vii. 18, "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom "unto" (during) the golam, even unto (during) the golam of golams."

5. Absolute abdication conflicts with Luke i. 33, which says: "And of his kingdom there shall be no end."

(To be Continued.)

Practical Christianity.

Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. 2 Cor. vii. 1.

What promises (reference) read from the 14th to the 17th as a command, or advice, or exhortation upon obedience to and a faithful performance of the things enjoined. The promises are that God will be a Father to such, and they shall be the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Verse 18. Great and astounding is the thought that the eternal One, the Creator and upholder of all things, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ the Savior and Redeemer of the lost and ruined race of Adam, should offer and guarantee to become our Father upon our becoming obedient to his law.

The possession of the promised inheritance, the gift of eternal life, and the perpetuity of the race of Adam is based upon and centers in our strict obedience to God's holy law. Christ kept the law, magnified it, and made it honorable; he was made perfect through suffering. Yea more, he become the Son of God with power by the Spirit of holiness through a resurrection from the dead. Rom. i. Will less be required of the members of his body? I trow not. Having taken our first lesson in Bible Christianity, and performed our first duty instead of going on to perfection, we settle down upon our lees, or switch off on some side issue or crotchet, and forget that we are to live a holy, godly Christian life, and by so doing perform the command in our text.

The process of cleansing is to be performed by strictly living out by our practice of the things which Christ has ordained and commanded; to substitute anything else, or live by any other rule is a fatal mistake, and will result in irreparable loss. How full of meaning those precious words. If any man is in Christ he is a new creature (or new creation), old things are passed away; all things become new. But what of him or her who bears the word of the kingdom, believes it, and performs the first act of obedience, witnesses a good confession before men by putting on Christ in baptism, but brings along with him his old sinful habits and Gentile practice? Here is the fatal rock on which many have made shipwreck of faith and are floundering in Bunyan's quagmire or slough of despond. The sum total of Bible teaching is after we have laid the foundation on the rock Christ Jesus, the chief corner-stone, we go on to perfection.

Our text reads, "Let us (in the plural) cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and the Spirit." Did Paul need to use the cleansing process? Yes, and every other mortal man, until this mortal shall put on immortality. Hear him, "I keep my body under and bring it into subjection, lest after I have preached to others I become a castaway."

We can readily understand what is meant by filthiness of the flesh, but not so easily that of the Spirit. A man may be spiritually minded and not be a perfect holy being. The habits and practices of the old man of the flesh cling to us with the tenacity of the death grasp. There is no absolute perfection this side the coming of Christ and the resurrection, and translation of the just; its a warfare, and while it lasts there is an enemy to be fought and overcome, and nothing short of the grace of God, the assistance of the Holy Spirit and the precious cleansing blood of the atoning Lamb of God which takes away the sin of the world can accomplish the work is only begun when we put on Christ and are in him; the foundation is laid, our superstruction must be built, the material of the best quality purified, made white and tried. How many are building with hay, wood and stubble, whose works will be burned up, etc.

We will itemize and name some things that are forbidden by the word of God; we begin with, "Let your words be few and well chosen, be sure ready to hear than to speak; be still and know that I am God; by thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words shalt thou be condemned; for every idle word that men shall speak they shall account thereof in the day of judgment—fearful words of burning truth." In the violation of these beautiful texts of Scripture lies our besetting sin.

It is said of the Indians they are inveterate haters of too much talk. It is also said of poor Meeker, the Indian agent, that he was killed and his tongue cut out by the roots because he talked too much. So keen are our sensibilities, and so sharp the reproofs of a faithful conscience we cry out with Paul, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death, and with sinking Peter? Lord save, or I perish!" Another sin—and it is one of the crying sins of the age—is dishonesty in business. So deep and fearful are the inroads upon the whole body politic that even enlightened believers of the Gospel are ready to practice and apologize for it for the sake of gain. But with this as with all other sins, the word of God is very clear and positive in condemnation of the practice. Gentile custom and practice are strictly forbidden by the word and law of God, where they contravene the law of God, and no excuse or special pleading will avail us when we stand before the judgment seat of Christ. The conscience may by practice in wrong doing become seared as with a hot iron, yet it is a faithful monitor and will arouse up like an armed man.

Another crying sin of this age is covetousness. This is idolatry so says the word and is named as one of the sins that will shut us out of the kingdom of God. The sin of covetousness among the Gentiles or even the sects is a common thing, but its practice by members of the body, and especially those of the Abrahamic faith, when we profess to be looking for the coming of Christ at any moment, to take away his saints to the aerial, to the marriage supper of the Lamb is a strange thing indeed. The covetous practice of getting and hoarding up money against a rainy day by the professed members of the body of Christ is a crying sin, and a fearful stumbling block in the way of poor perishing mortals. Can it be possible that he or she is of sane mind who will grasp every dollar and invest in bonds or bank stock? How often has it been said to the writer that men do not believe what they preach? The Gentiles are not all fools, they judge correctly when they ask, "What is he going to do with his gold and greenbacks,—and scoffingly add—is he going to take it it with him when he goes?" Oh, the folly of sinners!

Once more and we must close this article. A crying sin in the Church of God is the use of tobacco. This we have prayed and wept over, and talked against, but to little use. We have but little faith that anything we can write will cause to our brethren to look at this crying sin and filthy habit in its true light. Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience and our bodies washed in pure water. Here the cleansing process is clearly taught. Again Paul says, "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of the Holy Spirit; he that defileth the temple of God, him will God destroy." How fearful this language; what more effectual means can a man or a woman take to defile the temple of God than the beastly practice of the use of the filthy weed. My dearly beloved brethren in the faith, especially in the mountains of North Carolina, suffer the word of exhortation and admonition. God's kingdom is a holy kingdom; nothing will enter that kingdom that defileth or loveth or maketh a lie. I have not words at my command to express the feelings of my poor, bleeding, lacerated heart over my own and my brethrens' shortcomings and imperfections. "Behold, I come quickly to reward every man as his work shall be."

To be continued—one more short article on the last clause of the text perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

NEWELL HOND.

Man's Relation to Immortality.

When viewed in the light of the Bible, the relation man sustains to immortality, is a beautiful illustration of the wisdom of God. But, if viewed from the so-called orthodox standpoint serious questions arise that have never yet been answered. Think for one moment, how questionable is the wisdom of a being who of his own almighty power would create beings, and impart to them a nature that must necessarily continue their existence through endless ages, whether that existence gives them continuous pleasure or ceaseless pain. No wonder that serious misgivings have taken possession of those who have attempted to reconcile such acts with infinite wisdom. We are not surprised at the remarks of Barnes, when after having declared that a large portion of the race would be doomed by virtue of their immortal nature to suffer endless misery. "That in whatever direction I turn for a reason, for such a course, all is dark, dark, dark!" We can see the wisdom of a human government, in demanding the death of its subjects when capital crimes have been committed. We can see not only wisdom, but mercy displayed, when some poor, suffering creature is deprived of life to end its misery.

We can see the grandest display of the wisdom of the Creator of all organized beings in so constituting them, that, although susceptible of pain, when any part of their organization is injured, yet, the pain thus suffered, serves an excellent purpose for it admonishes them, that unless the injury ceases the organization must perish. But some times the pain will be suffered when no such useful purpose will be answered, as in the case of a vessel's crew cast into the water in mid-ocean, here the pain endured would, if continued, be only a constant misery, here the wisdom of the author of that law is shown in the fact, that after a brief period of suffering death ends the pain by rendering the organization unconscious. Or a crew of a shipwrecked vessel are thrown upon a desert island, when after a little while the pangs of hunger seize them, and while the proper function of hunger is to admonish the system to take food to sustain the organization, in this case it can answer no such good purpose, and indefinite prolonging such pain without the means of ending it, would be simply cruelty, but after a short period of pain death paralyzes the system, and thus ends its terrible suffering.

Think of the horrors of a ships crew thus situated, if death could never come to their relief, to sink and struggle, and gasp and suffer, madly clutching each other in their frantic efforts to escape, but doomed to thus suffer eternally. Who could admire a being capable of such cruelty? Or picture the scene upon the desert island where the famished crew are suffering the burning pangs of thirst without a drop of water to allay its fierce pains, where the famished mother looks with dry, stony eyes upon the hunger-smitten babe as it piteously begs for a morsel of food, but no food to hush its famishing cries. With what pleasure we turn from the contemplation of these imaginary scenes, and thank God that he is not the author of a system that would entail such cruelty upon his creatures. And can we not see wisdom in the arrangement that the duration of wicked beings upon the earth is so limited? Without this, what would society become, if, with it wickedness flourishes as at present? May we not rejoice that a wise lawgiver has declared "that bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days!" Think of the fearful consequences to society if those frightful monsters, whose bloody deeds history records, had been permitted to live for centuries to curse society with their fiendishly cruel acts. Think of a Nero or Caligula or England's famous "bloody queen" continuing to hold the scepter dripping with blood, and as the measured centuries roll over the reign of these monsters in crime, becoming more and more cruel and oppressive. From the foregoing reasons I must conclude that God did not commit the great error of giving man endless life, as it would as likely result in perpetuating his misery as his happiness.

Wisdom would seem to dictate that man's fitness for endless existence should be demonstrated by a fair trial, and if found unworthy, justice to the individual would demand that his existence should cease, for to continue his life as a sinful, suffering being could not possibly be a blessing to him, and certainly it would be no advantage to others, therefore, it ceases to be.

Life is conditional, we shall find it so stated in the history of the race. Immediately after man's creation, he was placed upon trial, a simple test was given to prove his fitness for the position to which he was to be assigned. What that would have been, is thus shown in a negative manner. Having developed by disobedience a character opposite of that required in the test, we should expect a sentence that would end his life. In accordance with this sentence declaring "dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return," this is just what was meant in the penalty, "thou shalt surely die." The arrangement for perpetuating man's existence shows most conclusively that a disobedient being will not be permitted to enjoy endless life. For after he had disobeyed the voice of his Creator, he is thus addressed, "Now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever, therefore, the Lord God sent him forth to till the ground from whence he was taken."

Thus the first of the race was by his disobedience doomed to die. And that the penalty thus incurred might not be escaped or evoked, all access to the tree of life was cut off, thus rendering all escape of hope impossible. And to put the matter beyond all doubt the record of the transaction says, "All the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years and he died." Thus through the wisdom of God was averted the fearful consequences of eternally perpetuating the life of a sinful being. Why not learn wisdom from this? If God decided thus the case of the first sinner, he will in like manner dispose of all other sinners. To argue otherwise is to call in question the wisdom of God. Infinite wisdom selects the best plan, therefore no second plan will ever be substituted for that which the unerring judgment of God selected in the beginning of the history of the race. Earth's dominion was offered to the first Adam, but his right was forfeited through disobedience, the future dominion of earth will only be entrusted to rulers who have shown themselves worthy of the position by a full compliance with the test of character, which is simply obedience to the Lord's commandments. In Adam's case the test was very simple, in our case it is certainly not complicated, two words express it all, faith and obedience. Faith is simply belief of certain facts plainly stated, obedience is simply compliance with a few plainly stated commands. If endless life and all its glorious accompaniments can be thus easily obtained, why should any who can become intelligently acquainted with God's plan, be willing to forfeit all through lack of faith and obedience?

God's plan of salvation has one feature that is pre-eminently Darwinian, (i e) it contemplates "the survival of the fittest." While all past ages with the present have had a sad intermingling of good and bad that glorious age when consummated will be an age of righteousness," thy people also shall be all righteous." Oh what a select company this is that the prophet sees. Peter speaking of the same age says it is the "New heavens and earth in which dwelleth righteousness." And the wise man declares "the righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." And finally it is declared in the glorious vision of the future as seen by the revelator, "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the city."

"Oh how sweet it will be in that beautiful land
So free from all sorrow and pain,
With songs on our lips and with harps in our hands,
To meet one another again."

Oh brother or sister suffer the word of exhortation, yes, and exhort one another. Our position is truly sublime, standing upon the crumbling sands of this eventful age, just upon the eve of the most stupendous events in human history, strange and significant events transpiring around us, infidelity waging her boldest war against God's word: A grand revolution in society just at hand, and soon the King in his beauty will come. Now the thrilling question: "What manner of persons ought we to be?" O yes, put the question closer home, "What manner of persons are we?" "Be ye therefore ready." Amen.

The British Museum has recently purchased about one thousand terra cotta tablets, with inscriptions referring to the history of Babylon. Among them there is a tablet mentioning King Sampsi-Iva, hitherto unknown, and who probably was one of the sovereigns intermediary between Cambyses and Darius. A fragment of another of these tablets contains the design of one of the gates of Babylon.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Real "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Coming Age.—Its Proximity.—The Four Monarchies Continued.—Supplementary Remarks on the Metallic Image.—Four Beasts of Dan. vii. No. 9.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Metallic Image:—Supplementary to what we presented in our previous exposition of the image we give the following, noting some points also in review:—

1. The image of Dan. ii. 31-44, is not an actor; it does nothing; it simply denotes being-organization, but not life; the qualities of beings, and not their actions.

2. The metals are five; four pure, viz: gold, silver, brass and iron; one is an impure metal—the clay having the metal aluminum for its base. These five symbols represent four kingdoms and only four. The brass, the English translation of the Hebrew word נְחֹשֶׁת (nekh-o'-sheth), Chaldee נְחָשָׁא (nekh-a'-shaw), brass or copper) which we are inclined to believe means copper. Brass is an alloy of copper and zinc (anciently of copper and tin) still the pure metal seems to be intended. The point, however, is not material—since it simply represents one kingdom.

3. The gold, the silver and the brass are symbols of three kingdoms, succeeding each other in the order named: "Thou art this head of gold," Dan. ii. 38, second "kingdom inferior to thee" vs. 39, "Another third kingdom of brass," vs. 39, Greco-Macedonian empire. No use is made of the arms—though the silver represents an empire composed of two nations (Medes and Persians) united in one, Daniel's interpretation leaves out the arms.

The Greek, or empire of brass, after the death of Alexander, the Great was divided into four kingdoms. This division, however, has no symbol in the image (though seen in Dan. viii. 8) The belly and thighs symbolize the Greek undivided empire, though the thighs (two perhaps) are included. They have, therefore, no special symbolic meaning. The third, or Greek empire completes the image to its legs (how many? the interpretation does not say). These three kingdoms had given way to the fourth or iron before the birth of Christ.

4. Fourth, or iron kingdom.—As the fourth evidently exists till the stone (Christ) smites the image, which event is still in the future, we now have a location somewhere in the fourth and final division of the image. We may divide the symbols of the fourth, or Roman kingdom into two parts,—1st the pure iron, vs. 40. Strength was its specific feature; "4th, kingdom shall be strong as iron," v. 40. 2d the iron-clay division. Partly strong (iron) and partly broken (clay). We are now ready to examine what features of the Roman empire are not symbolized in the iron, and the iron and clay and what are represented.

Features not symbolized:—1st, its eastern and western divisions. This division was completed under Constantine, the Great, at the close of the first quarter of the 4th century. The Roman monarchy was a unit during its first three centuries. It was then, in character, what Daniel saw and described in vs. 41. "And the fourth kingdom (not kingdoms nor divisions) shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh to pieces and subdueth all (things): and as iron breaketh these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. "The symbol of the empire during this period, was—the 'legs (not one leg) of iron;"—A unity of power, not a duality, nor a trinity.

Now, if the number of the legs means any thing, who will tell us how many there were (since Daniel has not seen fit to inform us). He says "legs" whether two, ten, or a hundred, it matters not; it had enough (perhaps) to stand on. If they symbolize divisions of the empire, each leg representing a division, the divisions denoted by the legs appear 300 years too early in the history of that monarchy since the division was not till the days of Constantine. If the legs symbolize divisions why not the arms, and the thighs? (vs. 33). If the thighs represent unity, why not the legs also? Daniel says, "This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king." vs. 36. We have always understood the interpretation to be full and complete. His interpretation of the head makes it a unity, though the head is composed of a plurality of members, there is one head—a symbol of one kingdom. The interpretation of the breast and arms makes another unity, another kingdom, not kingdoms, though two kingdoms, (the Medes and Persians) were the elements of this dynasty, the unity alone, the second inferior kingdom is symbolized. This division is recognized in a subsequent vision, (Dan. viii. 3. Daniel's interpretation of the belly and thighs of brass, presents a third unity—a third kingdom, (not kingdoms) of brass: though the Greco-Macedonian empire was composed of two people, having two governments, viz: Greco proper and the Macedonians. It had as many thighs as legs; still the unity alone is symbolic.

The interpretation of the remainder of the image brings to view a fourth unity and only a fourth: "And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron," vs. 40. Daniel's interpretation contains only four unities:—Four kingdoms extending from Nebuchadnezzar to the second coming of the Son of God,—the stone, vs. 34 and 44.

If the legs then, symbolize a unity, so do the feet, and also the toes. The four great unities, the four monarchies should be constantly kept in view while investigating the symbols of the metallic image. The two divisions into eastern and western empires, and into ten kingdoms, are true in history, and distinctly seen in other visions, but do not belong to this vision, neither are they here interpreted.

2. Does the interpretation of Daniel recognize any division in the kingdom? We answer in the affirmative. What kind of division? A division of weakness and not of its unity. What is the symbol of the element of weakness? Ans. Potter's clay. "And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes part of potter's clay and part of iron; the kingdom shall be divided, but there shall be in it of the strength of iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And (as) the toes of the feet (were) part of iron and part of clay; so the kingdom (singular) shall be partly strong and partly broken, (brittle). And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another (this with this) even as iron is not mixed with clay, vs. 41, 42, 43. As clay divides iron, by mixing with it, and weakens it, so the people symbolized by the potter's clay by mingling with the kingdom, or iron race (Romans) would weaken that power. The mingling of the barbarians, fully satisfies the condition of the symbols.

3. Do the four monarchies still exist? Not in dominion or as universal empires. Dominion, or earth's diadem was to be transferable, and progressive. "After thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, and the fourth kingdom as strong as iron," verses 39 and 40. The dominion will be found in the iron clay mixture of the fourth kingdom. Though governments still exist on the territory of the image.

4. Does the fourth empire now exist in its dominating power? Is there now a mixed Roman empire? Are there two races mixed? Such a domination has existed, and is still in being, viz: The Romano-German empire. This has been the reigning mixture since A. D. 800. Germany is the mother of the western European nations: the kine which fills the old Roman world with its swarms.

The crowns on the head of that mixed family,—that iron clay dynasty that must soon abdicate in favor of Christ the King of Kings. We are now living under the last days of the mixed empire. God, in the triumph of his power, has long since overthrown the Supreme rule of three of these monarchies. The diadem will soon be placed upon him whose right will be undisputed.

The four monarchies of Dan. vii. 2-28. We are here introduced to a new class of symbols; living animals, symbolic of life and action. It is a night scene, a night at sea; a stormy night. Such as make tremble the brave-hearted. Tempestous clouds, gathering angry blackness, accumulate. The four winds rush down from the heavens and the waters are made the seat of conflict. As Daniel gazes upon the seething caldron four beasts rise up out of the sea unlike in shape and action.

"The first (was) like a lion, and had eagles' wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made to stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.

The lion, and head of gold symbolize the same kingdom, the empire of Babylon, the gold its wealth, the lion as a living agent. Eagle's wings denote rapid conquests as under Nebuchadnezzar. Winged lions were a national symbol of the Chaldean empire. The wings being plucked denoted the humiliation of that empire under Belshazzar by the Medes and Persians. It was deprived of its strength and courage.

1. Second beast. "And, behold another beast, a second like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side, and (it had) three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it, and they said thus unto it: 'Arise, devour much flesh.' The beast, a national emblem of Persia. It was most voracious of all beasts. The ... becoming powerful by the aid of Persia. Its devouring nature is denoted by the three ribs (Babylon-Lydia and Egypt) in its mouth. Medo-Persia, the breast and arms of silver is here symbolized by the bear.

It was an empire inferior in riches to Babylon, but more cruel and bloodthirsty. 3. Third beast:—"After this I beheld, and, lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl (bird); the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it;" vs. 6. The Greek, brass, and Leopard empires are the same kingdoms. The leopard, being crafty and deceitful fitly denoted the Grecian empire. The four wings symbolized its rapid movements under Alexander, the Great, and the four heads the four ruling dynasties out of the Grecian empire after the death of Alexander. These three empires lost their dominion before the birth of Christ.

The fourth beast:—"After this I saw in the night visions, and, behold, a fourth beast, dreadful, and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it (was) diverse from all the beasts that (were) before it; and it had ten horns. I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn (were) eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things.

I beheld till the thrones (of judgment) were cast down (placed), and the Ancient of days did sit (as a judge) whose garments (was) white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne the fiery flame, his wheels burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened.

I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake, I beheld till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flames. As concerning the other beasts (the three) they had their dominion taken away yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time.

I saw in the night visions, and, behold, (one) like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom (that) which shall not be destroyed.

I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of (my) body, and the visions of my head troubled me. I came near unto one of them that stood by, and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me to know the interpretation of the things."

Angel's interpretation:—His general explanation, is very brief:—These great beasts, which are four, (are) four kings (kingdoms) (which) shall arise out of the earth. But the Saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever.

This epitome of history requires our undivided attention. We, like Daniel, would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the other beasts: the one under which our blessed Redeemer was incarnated, suffered, died, was buried, arose, and ascended, and sat down on the right hand of the Divine Majesty; that Gentile kingdom out of which has been, and is being taken a people for his name;—the great persecutor of the sanctified—the general assembly and church of the first born whose names are written in heaven; that monarchy which Jesus, at his glorious epiphany, shall conquer and from which he shall take the diadem of the whole earth.

"My Word Shall not Return Unto me Void."—Isa. lv. 11.

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill; for verily I say unto you, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Matt. v. 17, 18.

"And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail." Luke xvi. 17.

"Of old hast thou laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens: the work of thy hands. They shall perish but thou shalt endure; (stand, margin), yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed." Psa. cii. 25, 26.

"And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll." Isa. xxxiv. 4.

"Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment." Isa. li. 6.

"I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts and in the day of his fierce anger." Isa. xiii. 13.

"The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage." Isa. xxiv. 20.

"Yet once more I shake not earth only but also heaven." Heb. xii. 26.

"The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which (day) (italics mine) the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Nevertheless we, according to his promise look for a new heavens and a new earth." 2 Pet. iii. 10, 13.

"For behold I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind." Isa. lxv. 17.

"I am the Lord thy God that divided (the sea whose waves roared; the Lord of hosts, or Jehovah (the existing one; new translation Young) is his name. I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth." Isa. li. 15, 16.

"I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." From these words have been derived many meanings to suit the mind and purpose of the expositor, but to me they have but one meaning, and that one, I think, to be in harmony with the Scripture.

1. Did the Anointed One—Christ—fulfil all that had been spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets, when he was made manifest in the flesh being born of a virgin, and, after fulfilling his office of prophet was led as a lamb to the slaughter, or did he only fulfil it in part? If he did fulfil all at that time, then there is to be no King to set on David's throne, for no throne was given him in Cesar's kingdom, and, hence, the Scriptures are broken, but not one jot, nor tittle, shall pass until all be fulfilled; hence I understand that every prophecy in the Old Testament Scriptures must be fulfilled to the letter, and the argument that those promises were made to the Jews and because the Jews disobeyed they could not be fulfilled, must fall to the ground.

Christ came to fulfil the law. We do not understand by that, that the event of his coming fulfilled the law; but, that, having come, he began to fulfil the law which no man prior to him had been able to do. He died, overcame death, rose again, and is alive forevermore and ascended to God's throne, and is become our High Priest in the holy of holies, perfecting the law and fulfilling all things until the times of restitution, when he will come again to complete the work he has never ceased from accomplishing since the world began; and when he comes again, all things spoken, will be fulfilled and every promise in the word of God shall be consummated; there shall no word return unto him void, for he will do all his pleasure. The Scriptures are God's purposes written out, and the parts remaining to be fulfilled will, in the main, be accomplished after our Lord's return, when he comes as King, for the time is at hand, it hasteneth greatly, and, in the end, the vision will speak and not lie; and the time is come for it to speak. From 1880 to 1886 covers the cycle of time based upon the Bible figures by the servants of God on all the earth for the completion of the vision. Ho, for the morning thy King cometh! The day star will quickly arise; and may our lamps be trimmed and burning, and our vessels full of oil, is the prayer of your brother in the faith, and slave of Jesus Christ.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—Our Brother Magruder having called the attention of the brethren to Cleveland in his recent letters of travel, it seems but right we should say the church in Cleveland did much enjoy the discourses and social conversations of Brother Magruder. We had long felt as though we were acquainted with him through the pages of THE RESTITUTION, and when we saw him in our midst and heard his voice, we still felt so, with one exception, for myself, at least, I had imagined him to be a strong (I judged from his writings) man of about forty years of age. Instead of which he is crowding on towards three score and ten! In this I felt disappointed, as he is drawing so near the close of his labors, and we cannot expect many so welcome visits from him. Oh, that the King would soon come!

I have an item of news for which you and the brethren, generally, will join with us in rejoicing. We have recently added to our number two very intelligent brethren; one a young German brother from the German Baptists. His attention having been called to the gospel of the kingdom and immortality through Jesus the Christ, he gave the matter such an investigation as but few can give. He left no stone unturned, and, after being thoroughly satisfied he had found the truth, he obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine, etc. I anticipate a life of usefulness. He is a good German scholar, and, though not as yet very fluent as a speaker in English, he understands what others say, and will fast improve in English speaking. The other is an elderly brother who came some years since from the Isle of Man. He was very active in the ranks of the "Disciples." Having a small printing press, he employed his spare time in printing and giving away tracts advocating their doctrine, but coming in contact with us, he learned the way of God more perfectly, and obeyed it! Having once stood where he did, and having been baptized by the same person in the old country, we could sympathize with each other. Suffice it to say he has some tracts formerly printed he has no use for now! But is now printing different ones, a sample of which I enclose. Thanks and glory to God.

One more item. Brother Stephenson, and others, who have visited Cleveland, will remember that we met in Beck's Hall, and that extra meetings were costly to us, and as most of our number do not abound in this world's goods we could not do much in the way of having extra meetings. Well, the brethren have now rented a chapel formerly occupied by Universalists, where, henceforth, we expect to hold one meeting Sunday morning and evenings, and as often as we please, with no additional costs, except light and fuel. It is situated on Linden street, near Woodland avenue, where we shall be happy to greet any brother who may be passing this way.

Ever yours, in the one glorious hope.

GEO. ELTON.

Cleveland, O.

The following is the tract sent by Brother Elton:

THE KINGDOM OF GOD, WHAT IS IT?

Jesus said, seek that the kingdom of God and his righteousness! What did he mean? He taught his disciples to pray, thy kingdom come. Has it come, and is it here? If so where is it? Jesus preached it, sent the twelve to preach it, and the seventy, and said, this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world (before his death, and for some time after it was preached to Jews only) for a witness, or testimony unto all nations, and then shall the end come. Matt. xxiv. 14. The disciples understood him to mean that the kingdom of Israel should be restored, and while they held this view Jesus sent them to preach—and they would certainly preach as they understood. Now, did they rightly understand it? It is often said they did not, but Jesus said, to you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; and blessed are your eyes for they see, and your ears for they hear. Matt. xiii. And the last question they asked him was, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? Did Jesus tell them they were wrong? Nay, verily; but only they were not to know the times and seasons. Acts i. 6, 7. But they continued to preach the kingdom of God. And when they (the people) believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. Acts viii. 12. Paul preached the kingdom of God, (Acts xx. 25. He dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. Acts xxviii. 23-31. How important to know what is meant by the kingdom of God. Now is it yet come, or shall we still pray thy kingdom come? If it were come, would not God's will be done on earth as it is in heaven? Is it so done?

It is proposed to show that God's kingdom will have locality—territory—a King!—rulers—subjects—laws—a capital or seat of government and a time of beginning.

All are cordially invited to meetings held every First Day, in the Chapel, Linden street, near Woodland, in the morning at half past ten; in the evening at seven. Seats free, and no collections.

[N. Y. Witness.]

Is Russia to go Through a Reign of Terror?

The Nihilists have announced a still more appalling threat than that which preceded the attempted wholesale destruction of the Emperor Alexander and his attendants at Moscow, or than that which was purposed by the explosion at the winter palace in St. Petersburg. With a hideous irony, the Nihilists have just informed the governor-general of St. Petersburg, the chief of the imperial police, and the prefect of the municipal police by circular letter, that it is altogether unnecessary to go on with the elaborate preparations for the illumination of the city on the evening of the anniversary of the Czar's accession, as it will be eclipsed by a greater blaze. The city itself is to be burned. The circulars sent to the above officials may have one of two objects or both: first, to terrify the Czar into abating his severity against political offenders, and granting some reasonable reforms; and second, to serve as a warning to the inhabitants who might otherwise be destroyed by the thousand if the Nihilists carried their promise into execution unexpectedly. One can hardly regard the threat as an idle boast, as hitherto the Nihilists have done their best to make their words good after fashions which have sent thrills of horror throughout the civilized world. True the capital is as thoroughly guarded as the Emperor and his conditions can guard it. But there are fears, apparently well-grounded, that neither the army nor the police can be relied upon. If the Nihilists should actually set fire to the city, it will not improbably be the beginning of a reign of terror on a more tremendous scale than that which abruptly ended the old system of things in France.

...ESTITUTION.

...CHAPLIN, Editor.

...OUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 19, 1890.

...WILL give an interesting letter next week from the Age to Come Herald, written lately from Jerusalem.

WE direct the attention of our brethren and friends to the advertisement of Hymns of the Advent. This collection contains 385 selected Sacred songs as well as a choice selection of tunes, and, on this latter account, is admirably calculated to become a supplementary companion to the Psalmodist. To the notice of Brother Stephenson's Review of Col. Ingersoll's Lecture—Miracles of Moses—we also call attention.

HALSEY, OR., Feb. 23, 1890.

To the Brethren of The Restitution:

The undersigned do most humbly ask a hearing in the paper in regard to stirring investigation on Bible subjects, for we think that is the object of maintaining a paper that it may be our teacher, and the well-informed may be our preacher. Controverted points surely ought to be investigated in a brotherly manner; if we close out on one point, we may, with just propriety, on another. Surely it must be of great importance to know if all are to have a resurrection or only a part. We have taken the paper for more than ten years, and would like for it to live and be open for free investigation of all controverted points; we want to learn all the Bible teaches.

In the conversation between Bro. Magruder and the celebrated Moody it was easily to be seen he was opposed to investigation. With all of his widespread fame as a pulpit orator he knows but little of the true teaching of the Bible. We hope the brethren will bear with each other and let it be resumed in due time, but have the amount limited—not over three columns at one time. Kindly submitted,

JAMES H. BRAMWELL.
JOS H. SAMP.
F. M. MORGAN.

In accordance with the wish expressed by our brethren in the above letter and some others, and as Bro. Magruder and Bro. Simonds sent some articles on the resurrection question, while the discussion was in progress; and as publishing these articles would only place them on equality with some others who were granted room for a full statement of their views on portions of Scripture upon which the brethren above named have not expressed themselves, we have concluded to give these articles a place. As the four parties concerned will then have had the opportunity to go over the entire ground, we hope all will feel satisfied to let this particular discussion rest awhile. For ourself, ...will keep silent on the question ...gh holding to quite a general resurrection of the dead in certain orders. The articles will number only three or four. Bro. Magruder's article next ...

We have taken the following article from the Appeal, a paper published in the interests of the Reformed Episcopal Church. The writer evidently has a clearer apprehension of the plan of redemption than many who have ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. He correctly distinguishes between the gradations of life, as manifested in its higher and lower forms, in the wonderful scale of being connected with this world. Life, in its lowest form, separates the organic from the inorganic; life combined with sensation is higher in the scale; life, sensation, and intelligence, higher still; life, sensation, intelligence, and the moral perception ...; but there is a diviner ... beyond all these. Beyond vegetable life in the plant, beyond animal life in the beast, beyond soulual life in man, is the spiritual life in the redeemed.

Man, by nature, has only the soul-life. This, as derived from Adam, was given him by the Creator, was forfeited by sin, and goes under the power of death, like all the lower forms of mere animal life. Spiritual life is from God through Christ, is attainable only through the economy of redemption, and is never actually in the possession of any one till a veritable re-quencis shall be experienced through a resurrection from the dead. Soul-life belongs to the earthly family of the first Adam, who was made only a living soul, while Spirit-life belongs to the family of the last Adam, who was made a life-giving Spirit. By natural birth we come into the earthly family, and inherit soul-life; by being born again, at the resurrection, we come into the heavenly family, and inherit the Spirit-life of its Divine Head, the Lord from heaven, who is the Author or Prince of life. Acts iii. 15. To this heavenly family alone belong the attributes of immortality and incorruptibility as partakers of the Divine nature. 1 Cor. xv. 50-54; 2 Peter i. 4.

God has been investing that wonderful mystery, life, with higher, and still higher forms, from the remotest paleontological commencement of existence, and the end is not reached in the earthly man. He, that sits upon the throne, will make all things new. A re-genesis awaits the earth, and a new birth, the child of God.

We look for a new heaven and a new earth, and we expect through being born again, to wear the image of the heavenly and become heirs of the kingdom. May the writer of the article, who sees men as trees walking, by another touch of the Divine hand be brought to see all things clearly.

BORN FROM ABOVE.

Nicodemus was a good man but by being good or even becoming better he was not a member of God's Kingdom. He must be "born" and "from above." Something must be introduced and added to his natural self to lift him to the grade of a member of God's Kingdom.

Looking at the world about us we perceive that all things are graded from the lowest up to man. At the bottom, and forming the substratum upon which all else is built, is the world of inorganic matter. Stepping higher we come upon the kingdom of plants; higher still we reach the brute; higher still is man.

The difference between these grades is the possession by each of some quality which the inferior grade does not possess.

A tree is different from a rock. Both indeed are composed of matter—perhaps of matter identically similar—but the tree has something which the rock has not, and that is life. A mysterious something has been added to matter—we will not try to define it, for we would probably flounder and blunder as hopelessly as do the scientific writers who try their hand at that business, we simply call it by its name—Life.

Again, a tree and a horse are different. Both have bodies which are formed of matter, the matter existing in the rocks. Both have physical life. And so there are many things in common between them. But there is a difference. That difference is something which is added to the lower grades of matter and physical life. The added thing is Intelligence or Instinct as some prefer to term it.

Step higher and we come to man. He has a body made of matter just as the rock, tree and horse. He has physical life like the tree and brute. He has intelligence like the horse. But something else has been added, let us call it Spirit or Soul.

Is that the end? We rise from the realm of the inanimate toward the absolute perfect, from pure matter toward pure spirit or life. Beneath our feet we tread the matter of which worlds are made. Above us is the Mind by which matter was formed, the Uncreate, the Supreme Will.

Through the grades which we have traced we have been rising toward an infinite altitude. Each superior grade is superior because there is something of a higher grade in it. The vegetable has something which the animal has, i. e., physical life, and that lifts it above the inorganic. The animal has something which man has, i. e., intelligence, and that lifts it above the tree. And man is lifted above the brute by possessing something of higher quality—a moral sense, which is of God.

As we rise through these gradations we enter more and more into the Unseen. The plant has one unseen quality, physical life. The brute has more unseen qualities. Man has most of all.

What if there be another upward step? What if another unseen quality be added to man to lift him higher? What if superposed upon the qualities which distinguish him from all the world below him, there be introduced principles from the world above him which unite him to the Unseen in a higher existence? What if to some of the human race there be given a quality not common to all?

That is the very thing which the Gospel is designed to effect. Regeneration is the introduction of a Divine principle which makes a man of higher grade than other men. It makes him a son of God.

That principle is Life in its highest sense, a portion of the Divine essence, the Holy Ghost. Hear how the Master sets this forth:

"I am come that they may have life."

"He which cometh from heaven giveth life unto the world."

"He that believeth is passed * * unto Life."

A perpetual attack is being urged against the Scripture truth that union with God through Christ is the condition of salvation. Orthodoxy is continually assailed for denying that "mere morality" or mere learning, or mere good breeding or mere anything, simply human, will save a man. Pretenders of every stripe; in endeavoring to satisfy the fierce cry of man's true impulses for something higher than himself are perpetually repeating the old and disappointing teaching of philosophy "be a good man and you will become an angel."

Now philosophy may go on singing that childish ditty as long as it likes, but let it not pretend that Holy scripture gives it a warrant. Popular preachers may take up the hollow strain and tickle the ears of unconverted hearers, but let them not lie to the Holy Ghost by twisting the little to make it utter that deceptive tune.

The Gospel inculcates morals abundantly enough. Against sin in every form physical, intellectual and spiritual it wages relentless war. The greater part of the New Testament is written to condemn and destroy falsehood, dishonesty, licentiousness, idolatry, violence, envy, hypocrisy and all evil. The Son of God led a spotless life as an example for every follower of his, but the Gospel does not say "Be a good man, or a pretty good man and bye-and-bye you will become an angel." Neither does it say "if a horse is a good horse it will bye-and-bye become a man." Nor "if a tree is a good tree it will bye-and-bye become a man."

The Gospel knows nothing of that kind of evolution which says that life may originate in lifeless things. It teaches consistently with all God's teachings in nature that the upward step is made only by introducing a higher quality into the lower grade.

Give a tree sensation and instinct and it becomes an animal. Give a brute moral and spiritual perceptions and it becomes a man. Give a man the Divine Spirit and he becomes a member of the kingdom of God.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"The Conversion of the World."

The week of prayer, which, by common consent of nearly all the different religious sects in Christendom occurs at the beginning of each year, or, beginning on the first Sunday, and continue until the second. To each day is assigned some special object of prayer, as, for instance, prayers to be offered up for back-sliders to be reclaimed, for the "outpouring of the holy spirit," for the conversion of sinners, etc. This may be all right enough, as they come within the range of Scripture authority, although there seems to be an intermixture of human authority or council in the affair. But I cannot help taking exception to one item, at least, in the programme, and that is, that one of the days is assigned for prayers to be offered up for "the conversion of the world—Christ." All these sects believe that the world is to be converted by the preaching of the gospel.

Nearly all the religious sects in Christendom have heretofore indulged the phantom hope in the speedy dawn of the millennium, the signs which they thought betokened its near approach consisted in the missionary enterprise—the diffusion of the Bible in its varied languages adapted to the different localities—the facilities for travel, both by land and sea; and last, though not least, are the great discoveries and inventions which characterize the present age. But, one thing we must take into account, viz.: that this great expansion of the unsanctified human intellect in the discoveries and inventions which might be, and sometimes are made useful, nevertheless, are accompanied with many grievous drawbacks. The human brain has been, and is still taxed to its utmost tension in the invention of missiles of war, for the wholesale slaughter of the human race.

In the science of political economy facilities are afforded for a few to roll in wealth amidst the wail of starving thousands. Instead of manufacturing useful fabrics, everything is turned into shoddy, so that the great ideal seems to be farther from our grasp now than at any former period. I can readily agree with our opponents, that those inventions and discoveries are signs or precursors of the speedy coming of "the Son of Man"—the rightful heir to the "throne of David." The different views, or different standpoints of observation consists in this, viz.: that we take Christ's testimony, together with the prophets and apostles, which, unmistakably, prove the pre-millennial advent of "the Anointed King," while our opponents hold with Whitby, to the post-millennial advent. The latter are also sub-divided, some holding to the doctrine of the impersonal reign of Christ. If the latter view was susceptible of proof, they would be consistent, and not otherwise.

I purpose now to adduce proof of the position to which we adhere. And, first, instead of the masses being converted to Christianity, the reverse is true. For proof, see Paul's letter to Timothy, iii. and iv. chapters. 2nd Timothy. A careful perusal of the same will convince any one that is not a confirmed sceptic that we take the true position. Aged persons, especially, will tell you that their observation confirm this statement of the apostle.

Again, in Matthew's gospel, chapter iv., we have Christ's answer to his disciples' questions. 1. When shall these things be, (the destruction of the temple, etc.) and what shall be the sign of "thy coming" and of the end of the world, age, or dispensation? I know that many learned expositors tell us that these series of questions related wholly to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the captivity which followed. But, it is enough to say, that three distinct questions, which related both to time and place, were asked, and received corresponding answers for all can see that all the specifications were not met at the overthrow of Jerusalem. Christ has not yet come, but the signs of that event are thickening. The history of the antediluvians and of the Cities of the Plain is repeating itself, as Christ predicted. Our own corporeal senses take cognizance, or would, if we would not stop our ears, or purposely blind our eyes. There is additional testimony in Luke's gospel, chapter xxi. 25-36, inclusive.

After Christ gave a graphic account of what would occur just previous to his advent,—the sea and the waves roaring, the tidal waves which have rolled over both the Pacific and the Atlantic oceans, which are a new phenomenon. Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. After describing the scenes, he exhorts them (his disciples) to lift up their heads, for their redemption is nigh. In all candor, we would ask our opponents, in what the redemption for which we should rejoice, consists, on the hypothesis of the world's getting better—reforming—becoming more Christlike? Is it not the great object of Christ's coming to supplant the wicked rulers of earth—the oppressors of his people—to inaugurate a just government? Under the Mosaic dispensation, the blast of the trumpet, announcing the jubilee—that "liberty was proclaimed throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof," did it pre-suppose that the people were previously held in bondage? If this was thus significant under the type, what must it signify under the antitype?

In the New York Herald, December 9th, is an article from H. W. Beecher, under the heading, "The Way to the Millennium." It would be well to note, that Mr. B. believes in the post-millennial doctrine, whether in the personal reign [illegible] or not, I cannot [illegible] to take a new departure. He seems to give an indefinite postponement as to the time. He says it has been found impossible to convert the adult world. You will not do anything until the little children are beginning to come into the kingdom of heaven. "When the time comes, when the child is Christian from the beginning of its life, when we bring up children in that way, there will be no need of churches, or those extraordinary influences. There will come a time when our children will be born, and not born again." You will say, "Perhaps, that this cannot be, (says he,) if the doctrine of hereditary transmission is true. This is so; but before the final triumph of Christianity, it must be preceded by a better understanding of the laws of transmission." But it will not transpire in this age, or while sin holds sway. Christ said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again in order to inherit the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh, is flesh," but a spirit birth is necessary for an entrance in the kingdom; for flesh and blood cannot, says the apostle. Here Mr. B. comes in collision with Christ and the apostle.

According to the Prophet Daniel, the fifth kingdom is to be established by conquest, the same as the four preceding were, each in succession; not only the analogy, but the plain word demands this interpretation. For proof, see Dan. ii. 43-45, inclusive; chapter vii. 9-27, inclusive; Psa. cxlix. In these texts are contained sufficient proof of the fact, that the saints act a very conspicuous part with Christ in the subjugation of the world. In Psalm ii. it is declared that Christ is to have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for a possession. "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel." Verse 9. The closing scenes in earth's great drama is graphically described in Ezekiel's prophecy, from the 34th to 39th chapters, and Zechariah in the 13th and 14th chapters. And the revelator caps the climax in the closing chapters of the book.

Waiting for His Coming!

So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming (greek Apocalypse) of our Lord Jesus Christ. 1 Cor. i. 7.

Yes, waiting! Does this imply inaction? Never! The very Corinthians who were thus addressed were enjoined to be "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." 1 Cor. xv. 58. Did brethren love to his appearing, constant readiness therefor, are consistent with—yea requisite, for a joyful welcome from our Lord. Do we abound? Are we not rather stumbled, yea rebuked, when we look at Paul's injunction? Are we abounding? The work of the Lord implies much—much indeed. "Abound more and more." The writer feels the words! Who will be the translated ones? We have misgivings, and well we may. Where is the abounding? On the contrary have not some of us been afraid of doing too much—have we not been selfish, rather than a "living sacrifice?" The Diotrephes spirit has been evidenced among us to the extent that "rule or ruin" beamy seemed to be the bent of some minds. To the devout ones we say, be patient. Still walk by faith, not by sight. Seek not self qualification. If you see some who, having plenty and to spare of this world's goods, when the test comes, say, "Go thy way, be warmed, and filled," and send the ready empty away, be not thyself stumbled; or, if such do a little, and toil here and there how they have helped others, don't let the disgust which the trumpeting puts) excites them in you to feel, lead you to cry, Overcome! Then great, shalt thou be deed, will be thy reward.

Waiting for his coming? Some of us have long been in expectancy, 1843, '44, '45, '66, '68,—all dates so far have come and gone, demonstrating that men knew not the exact time. Dr. Thomas, perhaps the greatest expounder of this century, erred with all other calculators. Yet still we wait; sooner or later the Stone must smite the image; soon may it be!

Waiting for his coming! Oh! what thoughts we have about the choice ones who will be the first translated! Shall they be behind in any gift? Why should they? Why should they be inferior to any (save the apostles) who have gone before? But, asks one, do you look for the possession of miracle gifts? To this I reply, that while I look not for great displays, seeing the Word inclines me to view faith very low among all professors, including those who profess to be looking for Christ, I yet think that the very few truly prepared ones will not be behind any that have believed and obeyed and walked as children of light in ages past. Who can be better, who can be more intimate with God, and Christ, than those just ready to be immortalized? But, if one asks, where are such? Echo may indeed answer, where? Yet there will be some (1 Cor. xv. 51; 1 Thess. iv. 17) if only eight, as in Noah's day. And when we look at the sermon on the the mount, taking Christ's words in their full strength, we have thought this number might be all. Don't be annoyed, reader. Suppose we think as here laid down:

Prepared ones [illegible] the British Isles—1—state
" " [illegible] and Europe—1—
" " Asia.....1—
" " Africa.....1—
" " [illegible].....1—
" " [illegible].....1—
" " United States.....1—

Total.....

Some may be a little amused at seeing the foregoing. Yet the writer is not rash in his words. After long experience I have found editors, preachers, as well as private professors, almost always shrink from the fair presentation of the sermon on the Mount. Plenty will quote parts of the discourse, and some will emphasize with impassioned gesture on this and that in the celebrated sermon;—but who dare go through it, and emphasize as ardently on each and every point, as on here and there one? Who?

In 1844 George Storrs stood before a congregation of Adventists who were expecting the Lord within ten days, and declared he would give them the best sermon ever preached. He read our Lord's discourse, placing as much stress on one verse as another, and amens, hearty amens, were heard, in which the writer perhaps joined; but I am not sure.

Some months after, however, George Storrs, in remarking on the discourse to his Bible Examiner, spoke rather differently than he did in October, 1844.

Within the last four years I had a talk with the late venerable editor of the Examiner, when we looked at some of our Lord's works he said to me: Well, let us live up to the rules as nearly as we can. He as much as said, It is impossible to obey fully all the commands given. He also said; "All the world will become guilty before God;" and on uttering these words, I said to him, You quote the very Scripture that D. J. Ellsworth, of Connecticut, quoted in converse with me on the sermon.

In a Christadelphian of last year among the subjects named as having been dwelt on in a London congregation was one by a Bro. Andrews on the Sermon on the Mount. Not having the number of the magazine by me, I may not give exactly the words, but I shall not mistake much if any, when I give the words as—"Sermon on the Mount—antagonistic to the faith and practice of the sects of the day." Might not the lecturer include (and perhaps he does) the Christadelphians?

The Kingdom.

RECAPITULATION.

1. God once had a kingdom upon earth known as the kingdom of Israel. Proof: 1 Sam. viii. 5, 7, 22; x. 1 0; x. 17 25; 2 Sam. v. 3, 5, 12; 1 Kings ii. 12, 1 Chron. xxix. 23; Acts x ii. 16-23.

2. This kingdom is now overturned and will remain so till the rightful heir shall come. Ezk. xxi. 25-27; Jer. lii. 1 11; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 11-13; Dan. ii. 36 45; also, 7th chapter.

3. Jesus Christ is the rightful one to the throne and kingdom of Israel, or David, which he will restore when he comes the second time, 2 Sam. vii 12 17; 1 Chron. xvii. 11-15; Ezk. xxi. 26; Gal. iv. 4, 7; Luke i. 31-33; Acts xiii —, 23; Mat. ii. 1-7; John xviii. 33-40; xix. 1-22; Mat. xxi. 9; Luke xxii. 28, 29; Mat. xix. 27, 28; xxv. 31; Acts xv. 16; Tim. vi. 1; II v. xi. 15.

4. When restored it will be the kingdom of God, or kingdom of heaven. Mat. v ii. 11; Luke xiii. 29; Mat. xiii. 31; Luke xiii. 18; Mat. xiii. 33; Luke xiii. 20; Mat. xix. 23, 24; Mark x. 24, etc. The reader will observe that in the above kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven are used interchangeably, kingdom of God and kingdom of Israel are so used. Luke iv. 43; xxii. 16, 18; xxii. 29, 30; Mat. xix. 28; Luke xxi. 31; Mat. xxv. 31; Luke xxiv. 21; Acts i. 6; Luke xxiv. 11.

And now, dear reader, I have introduced only a small part of the testimony on either of the propositions. But by taking a Bible with references you can trace the kingdom from its organization in the days of Samuel till its subversion in the time of Zedekiah; you can look up the prophecies which speak of its restoration; you can find from the language of the king himself the very time it will be restored. You can also learn that the king de jure is now with his father in his throne and has been for over 1800 years, during which time the gospel has been and is now being proclaimed to the Gentiles to take out from them a people for his name. Rev. iii. 21; Acts xv. 13-17. When the last one, who will be associated with Christ in his kingdom, will be selected the "nobleman" will return from the far off country and enter upon his reign. He will then be a king de facto upon his own throne—the throne of David—and commence the age of restitution. Luke xix. 12; Mat. xix. 28; Acts iii. 21. Dear reader, do you desire salvation? Do you want eternal life? Do you wish a position in Christ's kingdom? Do you want to share the glories and honors of the millennial age? Do you want a home where there will be nothing to hurt or destroy, and where sickness, pain and death will be known no more? If so, there is but one way to obtain them. To get either of the above will be to get all. If you are saved, you will be saved in the kingdom. If you are worthy of eternal life, you will get it in the kingdom. And in order to become worthy you must believe the gospel of the Kingdom; the glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God, or the reign of Jesus Christ upon David's throne; obey the same by being baptized into the name of Jesus; then run the Christian race as instructed by the apostles.

When Christ shall come again to earth,
He will fill the saints' arise;
Oh, what a place of joy and mirth
Will be our paradise.

For Satan shall a thousand years,
Be bound down with a chain;
But when that mated time expires,
He will be loosed again.

And in a time not very long,
He will gather up his men,
And he and they surround the strong
The kingdom to regain.

But just at this distinguished hour,
The fiery clouds o'er head
Send down the fire and burn that power,
And the saints shall have no dread.

Then strife and quarrels will never come,
And wars be known no more;
When Christ shall occupy the throne
That David did before.

Christianity is divine. Other religions flatter human pride, yield to sinful desires, pamper passion and foster sin; but this conquers by kindness, opposes sin with holiness, hatred with love, evil doing with good doing. In feeling hungry enemies it heaps coals of fire on their heads.

POETRY.

Thy Will Be Done.

FRANCES E. POPE.

Thy will be done! Not lightly be it spoken,
To fall like tinkling cymbals on the air;
Beyond all other words are these the token
Of resignation conquered from despair.

Not all who say, "Lord! Lord!" can tell what measure
Of heavy cost it takes their depth to learn;
What loss of ease, what sacrifice of treasure,
What exile out of which to return.

He who has proved this saying bears the traces
Of furnace-fires that spare the cold stone;
His conversation is to heavenly places;
His life is lived to God's and not his own.

He soul in restful patience he possesses,
Nor sighs for hopes that vanished unfulfilled,
As one who meets with loss, yet still caresses
Regretful dreams with spirit half self-willed.

No more in things of time his heart is centered;
For he has seen their precious-ness decrease;
He weighed the world and proved it void, and entered
The upper chamber of abiding peace.

Thy will be done! Oh, utterance most selfish!
That thrills anew the soul's darkest clouds,
With deep compassion for that woe-plentiful
Which filled the anguished chalice of our Lord's.

Behold in that sublime self-abnegation,
What lowly path the Man of Sorrows trod,
And know that out of thy humiliation
Shall grow the grace to stand before thy God.

Then not with lip irreverent be spoken
The hallowed words of God's all-suffering
Son;
But say with contrite heart and spirit broken,
Through loss, through sorrow, "Let thy will be done!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I write now to inform you and the readers of THE RESTITUTION, who may be interested, that I expect to leave here on the 12th of April next, for the purpose of making a visit of a few months with friends in Indiana, and visit some of the churches if the brethren and sisters desire it. My wife and daughter will accompany me. We will stop a few days with my eldest brother who lives near Council Bluffs, Iowa. His address is John B. Corbaley, Crescent City, Iowa. From there we expect to go direct to Indiana. Will stop with our son, John A. Corbaley, at Maple, Allen county, Indiana, and from thence back to Plymouth, etc. We arrived in this state on the 2nd of April, 1871. I was then an invalid. This climate done for me what physicians had failed to accomplish. Since that farewell meeting was held at Antioch on the eve of our leaving for this state, how many who were present and participated at the meeting have closed up their earthly existence? That was the last hand shaking for me and them in this world. They are gone, and when we go to Antioch to church, as we hope to, many familiar faces will be missed. I can call several to mind. But we shall expect to meet many we have met there before. We hope the brethren will arrange to hold at least a quarterly conference in May or June that we may have one more meeting with a multitude of the brethren, sisters and friends. After we arrive at our destination and have a little rest, if the brethren desire it, I will be glad to attend meetings in neighborhoods, especially where I have labored a number of years ago. We have been here almost nine years, and what we have of church society has been gathered during this time; most of the members here, now, had never heard of the things that, at first, appeared so strange to them. Our coming to this state, I trust, has not been in vain, but that at the judgment, I fondly hope there will be some noble sheaves from this sunny land. We hope there are many others here yet who will become obedient to the truth and help to swell the numbers, who will hail with delight the coming of the Son of God to establish his kingdom.

More anon,

RICHARD CORBALEY.

Healdsburg, Cal.

Editor Restitution;—As some have thought that I had retired from the gospel field, or lost my interest in the gospel preached by God in the garden, and St. Paul in Rome, therefore I will give a brief report of some of my labor the past five months. In August, by request of the brethren, I, in company with Mrs. L. visited Collingwood, Ont., (a town where I have preached occasionally for a number of years,) where we spent twelve days with profit to ourselves and the lovers of truth. On each First Day I preached twice in the town hall, also once in the evening during the week, to good congregations, who gave the best attention to my message. Dr. Campbell, pastor of the Old Kirk Church of Scotland, was out to hear me once, and to a number of my brethren, he said, he was highly interested. I heard him preach a good sermon, one evening, on the Second Coming of Christ. He believes and preaches the coming of Jesus, his literal reign on the throne of his father David, over the house of Jacob and the left of the nations and the utter destruction of the wicked! But he is wrong on baptism.

I gave one discourse in the village of Nottawa, three miles from C., to an interesting congregation. We visited all the brethren at their own homes. I had the honor of immersing two (Mrs. L's eldest brother and his amiable companion) into the saving name of Jesus the Anointed, for the remission of sins. On our way home we spent a couple of days in Toronto very pleasantly with loved ones; sold a number of my books. August 29th I received a telegram to return to C. and immerse Brother James. The conversation that I had with him on baptism, when there with Mrs. L., convinced him that the essential baptism, was water, and not the spirit. I withdrew my appointments; took the boat for Toronto, then Nelson's chariots for C. Upon my arrival, at 10 p. m., I found quite a number of the brethren and sisters in waiting at the station to receive me. On Sunday, at 10 a. m., we met at the Bay; a more beautiful morning I never saw. All nature smiled upon the solemn scene! Although our brother was feeble and near the close of his pilgrimage—he has since fallen asleep in Jesus: he was in his sixty-first year—yet, with the firmness and composure of a well man, he walked down into the water, and as I raised him up out of his watery grave, a heavenly smile rested upon his brow as he exclaimed, "All is well." At 2:30 p. m. I gave a discourse in the town hall; had a good turn out, and good attention. As Brother James was too feeble to go to the hall, we held our meeting in the evening at his house, where I gave a discourse on baptism and the memorial Supper, then closed by eating the same. And it was a heavenly season to all—a foretaste of the world to come. But we had to part—not without the hope of meeting each other in the saints Eden home.

I have visited the brethren at Pontiac and Thorold. As usual, had a good time in presenting the truth. Have visited the lovers of truth in Pleasant Street, this Co. Have spent a number of days with the church in Sweabing, Ont. Gave four discourses, by request, upon subjects that had been mangled by the apostasy during my absence. As usual, a good turn out and attention. One requested baptism. Spent a number of days with the brethren in Norwich. Gave a number of discourses; eat the memorial Supper; a joyful time to all; one requested immersion.

December 12th I left my pleasant home for Clark, Ont., where I spent a number of days pleasantly. On Sunday I preached to a house full of people, who listened with interest to my message. Some, I think, will obey upon my return. Visited the loved ones in Bowmanville.

On the 17th my true friend, Brother D. Hogarth, met me at B, and took me back to his pleasant home, where I was received with Christian kindness,—as I have always been for about twenty years,—yes, with all the loved ones in this vicinity. With them I stopped twelve days. On each Sunday I preached twice. On what is called Christmas, by special invitation, I spent with Brother and Sister Hogarth, and family. There were only thirty-one present; but it was a day and evening well spent. On the next day we had a wedding festival at Brother and Sister Stephen Hogarth's. Their daughter, Sarah Ida, was married at my residence, to Wm. L. Law, September 20th, by myself. This was a pleasant time to all convened. Nineteen years ago last June I commenced my labors in this place. No person has a right to expect to be treated more kindly than I and mine have been, by all the lovers of truth in this vicinity. On the last Sunday evening I gave a discourse predicated upon 1 Cor. xv. 22. At the close we ate the memorial Supper, and it was truly an anti-past of the glorious future. After taking leave of these loved ones, I rode twelve miles with Brother Cyrus Hogarth to West Whitby, where I found a welcome home. Stopped a couple of days and visited all the brethren, and preached once in Brother H's house. Had his kitchen full of people, who gave good attention. At the close many questions were asked and answers freely given. And the only objections brought against my answers was, "they had been taught differently and they thought the punishments too easy for the sinners." But they washed to hear me again. December 31st Brother H took me to Whitby Station, where I took the train. Stopped at Toronto some three hours; called on some of father's family; reached my own home about 8 p. m. where I enjoyed a supper, which Mrs. L. had in readiness for me.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I enjoy the reading of the Old Testament, not only historically, but also religiously. There are so many instances of divine goodness manifested in the turn of affairs toward the people, Israel, and such overwhelming power brought to bear upon the acts of individuals in those sacred records, that they become at once a truthful history and a polished reflector of their divine author. The Old is only equaled by the New Testament writings. They are mutual reflectors, alternately shining upon and illustrating each other. Their foundation is in the prophets and the apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone. To him give all the prophets witness that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins. We take our stand between the two, and, looking back to the days of Moses, we behold the light of truth prophetically shining and ultimately gathering around the Nazarine, a prophet, like unto Moses himself, combining in his person the human and divine nature two beings in combination—an Israelite and the eternal spirit; the spirit manifested in and through flesh. This spirit manifestation is mentioned at the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis as the Shiloh to come as sceptre in Judah—King Messiah Son of God, 2nd Psalm—Prince and Savior, 2nd Peter. From these Scriptures we see the likeness of Jesus of Nazareth to the personage set forth by Moses as he to whom the gathering of the people shall be. How important, then, to be ready, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless. May the Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make his face shine upon thee and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee and give thee peace.

CHRISTADELPHIAN.

Editor Restitution:—The lectures held in Limerick by Bro. J. W. Houghawout, answering Ingersoll's objections to the Bible, were well attended and the hearers well pleased to know and learn that true science does not conflict with, but only go to prove the authenticity of the Bible. Bro. Houghawout presented the arguments in an entirely new way, bringing out many new thoughts and ideas. Hoping to be able to secure him again in some future time to give us another lesson on things to think of,—knowledge is power.

Editor Restitution.—With pleasure I write you a few lines that you and the brethren may know the prospects in Indianapolis. The brethren here are but few, and we have no regular meetings, but we "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," as opportunities offer themselves; I hope our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Some time ago I met in a hall where meetings were held by a class of people—many of whom stood in direct opposition to the Word of God,—for discussion upon different subjects. Of course much would be said against the Bible, I then made it my business to arise and defend the truth in my humble way. This I did many times, I sometimes thought I was not in the society I should be in, but I could not bear to know that the book of God, should be trampled under foot and nobody to say a word in favor of it, therefore, I made a point to meet them every Sunday afternoon, as long as these debates lasted, I have reason now to believe that good has been the result. For of late one of those gentlemen has visited me a number of times to inquire the way of truth more fully, after much pleasant conversation about Jesus the Christ, and the things concerning the kingdom of God. He desired to be immersed, we set the time for last Sunday morning, Feb. 29, when we met at Brother Wilkins' house and from there proceeded to the water, and immersed Bro. Thompson into the Christ, and then returned to our homes rejoicing. I have reason to believe he is firm in the faith and will be of much service in the Lord's vineyard, Bro. Thompson is intelligent and is a man of talent. He will make a good speaker. Let us, therefore, sow the seed in the morning and in the evening withhold not our hand, for we know not which shall prosper this or that, or whether both shall prosper alike. Yours in the hope of the soon coming kingdom.

"I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell." 2 Cor. xii. 2. If St. Paul knew not whether he was in the body or out of the body, one thing he did know—that he was "in Christ."—Rev. W. S. Rainsford.

NEWS ITEMS.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 5.—Modetzky, the Jewish Nihilist who attempted the life of Gen. Melikoff, chief of the commission of the supreme control, on Wednesday, was executed this morning, according to the announcement previously made in these dispatches. When the drop was let fall he died quickly and almost without a struggle. While the body was being removed the police rushed in among the crowd and arrested a number of persons, alleging that they were irresponsible students. Notwithstanding threats of torture or suggestion of possible mitigation of sentence Modetzky positively refused to disclose the names of his accomplices. His only reply to all interrogations on the subject was: "I have failed. I regret the fact; it is the only thing that grieves me now; but I take comfort from the reflection that others will try to do what I could not, and that some of them will surely succeed."

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 6.—In Van, Armenia, fifty-two persons have died of starvation.

VERA SASSULITCH NOT ARRESTED.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 2.—The report of the arrest of Vera Sassulitch proves to be unfounded. It is believed that the rumor of her presence in St. Petersburg was circulated purposely to mislead the authorities.

DESTITUTION IN ROUMELIA.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 6.—The committee for the distribution of aid among the refugees in eastern Roumelia reports that unless fresh funds are provided, it must cease operations in a few days, in which case many persons will perish with hunger.

The fact that a steam engine is being erected in a short mill in Jerusalem is a startling announcement, but it is an evidence of civilization. The "infidels" who have thus introduced modern inventions to the "Holy City" are a firm of Wurtemburg colonists, who, with the characteristic enterprise of the Teutonic race, are doing all the Oriental Power will let them to make the historic and Old World city march with the times.—Age to Come Herald.

(Jewish Chronicle (London).)

Colonization in Palestine.

The German settlement at Jaffa, Mt. Carmel and Jerusalem are successful so far as they go. They are, however possessed of very limited capital, and confine themselves chiefly to trades. Their colonies can scarcely be called agricultural. The success which has attended the cultivation of their vines at Carmel, their soap-factory, tannery and brewery, show that European energy avails much in spite of obstacles. They have a school and hospital at Jaffa and own thirty-six houses and a steam flour-mill, also a threshing machine. At Jerusalem, they own about five acres and thirteen dwelling houses. At Mt. Carmel they possess sixty-eight dwellings and many vineyards. Leather and soap have been considerably manufactured by the Carmel Colony, and even exported. The importing firm of Dalsbury, Breish & Co., of Jaffa, have been successful in introducing Marseilles tile for roofing, and dealing extensively in Asia Minor and Austrian timber, besides supplying Palestine with European, chiefly German, commodities.

In view of these facts, it is reasonable to surmise that Anglo Saxon energy and enterprise, aided by judicious outlay of capital, would accomplish as much, and even greater things in Palestine. Would that religious views could induce some of our millionaries to expend a few dollars out of their millions on practical undertakings, such as the above.

Weak Women.

We often hear it said that most of the Christians are "weak women." They are, are they? Well, most of the criminals are strong men. "Most that attend the prayer-meetings are women." Exactly; and most that hang around bar-rooms are men. "Girls get their heads filled with hymns, and tracts, and such nonsense." Do they? Well, boys get their heads filled with whisky, obscenity, and blackguardism, and wander as roughs and hoodlums around the streets and slums of the city, or squander their money in gambling and sin. If piety proves women's weakness, does drunkenness prove man's strength? If women are ruled by preachers and class-leaders, are they worse off than men who are ruled by pipes and tobacco? Is it any worse for women to talk piety in prayer-meeting than it is for men to spout vulgarity and infidelity in rum shops? Is it any worse for a sorrowful woman to be praying in her closet, than for a drunken infidel to be swearing in the lock-up? If piety is a mark of mental weakness, it might be well for some of the drunken fools of creation who talk infidelity while their wives take in washing, if they were a little weaker in mind themselves, instead of being so wise and worthless as they are.—A. E. Thistletine, in Live Patron.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Nothing can be true love to God which does not shape itself into obedience.

"God leads Nature by the hand; she walks in his statutes, keeping his judgments and doing them; moved to obedience by no will but his."

He who lives to no purpose, lives to a bad purpose.

If every man did what he thought of doing, what daily wonders would be performed.

Let us gather up the sunbeams
Lying all around our path;
Let us keep the wheat and roses,
Casting out the thorns and chaff;
Let us find our sweetest comforts
In the blessings of to day,
With a patient heart removing
All the litters from the way.

FORWARD, NOT UPWARD.

I confess I look oftener forward than I look upward. We are more prone to look upward than to look forward. It is remarkable that all promises of glad tidings, and bright things, and blessed things, are in the future; and that the most common direction of the Bible is to look forward for our heaven, rather than to look upward. . . We are constantly encouraged to duties by the reward not that is above us, but the reward that gleams in the distance far beyond and before us.—John Cumming, D. D.

When every Christian is altogether inside what he is outside, it will be a bright day for the church and the world.

TRUST.

Make a little fence of trust
Around to-day;
Fill the space with loving work,
And therein stay.

Look not thro' the sheltering bars
Upon to-morrow;
God will help thee bear what comes
Of joy or sorrow.

RESULTS OF NEGLECT.

The world abounds in ruins resulting from neglect; and perdition is reached as certainly by neglect as any other means. A neglected child grown up for ruin; the neglected business fails; the neglectful engineer wrecks his train; the neglectful sailor strands his vessel; the negligent general is certain to be overthrown, and "how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"

Oh, the wasted hours of life
That have drifted by;
Oh, the good we might have done,
Lost without a sigh.
Love that we might once have saved
By a single word;
Thoughts conceived, but never penned,
Perishing unheard.
Take the proverb to thine heart.
Take it Oh, hold it fast!—
"The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed."

RESTITUTION FUND.

ANSON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 19, 1879.

Editor Restitution—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and insure its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel the interest able to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $3.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a first-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment. Are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that every one will respond to this appeal. I cease let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $3.00, and tell they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 42 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 40 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $150 to commence with. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming Kingdom. So, farewell.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Walker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. M. Fitt, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Walker combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as household words. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

...OETRY.

Let Your Light Shine.

TO SISTER MARIA MUSSULMAN.

Faithful to the truth,
Though the truth hast bought;
With meekness tell it to thy fellow-men;
By hedge and wayside, let the lost be sought,

Hold up the lamp of truth;
Keep back no word through fear;
Such help as thine, the blinded wanderer needs,
And Christ-like voice, alone will reach his ear.

For truth's defense thou'rt set,
To whom God's gift hath come,
And shooting calmly, what the word hath said,
May bring wrath's children, to the Father's home.

For such as these thou wast,
Till word of truth was heard,
And thou to Christ, the ark of refuge fled,
Did'st on thyself, the heavenly armor gird.

Wield thou, the sword of truth,
No foe, its stroke may stand.
We need brave hearts, who say no weapon cower,
Such, such alone, may reach the promised land.

There, made to glory's praise,
Them will his kindness see,
Who saved in mercy, wrought, through Him who died,
Redemption's purchase of the land for thee!

COMMUNICATIONS.

Report of Quarterly Assembly.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God met, according to announcement, near Browntown, Warren county, Virginia, and, while the writer was the only public speaker in attendance on Saturday night, when we arrived at the place appointed for the meeting, Professor Chilson, who is quite a literary man, and, having attended our last annual assembly and becoming somewhat interested in the principles we cherish, had the house in comfortable order, which was (although the roads were rough, owing to the snow,) well filled, and better attention, I must say, I never saw. While the introductory discourse was being delivered, in which we, after referring to the announcement given in THE RESTITUTION, endeavored to impress upon the assembly the importance of the occasion, by saying that, while there was not a great multitude of the One Faith there assembled, yet the time and place of the meeting being known by the brethren in Christ promiscuously over the country, and there being enough present, assembled, to represent the whole body of Christ, and indulging the faith and hope that, by way of remembrance, the minds or hearts of the brethren everywhere were with us, thus making a grand assembly; and, viewed in this light, the occasion was truly an important one, and all the more, when we come to consider that the object of the assembly was to bear faithful and public testimony to God's plan of salvation, as revealed in his holy word. In order to this, the gospel of the kingdom and name of Jesus Christ, was made the great theme during the meeting, which continued until Tuesday night, with an increased interest, and to settle forever beyond the possibility of a doubt, that, just to believe in Jesus Christ according to the general received opinion of the day, is not faith in him, according to the order which the Most High has established for salvation. We kept nothing back that was profitable to shew what is the faith, without which it is impossible to please God; and, for the benefit of all who may read this report, and, especially, as there are some good and honest hearts with us, as a people, who have been somewhat confused by a false spirit which has recently come among us with this delusion of anti-christ, I will here, submit a condensed view of the law and testimony, which gave perfect satisfaction to the assembly, and those over of the friends of truth in attendance.

The position, that, to believe only, as all the popular sects do and teach, in the existence of a God, and that there was, and is, such a personage as Jesus Christ, who is the Son of God, and that he suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and was buried, rose from the dead and ascended to heaven, is clearly a plot with regard to the faith once delivered to the saints. Instead, we showed, by many illustrations, that, to understand, believe and obey the word of God, as preached by Jesus Christ and the apostles alone, constituted faith in Jesus Christ, and began with Peter at the house of Cornelius, and shewed what that word was. As this report is intended for truly wise men and women, as well as all honest inquirers for truth, I will just give a few of the many proofs of the position. "Judge ye what I say, after proclaiming in the language of this holy man of God the word which was sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ. He is Lord of all; that word I say ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee after the baptism which John preached." We asked all interested to just step back and begin at the 17th verse of the 4th chapter of Matthew, which says: "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." And he said that I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also, for, therefore, am I sent.

Here we shewed that, to follow this line of truth out, in connection with the teachings of all the holy men of God, that the word of the kingdom was the word, which God sent to the children of Israel, and it was the word which he, the eternal Father, sent Jesus, his Anointed, to preach; and, also, the same word that Peter alluded to at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, when he said, "They that gladly received his word were baptized, and the word which he preached at the house of Cornelius, and by all the inspired apostles to every creature under heaven." And the decision of the assembly was, that, to be ignorant of that word, is ignorance of God's righteousness, and, consequently, faithless in him who is our righteousness, our sanctification, and our redemption; and, for any one to be baptized in that state, their baptism is only a deception, palmed upon them by those ignorant of God's righteousness, and who are going about to establish a righteousness of their own, and will not submit to the righteousness of Christ. It is due to the little body of believers in that part of the habitable, to speak of their labor of faith and love, and their ever readiness to encourage any effort in the defense of the whole truth and their own steadfastness in the precious faith, once for all delivered to the saints.

May the God of all grace bless them, and may they continue to let their light shine by being faithful over a few things that they be made rulers over many when he comes whose right it is to take unto himself his great power and reign, and to execute judgment and righteousness in the land. It was truly a feast in this day of small things, to witness the love and social feeling exhibited by the dear ones, and all in attendance, as they meet from time to time, and then to take part in the farewell greeting. While singing one of the sweet songs of Zion, we felt richly rewarded for the sixty miles travel, and the several days and nights humble effort (and that, from house to house,) to rightly divide the word of truth and to give each their portion in due season, that, some, at least, get on the bridal robe, having their lamps trimmed and burning, and ready to meet the bridegroom at his coming and kingdom. It is also due our much esteemed Professor Chilson, to shew his appreciation of the true sayings of God, to record the eulogy he associated with the farewell greetings. Said he, "I must congratulate you for the intellectual feast which I have received since you have been in the neighborhood," to which we replied, "Give to God all the glory." The assembly closed with the understanding that our next quarterly meeting in order, be with the household of faith in Maryland, wherever agreed upon by the brethren of that state.

Report of Conference at East Plum River.

Conference met as per previous notice Friday night, the brethren were addressed by Bro. Houghawout. Met again Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, J. S. Arnold in the chair; your writer as secretary; Bro. Collins, Gans and Albert Renner were chosen committee of arrangements. The forenoon was taken up in discussing the advantages and disadvantages of church organization.

At night Bro. J. W. H. delivered a discourse on Peter's burning up the world, which seemed to the congregation a very plausible definition.

Sunday morning business of the conference was closed, and adjourned to meet subject to the call of J. S. Arnold, committee appointed to receive application for the next conference. Brethren wishing the conference will address him early as possible.

Afternoon Bro. J. W. H. preached a Gospel sermon telling the old story to a very full house, followed by Bro. Gans on the things necessary to receive eternal life and learning God from things that are made. After breaking bread we sang a hymn and went out.

At night the house was filled to the full as is the usual case at East Plum River. All feeling well paid for coming together encouraging one another in one hope.

Practical Christianity—No. 2.

Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God. 2 Cor. vii. 1.

Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. Heb. xii. 1-2.

This passage illustrates very forcibly the way we are to cleanse ourselves from the filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit. We are to break off, lay aside, leave behind; yea, cast to the bats and the moles all our besetting sins. This being done, we keeping ourselves in the fear and love of God, and our garments unspotted from the world, we are on the direct road, or in the sure way of becoming perfect men and women in Christ Jesus at the Resurrection of the just, when these vile bodies will be changed and made like unto the glorious body of the Son of God. There is no absolute perfection for poor frail humanity this side of the coming of the Just One when this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption. When the work of regeneration is completed, we shall be as perfect in our organism and in our entire being as God's dear Son. Then, and not till then, (in an absolute sense) we shall be as perfect as our Father which is in heaven is perfect.

We have once before given in few words through THE RESTITUTION what we understand to be the true process, according to Bible teaching, for the children of Adam to pass through in order to become holy, without which no man can see the Lord, nor become the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. In each age of the world there has been a test truth, and God has required strict obedience thereto; his law has been imperative, his command absolute. This is apparent and clear. Will he be less exacting or less imperative in requiring obedience to his law of the men of this age in which he is taking out a people for his name (Acts xv.) to be associated with his Son Jesus the Christ in the rule and government of the world? Don't let us make a mistake at the start. To us, as a people, this is the gravest and most profound question that can be asked.

Moses was a law giver and a legislator for the Hebrew nations. His laws were in force till the introduction of the Gospel age, about two thousand years ago; this is called the Gospel age, or the times of the Gentiles, in which Christ is the law giver, which differs materially from that of Moses, yet embodying much contained in it. Christ's law is holy, just and true. Its requirements are reasonable, the rewards to the obedient are ample; yea, magnificent and glorious; all are based on obedience, as was the first law given to Adam. The law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, so says Paul, by that we must square our lives; by that we must be judged; by that we stand or fall. How important then that we have an intelligent understanding of it, for whatsoever was written aforetime was written for our our instruction upon whom the end of the world (age) are come. What a sad, yea, lamentable mistake have the men of this age made in relation to the doctrines taught in the Scriptures; modern theology is at open variance with the fundamental doctrines of the word of God. This shows the importance of our being careful and lay the foundation on the Rock. Any departure from Christ's teaching is attended with fatal consequences.

In our Lord's parables, and his own explanations, we have good, sound, wholesome doctrine; hear him in the parable of the wheat and the tares: "The word of the kingdom must be preached, heard, believed, obayed and understood, in order to the formation of a character in harmony with the Divine mind or being." The first thing necessary for the teacher, or servant of God, is an intelligent understanding in relation to the kingdom of God. Says the Great Teacher, "Seek first the kingdom of God." Such an understanding of what constitutes God's kingdom when set up, when located, add to it things pertaining to it and the name of Jesus the Christ, then add the necessity and importance of cultivating and practicing all the Christian graces enjoined by Christ and his holy apostles. These things being done in the latter and in the spirit, we then have a clear and lawful claim to or for the application of the precious blood of Christ, which cleanses us from all sin. This is an outline, or a succinct statement of what we must know and do in order to become inheritors of God's everlasting kingdom. How deep, how vast, how grand, and how glorious are God's plans and purposes in relation to the earth, and the peopling or repeopling it with a race of holy beings.

Having said or written these things, the way is open for reflections of deep and thrilling interest to the writer as well as to those who may read what we have in weakness written. First, are we scripturally and intelligently upon the Rock? We must not guess or think so, it is what we may and must know; for there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, or are we in doubting castle, and have to give the evasive answer that John gave when asked by an interested brother what he understood about the one faith, the one Lord and the one baptism? Oh just enough to induce obedience.

Such answers are not intelligent nor satisfactory. It has been a question in our minds whether the lamented George Storrs was not the most consistent who denied that water baptism was the essential baptism of the Bible. I am aware that the cross is very heavy to the orthodox Baptist, especially those who have long been teachers. Second, if we are on the Rock, are we undergoing and practicing the cleansing process, and if so, can we report progress? Happy, indeed, are all such; it is well to be careful, the enemy will tell us, "Oh, you're on the Rock, give yourself no trouble, Christ will see after the filling up, or out of the balance, if we have been obedient to the faith." Take care, a lion is in the way. If we are progressing, the evidence will follow, for we are living epistles known and read of all men. Let us ask ourselves a few plain questions. Are we able to curb our passions or bridle our tongues? Are we able to exercise forbearance in times of trial and patiently wait for God to deliver us in the hour of temptation and sore trial? Are we dealing justly, walking uprightly, and humbly before God and this wicked, and adulterous generation? Let us apply the Bible test, for it is very clear that the rapture or translation of the church is the next in order, and a preparation for that sublime event far out-weighs all other considerations. Are we ready, are our lamps trimmed and brightly burning? Are our hands clean and our hearts pure? Are we watching and patiently waiting for the coming of him who is salvation?

In conclusion allow us to say, we have written the foregoing by request of a brother in Kansas, who gave us the text. We have written with deep searchings of heart, and with subdued feelings. We have taken of the reproofs and admonitions given much more to ourself, than we have given to our neighbor. We hope that whoever the garment may fit will put it on, and try and profit thereby. To our mind there is no subject productive of so much good to the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus as a careful study of the manner of his spotless life, his faithful, unflinching integrity and fidelity to God his eternal Father. Just think, although he was flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone, subject to temptation and all the ills of human life, yet he kept the law perfectly, magnified it and made it honorable; he did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. What a magnificent example set for us to follow, or for the obedience of faith. Let us try to imitate his noble example as far as in us lies; yes, and after all we have done, or can do, we shall have to say, we are unprofitable servants.

NEWELL BOND.

The Unity of Scripture.

Thy word is true from the beginning. Psa. cxix. 160.

See on the first page, the earth created to receive the man who sins not; on the following pages, the earth accursed to receive man who sins always; on the last page, the new heavens and the new earth to receive man who will sin no more; on the first page, the tree of life forbidden, paradise lost, sin entering the world by the first Adam, and death by sin; in the last page, paradise regained, life restored to the world by the second Adam; death vanquished, all mourning ended, the image of God re-established in man, and the tree of life, in the midst of the paradise of God. Surely there is in this majestic whole which begins before the days of man, and which continues even to the end of time, a powerful and heavenly unity, an undeviating, universal, and immense convergence, whose grandeur seizes the attention, surpasses all our human conceptions, and proclaims the divinity of its Author as irresistibly as can in a summer's night the aspect of the heaven's brilliant stars, and the thought of all these worlds of light which revolve night and day in the immensity of space.—Prof. Guizot.

Good temper is like a sunny day, it sheds a brightness over everything, it is the sweetness of toil and the soother of disquietude.

BREVITIES.

In the Bernese, Oberland, Switzerland, the ground is frozen so hard that before a grave can be dug great fires have to be made in the churchyards, and in some instances, when this expedient proved unavailing, the gravediggers were compelled to use dynamite.

The Illustrirte Zeitung gives the following statistics concerning the telegraphic wires of the world. Those of Europe measured at the close of 1878, 765,796 English miles, those of America, 114,157; Asia, 24,521; Australia 23,582; and Africa, 8,148. The telegraphic net that embraces the world comprises, therefore, 650,176 English miles, or 1,513,683 kilometres.

The bitterness of feeling against the Jews in Roumania is curiously shown in the story told of a murder at a place called Folticzay. A Greek murdered a Jew there under the most disgraceful circumstances, with no excuse whatever to be pleaded for him. Nevertheless a jury acquitted the Greek, and the ruffian was, after the verdict paraded through the Jewish quarter amid general popular rejoicing. There is no doubt that there is a growing hatred of the Jews, not only in Roumania, but even in Germany and Austria.

Three young Zulu women are now at the London Aquarium. One of the three dusky ladies claims Cetywayo for her father, and wears her hair somewhat longer than that of her companions, in evidence of her royal descent. The names which they bear are musical, and express qualities or relate to some incident, after the fashion of the old Hebrew names. Thus, of the three names—Unolala, Unomadloza, and Unozondaba—one refers to the owner's mother having passed through some trial of suffering, and the other means that its bearer is as sweet as honey. The ladies share with their more civilized sisters a taste for personal adornment. Their manners are gentle and prepossessing, and their demeanor is in marked contrast with that of the exuberantly gay and noisy masculine members of the troupe.

That the disease which broke out in Japan last spring was Asiatic cholera of an unusually deadly type seems to be now admitted on all hands. From the official figures furnished by the Government to the Tokio Times, it appears that, up to Dec. 27, 163,214 individuals had been stricken down; of these, 101,304 had died, 47,385 had recovered, and 19,025 were still under treatment. Out of every 1,000 Japanese subjects, 5 had been attacked, and the percentage of mortality among the attacked had reached the high figure of 62.22. "It should never be forgotten," says the Tokio Times, "that the cholera was first imported from Amoy, at a time when the desire of the Japanese Government to enforce quarantine upon ships coming from that port, known to be infected, was overborne by the British Minister."

In the midst of the great events of the war, such incidents as the following were comparatively unnoticed, and left to be long afterward related in print: Miss Annie Pickens, daughter of the Governor of South Carolina, was to be married on April 22, 1863, in Charleston, to Lieut. Andrew De Rochelle. The wedding party was assembled in the Pickens residence, and the clergyman was asking the bride if she was ready, when a shell from a Union gun in the harbor broke into the room and burst. Nine persons were hurt, but only Miss Pickens' wound proved mortal. She bore the pain with wonderful fortitude, and was unmoved when informed that she had only an hour or two to live. De Rochelle said that he would like to have her die his wife, and the poor girl smiled sadly in assent. The guests remember the scene as far more pitiful than they can describe. The bride lay on a sofa, with her white dress dabbled in blood and her hair dishevelled, while her pallid face was so wrung with agony that her efforts to smile became futile. The ceremony was hurriedly performed, though the bride's "Yes," was in a faint, labored whisper, and her lips hardly moved in response to her husband's kiss. She died immediately afterward.

THE STATUE OF MEMNON.

At a place called Koum-el-Sultan, situated on the plains of Thebes, on the western bank of the river Nile, there stands two gigantic statues, or colossi, representing the Egyptian monarch, Amenophis III., of the eighteenth dynasty, seated on his throne, his name and titles being inscribed upon them. The northermost of these statues—each of which is said to have been originally sixty feet high—instead of being associated with the sovereign whose name it bore, came to be called by the ancient Greeks the statue of Memnon — said to have been a celebrated hero who fought bravely at Troy, and was slain by either Ajax or Achilles—and as such it is still known. A remarkable peculiarity of the statue in former days was that at certain times, when it was first struck by the rays of the rising sun, sounds were emitted from it, which appeared to resemble the breaking of a harp-string or a metallic ring. There have been various suppositions formed to account for these curious noises, but no satisfactory explanation can be found in regard to them. The celebrated traveller, Humboldt, has stated that in certain granite rocks on the bank of the river Orinoco, South America, musical notes were produced at sunrise, owing to the escape of confined air from their numerous crevices, and the sounds from the statue, which is also composed of granite, may have originated from the same cause.

AN OWL AT SEA.

The White Star steamship Celtic, which arrived from Liverpool a few days since, brought a strange passenger who boarded that vessel in mid-ocean. A large white owl dropped on one of the forward spars in an exhausted condition one evening when the vessel was about 800 miles off the coast of Newfoundland. When brought to the deck by the sailor the owl was found to be nearly dead from cold and hunger, and almost to weak to eat. It had become greatly emaciated, and trembled violently in endeavoring to swallow the first morsel of meat which was placed in its beak. The owl slowly recovered, and is now perfectly well. It is a land bird, and is supposed to have been blown off the coast of Newfoundland by the westerly gales which had for some days previous prevailed there. Finding itself once out at sea it had probably ceased making efforts to reach the land, and had drifted before the gale, its only efforts being to keep above water. The bird must have possessed remarkable powers of endurance, the officers say, to have kept up so long. The Celtic's owl, which is now quite tame, measures nearly five feet from wing to wing, and is white with the exception of a few small specks of dark color. It will probably live for some time to come on board the vessel which it selected as its home while in mid-ocean.

The Isle of Patmos.

The name of this island, writes the Rev. Thomas A. T. Hanna, in one of our exchanges, would never have been heard beyond the archipelago in which it stands, if John had not been banished thither. Some prisons are famous, as it were, in themselves; that is by a long succession of illustrious prisoners they have a great part in history. The Mamertine, in Rome, the Wells of Venice, the Bastile in Paris, the Tower of London are of this kind. There are other places not originally meant for prisons, which have become famous by some one illustrious captive. So, the rock of Masada, where the Jewish zealots slew themselves to escape the vengeance of the Romans. So, the Isle of Sainte Marguerite, where languished the Man with the Iron Mask. So, the Castle of Chillon is renowned for Bonivard alone. So, the obscure fastness in Austria, where Richard of England was for a time eating his lion-heart away. Such was Wartburgh Castle, where God's providence allowed Luther to be imprisoned, that he might have leisure to translate the Scripture for all German folk. And though Bedford Gaol was a gaol, it would hardly emerge into the atmosphere of history till John Bunyan spends his twelve years there. The rock of St. Helena would be little heard of as its keeper, Ascension Island, but for that mighty Shade, "the conqueror and the captive of the earth" who spent his last six years there. Thus "the isle that is called Patmos" has no record whatever in history, save that it became the place of exile for a persecuted apostle of the Lamb. And we may note that the inspired John makes no reference whatever to any of his sufferings during his banishment. What unearthly dignity and continence is this! Here are no sighs and wailings over human injustice and the hard lot of the exile. How different from other exiles! The poet Ovid was banished among barbarians because of his immoral poetry. He takes up his guilty harp to mourn in doleful strains on his pitiful plight among a cruel and savage people. Silvio Pellico is immurred for political offences, and he makes the world sympathize with him by his pensive thoughts in "My Prison." But John has a mind lifted up above itself. The Spirit of Christ that was in him deigned not to make mention of his trials. "His mind to him a kingdom was." Patmos was a cheerless rock, but it was enough to stand upon. He could stand there and see all space and all time unrolled before him. He was shut out from the society of earth, but he "looked, and behold a door was opened in heaven." As Daniel, the exile, kept his window open toward Jerusalem, John had a spirit divinely lighted, and a window in it opened toward the Jerusalem above.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the reconstruction of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

SELECTIONS.

[The Age to Come Herald.]

Dunphy's Palestine Journal.

AROUND JERUSALEM.

The Psalmist says: "Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following." Psa. xlviii. 12, 13.

This was said of Zion in the days of her glory. She is in gloom now. Calling to mind this text, I thought I would walk around the present walls of Jerusalem. So passing out of the Jaffa gate, I took a northerly direction up the west side of the city, and turning to my right toward the east, passed the Damascus gate on the north side, and turning to my right again at the north-east corner of the city wall, I passed St. Stephen's gate, and further down the Eastern, or Golden gate, now walled up, having the valley of Jehoshaphat and the Brook Kedron on my left. At the south-east corner of the wall, I turned again to my right, traveling west to the south-west corner, with the Valley of Hinnom now on my left; and thence up the west side to the starting point, at the Jaffa gate, making the entire circuit in an hour and eight minutes. From this you may learn one thing, at least, that there is nothing to prevent traveling around the walls of Jerusalem.

STAGING BETWEEN JAFFA AND JERUSALEM.

There is a daily stage between Jaffa and Jerusalem—fare one dollar. The carriages resemble a common-sized open express wagon, with three seats, accommodating six persons—five besides the driver. The baggage is crowded under the seats, allowing the passengers no room for their feet, except on top of the baggage. There they sit, cramped up, riding over the rough roads, with their heads sometimes resting between their knees, which makes it anything but comfortable riding. But notwithstanding the bad roads and the uncomfortable position of the passengers, they are driven at a fearful rate down the mountains. The carriage is drawn by three horses abreast, quite thin in flesh, on account of hard work and scanty feed. The harnesses are made of ropes and leather. The traces are small ropes, which appear to me to be too small to be safe.

WATER.

The people in and around Jerusalem depend mostly upon rain water, as there are no wells in Jerusalem, except one in the Harom grounds, and not many in the vicinity of it. There is a well in the valley of Jehoshaphat, called "Joab's well;" it is very deep, and has living water. There is also what is called the "Virgin's Fountain," further up the valley to the north, which feeds the Pool of Siloam, and may also feed Joab's well.

These, the Virgin's Fountain, Pool of Siloam, Joab's well, and the wall in the Harom grounds, contain the only living water near Jerusalem now known. But it is not all that some day will be known; for the prophet has said: "A fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the Valley of Shittim." (Joel iii. 18,) which is the valley of the Dead Sea.

Again, when the prophet Zechariah is speaking of the future glory of Jerusalem, he says: "And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be." Zech. xiv. 8. The streams then will not become dry in summer, as they do at the present time.

Ezekiel and the Revelation both speak of this water. Then there will be no water famine in Jerusalem; nor a famine of any kind; neither sickness. By the flowing of the east river into the Dead Sea, its water will be healed and produce an abundance of fish. And the fruit of the trees on the banks of this river shall yield such an abundance of food monthly that it cannot be consumed; while their leaves shall be for medicine. Ezek. xlvii. and Rev. xxii.

This season the peasants have brought a great deal of water from the Virgin's Fountain and Pool of Siloam, because of the dry season. This water is sweet and good. So also is the rain water. I am informed that in many places in the country, water can be obtained by digging, as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob obtained it.

The Pool of Siloam is fifty feet long by twenty in width, and about twelve feet deep. The stream which feeds it from the Virgin's Fountain is only about two feet in width. The outlet is into the king's gardens, where vegetation is always green. The water of this pool, of which I often drink, has a peculiarly sweet taste. It, of course, all comes from the Virgin's Fountain, about one-fourth of a mile above, which is never dry.

There is something very peculiar about this Virgin's Fountain. There are thirty-one steps of ten inches each, upon an average, which makes over twenty-five feet down to the water's edge. Irrespective of a wet or dry time, there is not always the same amount or water flowing from it. It rises and falls every twenty-four hours, hence the flow is greater in the afternoon and evening than in the morning, when a current is hardly perceptible down at the Pool of Siloam.

I visited this fountain on the 5th of January; and as I stood upon the lower step, slaking my thirst, suddenly the water rose a foot in less than half a minute. What causes this no one knows. It came gurgling up from some unknown subterraneous passage. The Arabs attribute this phenomena to a dragon, and hence do not draw water after dark.

Joab's Well is some distance down the Valley of Kedron, below the fountain and the Pool, and is very deep. I think at least it is one hundred and twenty-five feet below the surface, and is never dry.

THE INTERIOR OF JERUSALEM.

Jerusalem, it will be remembered, is built upon four hills or mountains, namely, Moriah, Zion, Akra and Bezetha. It is also divided into four sections by its different peoples, or religions, namely, Christian, Armenian, Jewish and Mohammedan. The Christians occupy the north-west corner, the Armenians the south-west, the Jews the south, and the Mohammedans all the east side, being nearly or quite one-half of the whole city within the walls.

There are some important buildings in the Christian division—the Greek Convent, the Holy Sepulchre, Hospital of the Knights of St. John, House of Industry, and the Mediterranean Hotel. The Jews have their synagogue, hospital, etc. In the Armenian quarters is El-Kulah, (the citadel,) the Convent of St. James, beautiful colleges, and the English chapel. In this chapel, English services are held every Sunday forenoon and evening, and German services in the afternoon. The Mohammedan part of the city is the most interesting and important of all, because it contains the temple grounds—the dwelling-place of God on earth.

An interesting account of the commencement of the worship of God upon this mountain is given in 2d Samuel, 24th chapter, and 1st Chronicles, 21st chapter. The anger of the Lord, it appears, was kindled against Israel, and by Satan he provoked David to number them. Before the work was finished by Joab, the prophet Gad was sent to the king for him to choose either three years famine, or three months to be destroyed before his foes, or three days pestilence from the Lord. David wisely chose to fall into the hand of the Lord. The destroying angel was sent through the land, and after the slaughter of seventy thousand men, he came to Jerusalem and "stood by the threshing floor of Ornan, the Jebusite," which, it is supposed, was the identical rock now under the dome of the Mosque of Omar. Here the angel was commanded to stay his hand; and David was told to set up an altar here and offer sacrifices to God. Ornan at the time was threshing wheat, and David bought the place, with the oxen for burnt offerings, the threshing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat offering, for six hundred shekels of gold, and offered sacrifices to God, and called upon the Lord; and the Lord answered him by fire from heaven. Afterwards, David offered sacrifices here, and made preparations for the temple which Solomon built. "Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem in Mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite." 2 Chron. iii. 1.

This temple was more costly, magnificent and glorious, than any that has since been erected upon the earth, or that can be erected, until the future temple is rebuilt upon this very mountain. This, too, was evidently the place where Abraham offered Isaac. When we consider what has taken place here since Abraham's day, and then look forward to the fulfillment of the immutable promises of Jehovah concerning this place, what spot can be more enchanting? Here the Lord will suddenly come to his temple, after it has been rebuilt. Here, "in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things." "And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations." Isa. xxv.

On the last day of December, 1879, I had the pleasure of visiting this place in company with two American gentlemen. When we came to the door of the Mosque, we were obliged to take off our shoes. The interior is richly adorned and very beautiful. Many things were interesting to me, especially the rock of the dome, supposed to be Ornan's old threshing-floor, (at least near it.) David's place of sacrificing, and where Abraham received the oath-covenant—"in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

There is a large hole through the centre of this rock, and a cavern beneath it. Into this cavern we descended by steps. It is said Mohammed prayed here, and the cavern not being high enough for him to stand erect, his head caused an indentation in the rock above. When he went to heaven, they say he ascended through the hole in this rock. The Mosque of Omar is the finest building in Jerusalem.

The world will be astonished if it should ere long be demonstrated that this fine building is not the real Mosque of Omar, after all, but that it was erected by Constantine the Great, instead of Omar, over the tomb of Christ. It may yet be found that there is room enough south of this building for the ancient temples erected by Solomon, Zerubbabel, and Herod; and that this hill of Moriah, where Abraham offered Isaac, is the true Mount Zion, the place of the crucifixion, burial and resurrection of our Lord, as well as the true location of the house which is to be his dwelling place forever.

To the south of this building, and near the south wall of the city, is a smaller mosque, called El Aksa. May not this be the real Mosque of Omar? This mosque is very plain inside. Doves were flying around in the building, and a Mohammedan was praying with his face to the south, towards Mecca. To the east of this Mosque and the garden gate, at the southeast corner of the city wall, are Solomon's stables. On account of the deep snow, we did not visit these stables, nor the Golden Gate, which is now walled up and cannot be opened, the Mohammedans say, until the day of judgment, which I hope will soon come.

Near St. Stephen's Gate, and to the north of the Harom grounds, is the Pool of Bethesda. Mention is made of this in St. John's Gospel: "Now there is at Jerusalem, by the sheep market, a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue, Bethesda, having five porches. In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water. For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water; whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in, was made whole of whatsoever disease he had."

It would not be safe for an angel to trouble the waters of this pool at the present time, unless the Lord wished to afflict the inhabitants with a plague; for it is in a sad condition, being filled with dirt and filth and waste-water from the city, which makes it a real cess-pool. It is, however, a very large pool.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, so called, is filled with pictures, images and wax candles. Many pilgrims, both Greeks and Latins, come here to visit and worship. They go in flocks to the church and are very devoted. Here they are shown the very spot, as it is claimed, where the cross of Christ was erected, and where the two thieves were crucified with him; also where the Centurion stood when he said, "Truly this man was the Son of God." Mark xv. 39. They even point out the place where the women stood, "Beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto him; among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Joses; and the mother of Zebedee's children." Matt. xxvii. 55, 56. Here they claim to show the identical sepulchre where Christ laid three days and three nights in the heart of the earth; also the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus, the place where the crosses were found, and where Helena sat when they were discovered. There is an image here designed to represent the Virgin Mary, covered with diamonds, watches, rings, and jewelry of various kinds, too numerous to mention. One finger, I noticed, was completely covered with rings. This jewelry has all been presented to the Virgin by visitors. In front of the sepulchre is a large open space, paved with flat stones from one to two feet square. Here tradesmen congregate to sell beads, crosses, etc., to pilgrims and visitors. There are some very substantial buildings in Jerusalem, and some are very old and ready to topple over. The streets and lanes are crooked and narrow, roughly paved and exceedingly filthy. Two or three streets running north and south at the foot of David street, are arched over nearly the whole length, and hence are very dark, and at the present time they are full of mud and water, as they are not paved. Notwithstanding this, there is considerable trade in these streets, in meats, dry goods, tinware and many other articles. On the whole, Jerusalem is in a wretched condition. On the south side, near the Zion Gate, it is filled up with dirt and filth level with the top of the wall. And still it comes. Dirt and filth from some other parts of the city is continually being brought and deposited here, inside of the wall. Sanitary regulations are very poor here, as animal and vegetable matter is allowed to remain in the streets until it consumes away. If the cities of America were as filthy, the people would die off like flies. I have not seen but two streets which are kept decently clean—David and Christian streets. These streets are swept every day; but the others are not only dirty, but filthy, and some of them exceedingly so. But I am told they are kept cleaner now than formerly. Even this is encouraging, and ominous of better days in Jerusalem. If the city was not in a more healthy locality than most cities on the globe, I think it would be very sickly here; but the good pure air of this God-chosen land, circulating among these hills, neutralizes the poison arising from the putrid matter, so indifferently permitted to remain in the streets, in the pools and vaults; hence there is not much sickness.

David street, which leads from the Jaffa Gate, in an easterly direction down the north slope of Mount Zion, is the widest at the west end, near the gate. It is unevenly paved with stone of all kinds, shapes and sizes, many of them being flinty, and consequently very slippery. The sidewalks, where there are any, are from two to three feet wide. As we go down the street, the first building of importance is the Mediterranean Hotel, kept by the proprietor, Mr. Moses Hornstein. Opposite is the office of Mr. Wilson, the American consul. This end of the street is generally full of street venders and Arab women, who bring in their produce from the country and sell it in the open air. Further down, toward the east end of the street, are many shops or bazaars of various kinds—groceries, dry goods and money exchanges; also a grain market. The best shops are kept by the Jews.

The population of Jerusalem, in and outside of the walls, is 40,000 inhabitants, 13,000 of these being Jews. One-fourth of the whole population are outside of the walls; the majority being Jews. Twenty-eight languages are spoken here, and two small sheets, called "newspapers," are printed in Hebrew. No papers are printed here in the English language.

The weather has been very cold and disagreeable here for the past few weeks. Saturday, December 27th, it commenced to rain at six o'clock p. m., and continued part of the night. The next day the wind blew severely all day, with thick, heavy black clouds, and frequent rains. I felt the wind very much in the afternoon, as I was taking a walk over the Mount of Olives to Bethany. Climbing near the summit of the Mount, the wind came near taking me off my feet several times. Some of the trees were in blossom near to Bethany, and I plucked a few of them. Did not remain long, as the weather looked threatening, but started on a run for Jerusalem to escape the rain. It overtook me, however, and I ran to a cave for shelter, as there are many of them here.

Sunday evening, December 28th, it commenced to snow, and continued pretty much all night. Monday morning the snow was five and a half inches deep. It continued to snow part of the day and night, and also part of Tuesday. In the middle of the forenoon there were fifteen inches of snow near the Jaffa Gate. There was an earthquake at twelve o'clock. The natives, many of them, were plodding through the snow with bare feet and bare legs; nothing to protect them from the cold. The lepers, and many other beggars, were sitting in the snow, which was a foot deep, with their legs curled up under them, without a particle of clothing to cover their legs and feet.

Many people, and some very aged, do not recollect of such a severe snow storm in Jerusalem. The Mountains of Moab could be seen distinctly, covered with snow. But it has now disappeared, and we are having continued rains. I am of the opinion that the Catholics chose the wrong season of the year for the birth of Christ—rather too cold for the shepherds to be out feeding their flock on the 26th of December, unless the climate has changed since that time. On the 24th of December I visited the tomb of Rachel, which is about a mile from Bethlehem, where Christ was born, and the weather was very cold. On the 27th, I was at Bethlehem, the birth-place of Christ, and had a view of the supposed shepherd's field, but could see no one watching their flocks. In this eastern country, flocks are out at this season of the year through the night, but are sheltered from the storms.

Many traditional ideas, no doubt, are wrong, but they will all be righted in due time. We have now entered upon the year 1880. So I will close by wishing all the readers of the Herald a Happy New Year. More anon.—Wm. W. Doughty, Jerusalem, Palestine, Syria, Jan. 7, 1880.

The Bible is True.

At Babylon, Col. Rawlinson found the very hunting diary of Nebuchadnezzar! In it here and there are portraits of the old king's dogs sketched by himself, and underneath is written the king's name. It is wonderful. But the most wonderful of all is that in the diary he records that he had been very ill, and in the delirium of his sickness he thought he had been out to graze like the beasts of the field! Now read God's Book (Dan. iv: 32 and on). It says he did thus go out senseless and beast-like to eat grass seven times (years). And to think that twenty-five hundred years afterward, as if to sternly rebuke unbelief of the Holy Word, the clay plates excavated from the ruins of the king's ancient capital should confirm this old book of the prophet Daniel. Brethren, cling to the Bible. Let its pages be more and more sacred as the years decline. It is the Book of God.—D. T. T.

BREVITIES.

Prince Gurousseff, Russian Secretary of State, is engaged on a scheme for introducing the Gregorian Calendar into Russia.

Last winter Lake Thrasymene, on the banks of which Hannibal fought the old Romans, was entirely frozen over for the first time in this century.

The St. Gothard tunnel was completed in less than seven years—that is, half the time consumed in piercing the Mount Cenis, which it exceeds in length by 2,700 metres.

The question of the creation of an international postage stamp is now being examined in France and Belgium. Besides its other advantages, it would be very serviceable for the transmission of small sums.

Signor Denza of the Moncalieri Observatory points out the coincidence of a shock of earthquake in Lombardy and Piedmont on Feb. 9, with the great activity of Ætna the same day, and an eruption of a volcano in San Domingo.

To convince his Mohammedan neighbors of his friendly feeling, the Czar has granted them permission to erect a mosque at St. Petersburg. It will be situated in the central part of the city, near the Newski Perspective in Tolerance street, where there are already a number of edifices belonging to religions tolerated nowhere else in the empire.

DENVER, Col., March 8.—The Rocky Mountain Courier, of Green River, Wy. T., gives an account of an active volcano near Brown's Park. The crater is five feet in diameter, and emitting a sulphurous smoke; no lava yet.

According to Herr von Puttkammer, the Prussian Minister of Education, there has been a steady increase of crime and immorality in the great towns of Germany during the last ten years; and the Minister declared in Parliament the other day that this unsatisfactory state of things had not been without effect on the teachers of elementary schools, except in Berlin. This was to be attributed in a considerable measure to the increased facilities for drinking, which had been provided by recent legislation, and which had injuriously affected large sections of the community.

PERU'S HUMILIATION.

Peru has been badly used up by the foolish war in which she has been engaged with Chili. The object of her alliance with Bolivia, already quarreling with Chili about the possession of some nitrate beds, was to drive Chili off and get a monopoly of the nitrate works which belong to Chilians. The result of the conflict, which commenced last April, is that Chili has destroyed the Peruvian navy, vanquished the Peruvian and Bolivian armies on land, and obtained possession of the whole nitrate regions of Bolivia and Peru, and Chilians have entered upon the work of developing these resources under the protection of the Chilian flag.

REMARKABLE GIANTS.

The teeth and bones of the fossil elephants found in Europe were assigned in the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries to giants, and many are the stories which were commonly reported about them—as, for example, that of the giant of Dauphine, in the reign of Louis XIV. His remains were discovered by a surgeon, who stated that they were enclosed in an enormous sepulchre covered with a stone slab, bearing the inscription Teutobochus rex; and that in the vicinity there was also found coins or medals, all of which showed the remains to be those of a giant king of the Cimbri, who fought against Marius. However, the original owner of these bones, though not of the coins, was proved to have been an elephant. The story of Teutobochus is even excelled by that of another giant, called the giant of Lucerne, whose remains when dug up were examined by a celebrated Professor of Basle, who described them as of human origin, and was skilful enough to put them together so as to resemble a giant no less than twenty-six feet high. For some time the deluded people of Lucerne paid homage to this Elephantine prodigy, until the scales were removed from their eyes by Blumenbach, who pronounced to their astonished senses that the giant, as it lay in state at the Jesuits' College, was but the skeleton of an elephant.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 17, 1880.

In our present issue will be found an article written for the Age to Come Herald, entitled Doughty's Palestine Journal, and which we republish from that paper. In our next we will give the continuation of this extremely interesting correspondence. As the writer's expenses are met by friends in America, it may become both our privilege and duty to bear a part. More hereafter, when we shall have correspondence with some at the east.

We translate the following from the Stimme der Wahrheit, an exchange in the German language, and give it to our readers as a curious forboding of trouble in this momentous decade into which we have just entered. The extract reads thus:

"There is an ancient prophecy to be found on a stone-slab in the church of Overemmel on the Saale to this purport:

Quando Marcus Pascha dabit
Et Antonius Pentecosten celebrabit
Et Johannes Christum adorabit,
Totus Mundus clamabit.

Anglicised—When Easter shall occur on Mark's day, (April 25), and Pentecost on Antony's day, (June 13), and Corpus-Christi on John's day, (June 24), then all the world will wail.

This takes place in 1886. The historian, Gervinus, has set the eighties (a decade) as the years when terrible popular tumults may be expected to take place."

THE following is from a late number of the Manchester Guardian sent us by Bro. H. Heyes from England. It shows that some in the higher stations of life, in that country, are interested in the subject of the approaching end of the age:

Although Mr. Pearsall Smith was disowned in a somewhat summary fashion by the extreme left of the Evangelical party, and returned to the United States a wiser, if perhaps a sadder man, several of his whilom adherents are still on the alert, and are at the present time holding services and meetings in London at which addresses are delivered in view of the near approach of the end of the world. Laymen and clergymen are intermingled in the list of preachers and speakers, among the former being Lord Radstock and Mr. Stephenson Blackwood, (financial secretary to the post-office, and husband of the Dowager Duchess of Manchester), and among the latter Mr. Nevill Sherbrooke, the Lord Chancellor's son-in-law, a former officer in the army. Bishop Maclagan's successor at Kensington, Mr. Carr Glynn, has lent his church to the movement, and the gatherings are held alternately at churches and lecture-rooms.

To the kindness of Bro. Heyes we are indebted for a number of the London Times containing a remarkable article entitled The Empire of the Hittites which we will try to give in full in some future number of THE RESTITUTION. Perhaps in our next issue.

Stumbling Stones.

There are a great many stumbling stones in the pathway of the child of God. God uses these to try what stuff he is made of. Sometimes a cloud is hung before his eyes, so that he cannot see a hand's-breadth before him. His feet must be set forward in the darkness. His heart is full of fears. He is "the reproach of the foolish." His enemies are strong, and "they that hate him wrongfully, are multiplied." Trouble assails him, and "his eyes are consumed with grief," but, if he be loyal, to him to whom he has sworn allegiance, he takes the steps, he moves onward, "seeking the Lord," doing all that his hand findeth to do, and is heard of the Lord, delivered from his fears and saved out of all his troubles.

Sometimes in going out to teach others the way of life he is left of his brethren to fight the battle alone. They do not hold up his hands. They give him no words of cheer. They meet him not in the prayer-circle. They stop by the way and refuse to help at the work, because some one else will not move. They are stumbling stones in his way, but he hears the Master saying, "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord," and his light is still held aloft, the word of life still sounded out, though he can see no interest manifested by the perishing, gathers no sheaves as the result of his labors. He knows that this is often the Lord's way of dealing with his children, and that by and by the seed he is sowing, will spring up and grow into a bountiful harvest. He has heard the command—"Go, work in my vineyard," and, whatsoever be the result, he has only to obey. How his soul exults in God, when, after years of waiting, the truth is seen to triumph! When the clouds are lifted, the halting ones brought back, and the perish ones gathered into the fold! How glad he feels that he pressed on when all was dark, and when no help seemed near! How great is now his reward.

But, there are times when the child of God wants his own way in doing good, and if he cannot have all that he seems to need to spend for the poor and for the cause of truth, he is tempted to give up the ship and let it drift. "Everything," he thinks, "will go by the board." "The truth will suffer and the poor will want for bread." He forgets for the time being, that all is in God's hands, that there is no lack with him, and that, so long as what he does give, is used for his glory, and with right motives, enough will be sent.

Oh, what bitter tears have been shed over this one thing!—the warm, impulsive heart longing to lay its blessed stores at the feet of earth's sorrowful children and the purse-empty; all the burning emotions of the Christian's being, yearning over earth's heavy-laden ones, and no way to reach, or bring them into the fold, no means wherewith to pay the evangels of truth! Little ones, remember, when you feel like this, that God only asks you to do all you can.

"When you cannot give your millions,
You can give the widow's mite,
And the least you do for Jesus,
Will be precious in his sight."

If you cannot give at all, you can pray; you can ask God to open his store-house by putting it into some other heart to make up what is lacking with you. If you cannot pay others to tell of the love of Jesus, you can go out and tell the blessed story yourselves. God puts these stumbling stones in your way to draw out what is needed to be drawn out in you. He will only give you just so much of this world's goods—that you may be taught the grace of self-denial—he will not allow you to be helped too much—that you may learn to lean on him—he will not give the fruit of your labor too quickly, lest you should boast in your own strength,—he will not send others to teach the way of salvation, because it is your duty to hold up the light.

"Commit your way unto the Lord and he will give you the desire of your heart." Work on, pray on, give on, trust on, and the stumbling-stones will get out of the way.

The Three Questions.

Is Christ divided?
Was Paul crucified for you?
Or were you baptized in the name of Paul? 1 Cor. xi, 13.

Why does Paul ask these three questions? but, to set clearly before his brethren the only head or leader of all Christians, having all power in heaven and earth. But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ, xi. 12. Therefore let no man glory in men for all things are yours, iii. 21, and they all come through Christ, "Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption," i. 30. "He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord." Is Christ divided? Have you four Christs? four religious heads? calling for four parties. Now I beseech you brethren by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, (that great name which is above every name in heaven or on earth,) that you all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you. How can you look down upon me and my fellow apostles and give us the glory, rather look up to the son of righteousness and give him all the glory.

Get away from me, with your glory, and give all to my blessed Master, who has died for you! Don't give a part of the honor to me and some to Cephas, and a portion to Apolos, and the remainder to Christ. Shame, yes shame, on that man who will take any of the glory from Jesus and give it to men. "You are carnal and walk as men." They give the glory to men. Was Paul crucified for you? or were you baptized in the name of Paul? Am I the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world.

Again have you been baptized into my death, Rom. vi. 3. In my name and thus acknowledged me as the Lord and the Christ, your Head and Leader. I have done nothing to entitle me to such a consideration. I have not atoned for your sins, and you have done nothing on your part to make me regard you as my disciples, and, as these two indispensible conditions of discipleship are wanting in my case, I deny the relation, you are not Paulites, or of Paul. Now it is as clear as the noon-day sun, that this argument of Paul's cuts off every claim but one, that of Christ. Away goes the Christ dishonoring. Claim no Paulites, no Apolosites, no Cephasites all Christites or Christians. Mark you the above interrogative argument, including the two acts one on the part of Christ and one on their part forms the basis of the relation to the Christ, remove these and the relation cannot exist. Just here then we state, fearless of contradiction, that no man can say that he is a Christian or of Christ until he has been baptized in his name. "His servants you are to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey." . . "But you have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered you, being then made free from sin you became the servants of righteousness." Rom. vi. 16, 17, 18. No man can be the servant of Christ until he obeys that form of doctrine, or is baptized. Ah! But says one did not Paul thank God that he had baptized but a few, and don't that prove that baptism is of little or no account? We will now look this argument right in the face. Mark the Apostle does not thank God that only a few had been baptized, nor does he say because baptism was of no importance, but lest they should say he baptized in his own name. So transcendantly great was the name of Christ or Jesus, in which it was done, and so deserving was he of all honor and glory, that Paul thanked God that he had baptized but few of them. Lest they should say he baptized in his own (little) name, and thus make the great best act of loyalty and discipleship to Jesus depend only upon human authority and give all glory to man, Paul was a wise master builder or chief architect, 1 Cor. iii. 10, and like other master builders laid but few stones into the building with his own hands. He "laid the foundation and another built thereon;" and he cautioned and directed. No doubt prepared many "a lively stone" that he never saw put into the building, it was handed over to some one of his co-laborers physically stronger than he, and went on preaching the gospel which he was sent to do.

How weak then must that head be or how wicked that heart, which says Paul thanked God that he baptized no more because it was of no importance. Thus making the Apostle utter a falsehood by saying that he thanked God that he baptized no more, lest they should be baptized in his own name, when really it was because baptism was of no importance. Indeed gross darkness must blind the eyes, that can't see the three great names that are engraven upon the institution of baptism, a divine guarantee of importance, who but a man veiled by a false theory could fail to see greatness. Christ said whosoever sweareth by the altar sweareth by it, and by all things therein, Matt. xxiii, 20. And no doubt that poor wicked mortal, who speaks against baptism will be found guilty of speaking against the three great names by whose united authority it is administered. Yea guilty of berating the three greatest names that ever entered the heart of man, by blaspheming the institution of baptism. But says another who wants to set baptism at naught as one of the conditions of salvation. Paul was sent to save men and was not sent to baptize, therefor baptism can't be essential to salvation. The converse to the above argument runs thus. If Paul who was sent to save men, had been sent to baptize, baptism would have been essential to salvation.

We will now give you, (taking you on your own ground), twelve for one, the twelve apostles were sent to baptize the nations. Matt. xxviii. 16, and to save them, therefore baptism is not essential to salvation. Your argument is now defeated; it proves too much for you. Suppose a king should send his great general to conquer or destroy his enemies, by commanding his army, and he should order batteries to be planted before the camp of his enemies, and one of his cunning captains to whom the order was given should say plant them yourself. Did not the king send you to destroy his enemies, and in reply the general shall say, the king sent me not to plant batteries with my own hands but to command others to do it, and to destroy his enemies. In return the shrewd captain says. If the king sent you to destroy his enemies and did not send you to plant batteries or fire guns with your own hands, it is not necessary that a battery should be planted or a gun fired. What would you think of such logic. Paul was sent to teach baptism and was baptized himself. That he taught baptism is clear from the history of the conversion of Lydia, the jailor, and others. The apostles all preached the same gospel, and that gospel required faith, repentance and baptism. How vain the logic of that man who affirms, that because the great teacher and apostle of the Gentiles was not sent to administer baptism with his own hands, therefor baptism is non-essential.

We will now say in conclusion if any man can, or thinks he can make any passages in the New Testament disprove baptism, let him send arguments and we will look at them in reply. The Lord will. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, is the divine commission; 1st faith, 2d baptism, 3rd salvation. Who shall alter or derange the commission.

SELECTIONS.

Progressive Revelation.

God has been pleased to make three great revelations of himself to man: his works; his word; and his Son, and these revelations have been progressive in character. Nature, the Law, the Gospel; a silent material universe, an inspired Book, a living God-man; these are the three great steps that have led from the death and darkness of sin to that knowledge of the true God which is eternal life. A fourth revelation of God, fuller and more perfect than any, is yet to come. The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, who is the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person, who "declared him" when he came the first time in grace and humiliation, will declare him yet more fully when he comes a second time in righteousness and in glory.

Then the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Each of these revelations is in itself progressive. The earth and all that is therein, attained perfection by six distinct stages, during the six days of creation. The angels followed with adoring wonder the fresh unfoldings of Divine wisdom, goodness, and power, presented in the gradual formation of this great globe, and in its myriad mysteries of vegetable and animal life, though to human eyes nature was presented perfect and complete. But human eyes could see at first the surface of things alone; every advance, in true science, enabling men to penetrate more deeply into the hidden wisdom of the work of God, has been a progressive revelation. And we have only begun, even now, to understand the glory of God, manifested in the universe. To us, more than to our ancestors, the heavens declare the glory of God, and the earth showeth his handiwork; and to our children they will do so even more.

The Word of God is also a progressive revelation, and so has been the Providence recorded in that Word.

The Bible is composed of sixty-three different books, written by forty various authors, during a period of 1600 years. The sacred writings develop a revelation which was continually unfolding itself through all those years; and close with a book bearing the divinely given title of "The Revelation of Jesus Christ."

The third revelation of God, that afforded by the person and work of our Blessed Lord Jesus Christ, was also progressive. The mere fact of his birth and existence in the midst of a world of sinners, was in itself an evidence of God's love to a guilty race. Each word he spoke, each act he performed, each day he lived, unfolded more and more of God. They who saw him saw the Father, for he was his express image; and not until he, the maker and judge of all, was exposed on the cursed tree, not till from his riven side flowed the water and the blood, not till he bowed his head and gave up the ghost, never till then, was the heart of God fully unveiled: "hereby perceive we the love of God."

And it will be the same in the future; for since finite man is destined through boundless mercy to an eternal advance in the knowledge of the infinite God, that knowledge must needs be vouchsafed in progressive revelations, and adapted to man's ability to receive them. And herein will lie one of the joys of heaven, to be ever learning more of him, who is the truth, and from him, of all things.

H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Lost Arts.

It is quite a natural question that has been asked: How have certain arts known to the ancients become lost? The answer lies in the custom of imitating a genuine article by one which costs less. Some man substitutes a cheap ingredient for a costly one and produces an article so nearly like the genuine as to pass for it, and this imitation wins its way and supplants the genuine, because it can be bought for less and there is more profit in making it. Adulteration in other ingredients follows, and after a few turns of the wheel, the original is wholly lost and forgotten. So it has been with the "lost arts" the world over. It has not been from a lack of intelligence or from forgetfulness merely, but from adulteration, avarice, deceit, sin.

There is danger that pure and undefiled religion may fall into the list of "lost arts" if we allow ourselves to rely upon the outward appearance at all. The genuine is and always will be counterfeited, and the richer and better the genuine, the more counterfeits will there be. But there is one way, and only one, in which every man may be sure that he has the genuine; that is, to get his inspiration direct from Jesus our exemplar and teacher. If we depend upon others for our copy, adulteration will necessarily follow, because they are human, and there will be grave danger that to us pure religion of the soul will have become lost.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Moments of triumph are not always moments of happiness.

Words tell us what we should be; deeds tells us what we are.

Some hearts, like evening primroses, open most beautifully in the shadows of life.

It is not till the thoughts can find rest in nothing but God, that a man is drawn close to God himself and becomes his.

It is wonderful what strength and boldness of purpose and energy of will come from the feeling that we are in the way of duty.

Remember, if the night came on
Before we reached the haven,
We would not halt with unbroken eye
The coming of the dawn.
And if but one was lost one soul
Of many straying late,
We not, to cross, look upon our way,
And love our time-mates.

Many persons regard the formation of their character as a process scarcely begun, and to be completed at a far-distant day, when lo! they have already crystallized into their permanent type. Every day brings its tests and makes its impress. Each twenty-four hours is a part of eternity—one link in an endless chain. Then take care of to-day.—Christian Advocate, South.

If we are in human blindness,
And forget that we are dust;
If we mike the Law of Kindness
When we struggle to be just;
Snowy wings of peace shall cover
All the pain that clouds our way.
When the weary watch is over,
And the night has cleared away.

No man can reject the Divine testimony concerning Christ, when fairly and fully presented to him, without thereby inflicting immediate damage on his whole inward life—without, in fact, becoming, whatever appearances there may be to the contrary, a worse man as well as a guiltier man than he was before.—Little.

What kind of a man ought you to be? Such a man, that when you have passed away from earth, your son can say of you, in all sincerity, as Thomas Carlyle has said of his good father: "He was a man into the corners of whose house there has shined through the years of his pilgrimage, by day and by night, the light of the glory of God; and at the last he was not, for God took him." Will your character and your home answer to that description?

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Our Father in heaven, we hallow thy name:
May thy kingdom holy on earth be the same;
O give to us daily our portion of bread,—
It is from thy bounty that all must be fed.

Forgive our transgressions, and teach us to know
That humble compassion that pardon can bestow;
Keep us from temptation, from weakness and sin,
And thine be the glory, forever, Amen.

EVERYDAY CHRISTIANITY.

Real Christianity is earnest life-work. As electricity permeates steel, so it permeates every act and department of life. It gives a vigorous impulse to every noble quality. It makes every toil honest and cheerful. It gives courage and fortitude in the midst of sorrow and affliction. Christianity is a sublime force. It makes a new man of the old. It throws meaning and grandeur into every small act of Christian duty and benevolence. It makes them tender-hearted and kind. It makes the care-worn, and weary, and afflicted patient. It makes home a holy of holies to social life. It makes the judge just, the merchant honest, the servant faithful, the student diligent, the wealthy generous, the poor industrious and cheerful, the strong watchful and helpful; it lights the heart of the dying saint with hopeful flashes of the everlasting.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

If the foundations be destroyed what can the righteous do? Psa. xi. 3.

What would you do if you woke some morn,
And knew would the morning seen,
If you found that your faith in the Son of God
Was only a midnight dream;
And knew full well in your innermost soul
There was no God on high;—
No higher court for your appeal,
No one to care for your woe or weal
Or to hear your cry?
That the city of God was only a myth,
The thought of a poet's brain;
There was no Christ for the heart's deep want,
No cure for its hunger and pain?
As you sank, and the chilling words of doubt
Were closing above your head,
You would clutch for help, and nothingness
Would be found in your grasp instead.
If all of the light and all of the love,
All that is good and true,
Should go out of your life like a wind-blown lamp,
What would you do?

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I have been so well pleased and so much interested in reading THE RESTITUTION that I don't see how I should get along without it. It is a reflector, throwing out the light from God's word, which the Psalmist says is a lamp to my feet. It has been a help to me in the arguments set forth by different ones on the subject of life and death, in forming a more just conclusion as to what the Scriptures teaches upon this point, and I would like to give a few thoughts on this point, though I do not profess to be a theologian nor a man of education, but one that loves to read the teachings of the word of God.

First, then, to the object of Christ's mission. Was it not "to save us from sin and death, and that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death?" Heb. ii. 14.

And to give life, and that we might have it more abundantly? John x. 10.

Second, our salvation is conditional, life and death is set before us. Deut. xxx. 15.

Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness. Rom. vi. 16.

Even so must the Son of Man be lifted up that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. John iii. 14-15.

And he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him. John iii. 36.

Thus teaches that "the unbeliever shall continue under a state of condemnation and death for the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, Rom. vi. 23. Nor is there any promise of eternal life given only in and through Christ. So then it is evident to my mind that if the wicked are resurrected it will not be to eternal life but "unto the resurrection of damnation." John v. 29. upon which will follow the execution of the sentence of death which will be eternal upon all who will be found in Christ. I might go on and argue and give references as proof of a conditional salvation and resurrection to eternal life, but the subject is inexhaustible, and would extend my letter to too great a length and would take more time and patience to write all that might be said than I feel to have in store at this time. I have never heard anyone of the One Faith preach, and would be glad to have the opportunity to do so, but then I have God's word and it teaches one faith, one Lord and one baptism, and his second coming without sin unto salvation; then we that shall be found in Christ will be enabled to say of death, "Where is thy sting, Oh! grave, where is thy victory?"

Editor Restitution:—Again I drop you a few lines and let you know how we are getting along. Myself and the rest of the brethren still live in the hope of the soon coming of the Lord, to rebuild again the throne of his father David which is fallen down, and we yet live in the faith that if we keep oil in our lamps and the lamps trimmed and burning that we shall be ready to meet him. We must be ready at any moment and at all times, for we read in his word that he will come as a thief in the night, and at a time when we least expect him. We have meetings here some times. Brother D. Sweeden preached at our place last Sunday evening, and I shall preach next Sunday evening at the same place, at Willow Springs. Since my last writing we have had two deaths, October 15, 1879, a son of Brother and and Sister Sweeden, of Springdale, age ten weeks, and one daughter of Brother and Sister Crunk, age 2 years and 2 months, died Feb. 26, 1880. Both funeral sermons preached by the undersigned. Text 1 Cor. xv. 21, 52 verses. We know that they are asleep in Jesus, but when he shall appear they will also appear with him in glory. May the Lord be with us all until he does appear, for then we know we shall be with him and be just like him. Truly yours in the faith.

A NEW BOOK.

A book likely to attract the attention of Bible readers is that part of the history of Egypt, by Dr. Henry Brugsch Bey, which relates to the exodus of the Israelites under Moses. It is a lecture delivered some time ago by Dr. Brugsch Bay before the Society of Orientalists in London, and has been edited by Dr. Smith, the author so popular in Scriptural and classical histories. It is the result of much study by the author, and it is asserted for it that it supports exactly the Scripture narrative, but the Scriptures has been grossly misinterpreted. The Israelites, says the Dr., did not go through the Red Sea, or any part of it, but went far north of it; the translation "Red Sea" is incorrect, and the word really means a reedy, marshy place near an arm of the Mediterranean, which the Israelites actually crossed. The author says that he can trace the daily march of the Israelites by the names given in Scripture, and that a large Persian army was once swallowed up where the Egyptian host was overwhelmed. Dr. Brugsch Bey has given every facility for study by the Viceroy of Egypt, and there are many other interesting facts which may be told. The book will appear in about three weeks.

POETRY.

On Being Asked to Give up the Bible.

J. F. WAGONER.

You have asked me to give up the costliest thing
That was ever bestowed upon man,
All the riches and pleasures this volume can bring
With the blessings in store through God's plan.

It assures the believer of unending life
And a home free from sorrow and care,
Where the dwellers untroubled by envy or strife
Live forever in harmony there.

It tells of a time when oppression shall cease,
When the just one shall rule among men,
Dispensing to all the rich blessings of peace
When war shall not trouble again.

It speaks of a kingdom where order shall reign,
Where pu-lice and truth shall bear sway,
While the blessings of peace shall forever remain
And the nations their homage shall pay.

Then why should I give up the Bible, I pray?
For nought else can you give in its stead;
You can give me of hope for the future no ray,
Nor a promise of life from the dead.

I will cling to this volume of truth while I've breath,
And strive for the blessings it offers to give;
It has supported the saints in the dark hour of death;
In the sure to come they'll eternally live.

Bible Doctrine of the Resurrection.

A. D. MACRUDER.

Brother Chaplin:—Unlike some of the brethren, including, it would seem, the editor of THE RESTITUTION, I cannot see that it is either unwise or unprofitable to pursue the further consideration in your columns of the questions, "What is the Bible Doctrine Concerning the Resurrection," "Who are to be the Subjects of Future Life, and Who Not," etc. Surely no topic is fraught with more interest and importance to us than the future destiny of our race and none occupies a more prominent place in the Divine oracles. No Christian can be injured or offended by a Scriptural inquiry into such a subject, and as THE RESTITUTION is a paper intended for Christians, and mainly sustained by Christians, it would seem to be the proper place for proofs and argument on any controverted point of Christian doctrine. For one I cannot see that any just exception can be taken to the temper and spirit in which the past discussion has been conducted. It is still true that "He that hath ears to hear should hear,"—that we should "prove all things and hold fast that which is good," should "try the spirits whether they be of God," and continue to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," and that "if any man speak not according to the law and the testimony there is no light in him." My suffrage therefore is in the spirit of the first command in the Bible, "Let there be light."

I hope you will permit me to present a summary of the results developed by what has been already published. In this review I discard all other testimony and authority on the point in dispute than that drawn directly from the Holy Scriptures. It is waste of time and space, I think, to cite the authority of great names—of scholars and theologists—"after the traditions and doctrines of men and not after Christ." By such evidence we can support the most anti-scriptural conclusions, such as the immortality of the soul, infant baptism, personal predestination, the eternal torment of sinners, and a multitude of kindred errors of sins and follies, invented by the "wise and prudent" of this Gentile age. Moses and the prophets, Jesus and the apostles are, or should be, our only guides, and when these are fairly cited and applied and any will not hear and heed them, we may safely conclude with the Great Teacher that they "would not believe though one should rise from the dead."

The discussion so far seems to have developed three phases of the question. To the interrogatory, "Who will be the subjects of the resurrection from the dead?"

1. Bro. Myers replies: "The righteous only."

2. Bro. Stephenson: "All the dead who have ever lived."

3. The writer: "The just and the unjust—the righteous and the wicked."

Which is right? That's the question, unless some brother is ready to reply "neither;" in which case I vote he shall be heard.

I. If the first proposition is right what are we to do with that large number of Scriptures which speak so plainly of another class than the "righteous only," who are to be raised or have a future life?

Without undertaking to present all the Bible testimony on that phase of the subject, I subjoin a few plain and clear passages from both Testaments, which stand opposed to theory No. 1. Premising that as we are all agreed there can be no future life to the dead except by resurrection, all texts which affirm or imply judgment or punishment after death to the wicked, are as pertinent and conclusive to prove their resurrection as if they so declared in express terms.

Psa. xxxvii.—Evil doers shall be cut off, but they that wait on the Lord shall inherit the earth,

Ib. The Lord seeth that the day of the wicked is coming.

Ib. The wicked shall perish and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs—into smoke shall they consume away. They that be cursed of him shall be cut off. The seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

Ib. The transgressors shall be destroyed together, (not one by one as in the first death but "together" which implies their gathering into one place as at their judgment day).

Ib. The end of the wicked—(that is, their final destiny) is to be cut off—to perish.

Psa. l.—The ungodly shall not stand (be acquitted or able to hold a standing) in the judgment (implying a future day of judgment) nor sinners (shall not appear) in the congregation (or gathering) of the righteous.

Prov. xi. 21.—Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished, (we know the wicked go unpunished in this life—Luke xvi. 25).

Ib. iii. 22.—But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth and the transgressors shall be rolled out of it.

Can this be done until their resurrection and judgment? The wicked dead are now buried in the earth. The word saith they shall be rooted out of it, implying their resurrection for that purpose.

Dan. xii. 2.—"Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

Here are two classes raised—the righteous and the wicked. Does not this text plainly dispose of theory No. 1? See Bro. Chaplin's recent exegesis of this chapter.

Job xiv. 12.—"Man (i. e., mankind—all men—) lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens (their present constitution) be no more, they (men) shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep."

Here a general resurrection of the human race—including surely more than the righteous only—is taught, subject to special exceptions contained in other Scriptures, So far the Old Testament—now as to the New Testament.

John v. 28.—Jesus saith, "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth. They that have done good unto the resurrection of life and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation."

This citation with that of Acts xxiv. 15 and Rev. xx. 12-14 will suffice as samples from the New Testament of the texts to the same effect which the intelligence of the reader will readily supply. Paul saith before Felix, the Governor, "I have hope toward God which they themselves (his Jewish accusers) allow that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Can any testimony be more specific and conclusive in disproof of theory No. 1, (notwithstanding all the glosses and devices offered to set it aside)?

Rev. i. and xx. denounces the second death, which can only apply to the wicked, for the saints die once only. "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God," etc. (See context). Now were those "only the righteous?" Let the reader remember that this scene is "when (after) the 1,000 years had expired." Verse 7. Were there no wicked there? The saints had already been raised 1,000 years before, and here is the judgment day, and that is surely not for the saints, but for the wicked who are then and there doomed to "the second death" of verse 14. So much as to theory No. 1.

II. If theory No. 2 be right, how shall we dispose of those texts of the Bible which undoubtedly and in words preclude the resurrection of some, that theory affirms that "all" will be raised?

Is it not written as we have seen in Dan. xii. "Many (not all) of them that sleep in death shall awake," etc?

Now "many" is a partitive adjective: it implies a part of a given number, and never all. Some of the dead must remain in the grave, if only many (not all) are raised, and this is fatal to the theory of universal resurrection. Is it not logically so?

In the last utterances of our brother, the author of theory No. 2, in THE RESTITUTION he places his chief reliance to sustain his opinion on 1 Cor. xv. 22. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," and, urging the literal interpretation of the words, claims a verdict in his favor will great confidence. Now I accept the literal sense and yet maintain that a plain construction of the language, taken with the context, leads, in my judgment, to the overthrow of the conclusion.

Without claiming a better rendering of the original word zo-o-o which would be entirely legit mate, we construe these as a plain English sentence, simply giving the natural sense and location of the words in our tongue, thus: "As all that are in Adam die, so all that are in Christ (the righteous) shall be made alive." This is undoubtedly the true paraphrase into English of the original words as they stand in the common version. That this is right is proved not alone by the whole context and by the consent of all interpreters of approved authority, (whatever that may be worth; but by the admission of the author of theory No. 2 himself in his exposition contained in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 10, 1879. In it he says: " " "That Paul is referring to none but the righteous dead (italics are mine) is clearly evident from the conclusion he reaches at the 20th verse: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly; and at the 51st verse he quotes "We shall not all sleep but we shall all be changed," and then concludes from these premises, very logically, "the pronoun 'we' includes representatively all Christians, living and dead, when Christ comes." This being so (and that St. Paul in 1 Cor. xv. refers only to Christians I freely admit) how can he prove by any part of the chapter, that not Christians only but "all" men will be raised?

I need not pursue the refutation of theory No. 2 any further, for time and space forbid, abundant, (as it seems to me) as the testimony is to the same effect. I pass from the subject, therefore with only this reflection. How just, and right, and wise, and merciful is the Divine procedure which dispenses with the reproduction by resurrection of the vast myriads of incapables and irresponsible, such as idiots, lunatics, maniacs, ignorant, incompetents, heathens and pagans, who have once lived on our earth and now lie entombed in its bosom! On that basis there is no room even for the Darwinian theory of "the survival of the fittest," for they are, of necessity, all unfit, and no possible good purpose or object can be answered (as far as we can see) by their reproduction. There is certainly no obligation on the Creator to give them a new and another life. If they are raised again as they were it is again to subject them to the evils and calamities, the pain and sorrow and the chances of this mortal life from which death hath happily removed them. Is such a proceeding either wise or good, or consistent with reason? If not, then, do we not charge God with folly, if we attribute it to him? And if they do not appear in the new life as they were, then it is the creation of other beings and not a resurrection of dead ones at all! But as our object is to confront all gainsayers with direct and express proof from the Bible itself I prefer not to leave any thing to uncertainty when positive and certain evidence can be cited from the Blessed Book itself; hence I meet the statements that the Bible teaches "an universal resurrection," that "not a dead man shall be left in the death state," contained in the paper referred to in THE RESTITUTION of Dec. 10, 1879, with the following from Holy Writ. Let the reader ponder and judge and decide if the two statements can be reconciled, for surely "He that is of God hears (follows) God's words." Let God be true, etc.

Isa xxvi. 13-14.—"Oh! Lord, our God, other lords besides thee have had dominion over us, but by thee only will we make mention of thy name. They are dead, they shall not live. They are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them and made all their memory to perish."

Does that teach universal resurrection?

Here are some of the dead of our race of whom it is expressly declared "they shall not live, they shall not rise."

Can anything be plainer? Who will venture to deny this truth?

Many other texts may be quoted to the same effect, but perhaps not so pointed. In all respect to those who may think otherwise, the writer submits, with a confidence inspired by conviction, after forty years' reflection and study of the Holy Oracles that in the light of Divine truth, the Bible doctrine of the resurrection of the dead comprehends and embraces in the very words of Scriptures.

III. "Those who have done good and those who have done evil,"—the just and the unjust;" and that as to any other class of human beings who have lived and died, there is no promise or threat of future life, to them in the Bible. At least so it seems to me, and I think the position is susceptible of easy proof.

Dan. xii. 2; Isa. xxvi. 13-19; John v. 28-29; Acts xxiv. 15, already quoted, abundantly demonstrate the truth of the first part of this proposition. I now contest on such proof to rest its defense. The latter part of the statement may require evidence somewhat more in detail, as follows:

"Sin is the transgression of the law."

"Where there is no law, there is no transgression."

"They that sin without law, shall also perish without law."

"Those that sin in (or under) the law, shall be judged by the law."

"If ye were blind, ye should have no sin but now ye say, we see, therefore your sin remaineth."

These texts all show that men's responsibility is measured by their opportunities of knowledge of good and evil. This is the law of every civilized country—of all judicial tribunals. It is the dictate of reason and common sense and also of Scripture, for it is written, God requires of us "according to what we have, and not according to what we have not." He is not "an austere man gathering where he has not strewn." To whom little is given, from him little is required, and a portion to whom nothing is given, (as in the case of the heathen and all incapables) from him nothing is required. All such, from lack of knowledge of right and wrong, cannot believe or do works meet for repentance and salvation and cannot therefore inherit the promises which are (the Bible being judge) all inheritable by faith and as these incapables are necessarily without faith, because without knowledge how can they be saved (or enjoy future life) by faith? Is it not written the just shall live by faith, that the righteous are saved by faith, that he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him and finally that without faith it is impossible to please God and that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life, that these things are written that you might believe, etc., and believing, have life through his name?

On the other hand is it not equally true that these incompetents, by reason of nonage, insanity, idiocy and entire ignorance of God's law and of salvation through Christ cannot be held responsible and punishable by or under a law of which they have never heard? Does it not follow conclusively from these premises that as this class of human beings have neither believed or done anything to gain salvation, or even future life, nor have committed in their ignorance, conscious sins and misdeeds which merit punishment, they are not included in the Bible premises which embrace the good and the bad, and therefore we are not at liberty to prejudge their destiny, further than to affirm only what the Bible intimates, without fully revealing. They certainly have no promise of resurrection for good or evil. Having sinned without law, they perish without law—or being without law they have no sin, seeing that "sin is the transgression of law," of which they are ignorant. The destiny is in the hands of the Judge of all the earth, who will do right and there we may safely leave them.

There is no unrighteousness with God in this arrangement. They share the fate of all their race in death which is the end of the Adamic life. Their future is with God. Whether he will give them another life remains to be seen. If so, he has not yet, it seems, related his purpose and as "secret things belong to God" we presume not to inquire. We await the development of his holy will. Meanwhile I opine, there is some Bible testimony for the conclusion that though their general resurrection is not stated, some infants—children—will be raised from the dead thus forming an exception to the general law. Such seems to be the import of Matthew i. 16-19, citing Jer. xxxi. 15-18. Here the assurance in that these proto martyrs of Jesus, these child-witnesses of our Lord, will come again (by resurrection) from the land of the enemy (death). Some Scriptures teach also a future life for the offspring or seed of the righteous. But time and space forbid further elaboration. At some future time, as opportunity may offer, I may ask room to present the grounds of my conclusion as to this exceptional resurrection class, unless the editor or any considerable number of brethren object, in which event I shall be well content to remain silent.

GEN. MELIKOFF'S LIFE SAVED BY A MAILED SHIRT.

LONDON, March 12.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "Undoubtedly the life of Gen. Melikoff, Chief of the Supreme Executive Commission, was saved by a chain shirt worn under his uniform. When the Nihilist emissary, Vladetsky, attempted to assassinate Gen. Melikoff on the 8d inst., he was on the general's right, and the bullet tore a hole in the latter's coat, between his ribs and hip, where penetration with deadly effect was a certainty, had not the protecting coat arrested the bullet."

The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph at St Petersburg says he hears that Gen. Melikoff is in bad health, and is spitting blood, owing to overwork and suppressed excitement.

RAGUSA, March 10.—Three-fourths of Nevesinje, Herzegovina, has been burned, including the residence of the commandant of the post and the telegraph offices. No lives lost. Fire accidental.

ABANDONED.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 11.—The Russian expedition to Merv is for the present abandoned.

BEHEADED.

SHANGHAI, March 12.—It is reported that Chung How, late ambassador to Russia, and who negotiated the Kuldja treaty, has been beheaded, and that a revolt has broken out in Pekin.

There has been a great disaster on the river Vistula, on the Austrian-Russian frontier. The water broke through the river's banks and flooded a wide district of country, including thirty villages, some of which were completely destroyed.

Distressing accounts are received of famine and starvation in Armenia and Kurdistan, Asia. Meantime the recent reports of famine and pestilence in Brazil are pronounced to have been greatly exaggerated.

DIED.

TRIBBEY—At Lone Rock, Butler county, California, February 11, 1880, Alma Tribbey, daughter of Abner M. and Martha Tribbey, formerly of Argos, Ind., age twelve years.

She's gone beyond the flight of time,
Beyond the jaws of death,
To live to life in that blest clime
Where life is not a breath.

Yet often in life's lonely hours—
In dreary months and years—
Warm friends will deck her grave with flowers
And water it with tears.

And when the last friend falls asleep
Beneath the same green sod,
Their resting place shall not escape
The memory of their God.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AKRON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Editor Restitution:—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and insure its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I will upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $5.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment: Are we who claim to be the chosen of God so poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper?

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who receive this appeal, at the above address, and tell them please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $2.00 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Barker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pile, Springfield, Mass.

Mr Barker combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to them in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those using the "Christian Melodist" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

POETRY.

In Memory of Cinderilla Harrold, who Died June 17, 1879.

ESTER HARROLD.

I turn away in mournfulness
From strange inquiring eyes,
And bend my footsteps where I know
Our dearly loved one lies.

In patience you did suffer long,
And oft I've heard you tell:
"I want to live till Jesus comes,
And with the loved ones dwell."

A sister mourns your absence, dear;
Her sorrow none can tell;
Dear Cinda, you was all to her;
How hard to say farewell!

A father bends beneath his grief;
A loved one no more there;
Our home looks sad and desolate,
And there's the vacant chair.

Your absence I do deeply mourn,
But you must sweetly rest
Until the resurrection morn,
To rise with all the blest.

The flowers above thy grave shall bloom
To mark where thou dost lie;
But, oh! this aching heart of mine
Can never say good-bye.

Another year has ushered in
Since thou hast gone to rest;
But happy thought it is for me,
We soon shall meet with all the blest.

Sleep on, dear sister; take thy rest;
Soon there will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet, to part, no, never,
In the resurrection morn.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Sea-Monster—Fourth Monarchy—Its Character, Family and History—Dan. vii. 19-28.—No. 10.

J. P. WEETBEE.

1. Sea-Monster.—This dream of Daniel was in the first year of Belshazzar the last king of Babylon. Dan. v. 30. It was a dream of many visions,—living, absorbing visions. The sight of an ocean is grand; of a sea at night, more interesting; a sea, mountainous, by the howling winds of a night storm more exciting still; but when the roar of the contending elements is mingled with the cries of wild beasts and monsters of the deep, in deadly strife, the scene becomes one of the wildest sublimity—terrific in the extreme.

Such was Daniel's photographic view of the world's coming history. He found living animals, to which the first three bore some considerable likeness; but the fourth was unlike anything seen, either in heaven, or in the earth, or under the earth. He found distinctive names for the first three: "Like a lion;" "like to a bear;" "like a leopard;" but the fourth: its name was beyond his vocabulary. It is a beast,—a monster!! Its head, with iron teeth, ten horns,—fellows, or peers; one peerless horn with eyes and mouth; nails of brass; no name, but "dreadful," "terrible," "strong exceedingly." Its actions: "It devoured," "brake in pieces," "stamped."

Amid the raging of the storm-king, and the howlings of the three wild beasts mingled with the roarings, gnashings of iron teeth, and stamping, of feet with brazen nails of the sea-monster, is seen the "Ancient of Days," on the wings of the winds, in his pavilion of cloud; his garments white as snow, the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne the fiery flame, his wheels, the burning fire. A stream of fire rolled before him; thousand thousands ministered to him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before.

Beyond this scene of national judgment he beheld one like the Son of Man come in the clouds of heaven, to whom, by the Ancient of Days, "was given dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his kingdom is an everlasting dominion."

It is not surprising that such visions broke in upon the silent hours of Daniel's repose; for, what mortal, before or since was ever permitted to view such a diorama of the world's progressive developments, extending from the first year of Belshazzar through the empires of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome to the revelation of the Son of Man in his future and endless kingdom?

The sea-monster, the symbol of the fourth monarchy, claims the special attention of the prophet. Why such a tempestuous sea? Why should it give birth to such a fearful beast? What history is revealed in that terrible monster? What do these things mean? What powerful and all-subduing agency is here brought to view? The beast, with its horns; the Ancient of Days; the Son of Man; the saints, and the kingdom. Standing near him stood a messenger, whose countenance indicated his intelligence, to whom Daniel addressed himself as to the meaning of all these things. So he told him, and made him understand their interpretation.

The explanation being too brief and general to be satisfactory, he specifies the objects of his solicitude: Then I would know the truth (true interpretation) of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth iron, nails brass; (which) devoureth, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet; and of the ten horns that (were) in his head, and (of) the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even (of) that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of Days came and judgment was given (rendered) to (in favor of) the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Verses 19-23.

Angel's Interpretation.—"Thus he said, the fourth beast is the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom (are) ten kings (kingdoms) (that) shall arise; and another (kingdom) shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first (ten kingdoms), and he shall subdue three kings (kingdoms). And he shall speak (great) words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end. And the kingdom and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom (is) an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Verses 23-27.

Fourth Beast.—The messenger does not give the name of this kingdom, but states its number—the fourth—"the fourth kingdom upon earth." The first three are so distinctly defined, that they are readily named, viz: Babylonian, or Chaldean, Medo-Persian, and the Grecian. These three were deprived of their dominion before the birth of Christ. Their lives, however, were prolonged. Dan. vii. 12.

What power conquered Greece? Ans.: Rome. The Roman, must, therefore be the fourth kingdom, since it has sustained, and held the dominion of the world to the present time. What part of the life and acts were made known to Daniel? We answer, its entire history from its conquest of the Greco-Macedonian kingdom, till it is "given to the burning flame." Verse 11. It covers a space of nearly twenty centuries, more than twice the duration of the previous three combined. An empire of such a prolonged existence must be possessed of a vitality exceedingly great.

The prophetic history of the fourth kingdom, or Roman empire, as given by the messenger's interpretation to the prophet Daniel, contains four distinct periods, marked by some extraordinary feature, or noted event.

Period First.—This period we denominate Pagan Rome, since, during that period, it was under the power of the Pagan priesthood. The religion of the Roman power was Pagan from its origin B. C. 753, to the birth of Christ. The Jews being under the Roman yoke, had but little religious influence over their conquerors. They were permitted, however, to conduct their temple service, till, A. D. 71, when, through constant provocations, they were overthrown, and either destroyed or led into captivity.

The Roman government has always worn the garb of religion; at first Pagan, then mixed, afterwards, outwardly Christian, during nearly 1260 years of a transition period; it then became Papal; and will finally, during its last years, be, at heart, if not by profession, infidel. From the birth of our Savior, and onward, it had in its bosom two religions (Pagan and Christian) whose principles were as unlike as darkness and light. Between the adherents of each there was a continued struggle. The seeds of Christianity were sown in the Roman monarchy during its iron age. The rapidity of its growth was unparalleled in the world's history. Soon did an apostle declare that the gospel "was preached to every creature under heaven." Col. i. 23.

The iron age of the empire extended from the battle of Actium, B. C. 31, when its unity was established under Cæsar Augustus, to A. D. 476. During the last 150 years of the period above named, the iron began to be mingled more or less with the German, or potters' clay—the swarms of northern savages that invaded its territory.

During this period the iron monarchy exhibited its invincible strength. The Greek empire having been previously subjugated, it carried its conquests through Asia, Africa and Europe. No power was able to stand before it. For more than three centuries the unity of Imperial Rome was without a rival. The civil element of the world was combined in that government. It was the pure iron—the beast "exceedingly dreadful." It devoured all kingdoms—made all the world tributary.

Period Second.—This period of the fourth monarchy was an age of short duration. It was the transition age, when the diadem passed from the imperial head to the ten horns, from A. D. 351 to A. D. 510. It includes the first 156 years of the decem-regal administration, devoted by the seventh head of the empire, to the time when the little horn plants its power on the ruins of three kingdoms. This was a calamitous era in Roman history. The unity of the empire had long been suffering. Two hundred years had transpired since the clay—the Germans, or Northmen, had begun to talk with the pure iron—the Romans. The senate had cast off its ancient religion, and had adopted a new ritual. During this era the Romans and Germans were constantly at war for the supremacy in the empire. The German races finally succeeded, and the diadem passed to the horns or decem-regal dynasty.

Third Period.—This period covers the reign of the little horn. Dan. vii. 20, 21. Its war on the saints, and its bloody conquests, continued 1260 years, closing A. D. 1798. A period more terrible, has never yet existed; one so full of cruelty and blood-shed. This horn first made war on its fellow horns and subjugated three. It then turned its fury against the saints, and prevailed against them till the Ancient of Days passed sentence against it. This was the noted period of Papal martyrdom, resulting in the slaughter of nearly fifty millions of Christians.

Fourth Period.—This includes the last age of the fourth monarchy extending from the commencement of its executive judgments in 1798 till its final subjugation under the personal official reign of Christ as King of kings, and Lord of lords. The little horn, by its words and actions, causes the death of the wild beast: "I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake, I beheld till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Verse 11. Under what religious banner this power will meet the final contest may not be so clear. We incline to the opinion that it will be that of antichrist, or avowed infidelity.

Summary.—Permit us, in conclusion, to outline this chain of prophecy. The sea that gave birth to the four beasts, represents masses of people; the winds denote passions of men. The rising out of the sea denotes the origin of the political combinations. The four beasts symbolize four universal empires. As there were only four wild beasts so are there only four universal Gentile empires.

The first three beasts are, a lion, a bear, a leopard, which represent Babylon, Medo-Persia and Greece. Their dominion had passed away before the first advent. We are now two thousand years beyond the completion of their history.

Cæsar Augustus put on the diadem of the whole earth, as the head of the fourth, or Roman empire, B. C. 31, after the battle of Actium. The emperors succeed each other, till A. D. 476, when the imperial head received a deadly wound, and the ten kings (kingdoms) denoted by the ten horns, began their rule, continuing till about A. D. 538 or 40, when the power denoted by the little horn began its 1260 years of bloody domination, which brings us down, in this chain of prophecy, to A. D. 1798, when his executive judgments are fully introduced. Verses 9, 10, 11, 22. Since the papal hierarchy has lost its civil dominion, we very justly conclude that the judgment (verses 22, 26,) has set, and that the power is wasting to the end.

On our voyage over the sea of time we are nearing the port since we have passed the last light house. Read, if you please, the seventh chapter of Daniel, verse by verse. At the close of each verse, containing the angel's interpretation, ... ask what is still to be accomplished? Verse 11. The beast was slain. Verse 22. "The time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Verse 27. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High. These, only, are in the future.

Everlasting Punishment.—Everlasting Fire.

The coming of Christ and what shall then follow are set forth scenographically in Matt. xxv. beginning at the 31st verse:

1. When he shall come.
2. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory.
3. And before him shall be gathered all nations.
4. He shall separate the sheep from the goats.
5. Departing of the goats into everlasting fire. "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal."

Old opinions and ideas, because they are old, may be the more unsafe and least able to stand the test of truth. Comparing and equating ourselves, by only those who are like ourselves, human and erring, we shall not be wise.

The scene before us is wholly of the earth and on the earth. The Son of man has come; the nations (the ethne) are here.

It is not needful to suppose all nations leave their countries, and in a massive cloud—such as overwhelms the resurrection—come before the throne of Christ. They may be all in their nationalities gathered or grouped before him, as once when he "saw all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," when tempted by the evil one. The fact, is the separation of the sheep and the goats, out of the [illegible] nations,

"And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. xxiv. 31. And, "The son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and those which do iniquity." Matt. xiii. 41. These statements show how the sheep and the goats will be gathered out of the nations, in Christ's previous words.

If it has been an old idea that all human beings that have been and will be, are here brought and placed on the right and left, either in or out of their bodies, it had better be reannealed for a truer idea. Christ, a bodily majesty, sits on a throne; nations are nations, and sheep and goats are persons gathered out of the nations, by messengers sent; and placed, occupying space, spoken to and speaking, as people. So we leave it, as it is left.

The blessed of the Father enter into their inheritance of the kingdom prepared for them, and the cursed go into everlasting punishment.

THE EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT.

We have the means of knowing the import of the Greek word (kolasin) rendered in the text punishment. It is defined "the act of clipping or pruning," "restriction," "reproof," and last, "punishment." (Greek Lexicon.) Taking the whole definition together it signifies punishment by (aionion—rendered everlasting,) cutting off; that is, from life, in contrast with the (aionion, everlasting) life of the righteous. We deny not the old plea—and all its benefit, if it has any—that the same word that fixes the everlasting state of the righteous, is also used to fix the condition of the wicked. But we by no means can grant the assumption usually made with the plea that everlasting pain and torment, are put in contrast with happiness. The contrast is of living forever, and cutting off from life—not living at all, forever.

As a good specimen of management, we take an extract from Prof. Boise' essay, read at the Baptist Ministers' Conference, Chicago, March 11, 1878, as follows: "As the word life is associated naturally with joy and light, so is death associated with sorrow, gloom, darkness. Hence, as eternal life is at once understood to mean eternal joy, so eternal death suggests logically the idea of eternal sorrow." We see here, as politicians say, there is an axe to grind. Grant us that the wicked cannot be cut off from life any more than the righteous are, and let us have our way of dealing life and death, and then our very suggestive logic comes in naturally. Let us have death understood as if no one dies; let us believe the old serpent's doctrine that deceived Eve, "ye shall not surely die," and we can build something on that; but not the gospel.

Do not they destroy the antithesis as Christ put it, and make a different one, by making his statement mean, These shall go into everlasting "sorrow and suffering," but the righteous into everlasting "joy and happiness?" Certainly, and make a different one, cutting off from life eternal, and having life eternal, are the strong contrast, as our Lord put it. He did not make nonsense by saying, "And these shall go away into a life of everlasting sorrow and suffering (which they miscall death), but the righteous into life eternal." It stands, life and no life. And so let it stand, without meanings it does not allow.

EVERLASTING FIRE—UNQUENCHABLE.

The fire that has in many instances destroyed the wicked, and will do so again, we have no hesitation to believe is unquenchable and everlasting, as much so as the volcanic fires or terrific lightnings. But as these are not constantly and always in active flames neither is that with which Jehovah destroys the wicked. And as the two former were never quenched by any known agency, but everlastingly are in elementary existence and prepared to break forth, as the latter is at God's command when he may be pleased to require it as his agent of destruction. We read of it when not for destruction of men. "As a smoking furnace and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces" of flesh Abraham had prepared." Gen. xv. 17. When the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush; when the fire of the Lord fell and consumed the burnt sacrifice and the wood and stones and dust, and licked up the water in the trench, in answer to the prayer of Elijah. 1 Kings, xviii. 38. There are cases too numerous to be cited where this eternal fire is noted in the Old Testament record, for many purposes and never was quenched, and could not be stayed. As in the book of Job, "The fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burned up the sheep and the servants, and consumed them."

But the most noted case is that of Sodom and Gomorrah. Of this our Savior says, "They did eat, drank, bought, sold, planted, they builded, but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the son of man is revealed. Luke xvii. 27-30. This, we with the best of evidence, take to be the eternal, the everlasting, the unquenchable fire, ready to destroy formerly, and ready to destroy again, when the son of man is revealed—so shall it be he says.

Lest it should be thought we have made a mistake calling this the eternal fire, turn to the epistle of Jude who so names it, "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, ... are set forth as one example, suffering the vengeance of eternal (aionion) fire." Jude vii. These cities and their people, as Jude here testifies, suffered God's vengeance of eternal fire. It burned them to ashes: as Peter also says they were turned to ashes as an example unto those that should after live ungodly. Such was God's eternal fire.

Christ spoke as if his second glorious coming might be near; and the apostles wrote as if the end of all things is at hand, and the time is short, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. These statements might have their fulfillment in the shortness of life, as death's blank was not counted in the estimate. We know the Lord Jesus said, "but of that day and hour, knoweth no man, not the angels, neither the Son, but the Father." And to his disciples, "it is not for you to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." This will account for the imminence in which they place that great event, and the impending nearness of the consequent destroying of the bold transgressors and ungodly off from the earth.

The wrath to come, intimated by John to the Jews, Matt. iii. 7, was a literal baptism of fire, when Christ's floor should be purged and the wheat gathered into his garner, when he would "burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Verses 7, 10-12. So the following, "Gather ye together the tares . . . . to burn them." "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world," (age). "And shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." When the gathering time comes, the tares and the goats—the bold wicked—doomed to be destroyed by the fire they cannot quench, will wait for their lash-ings cutting off, which is near. Matt. xiii. 30, 40-42.

The everlasting fire always at God's command, as shown in all the Old Testament history, is not like ordinary fire which men can control, unless in exceptional cases. It differs as the strange fire that Nadab and Abihu placed on the altar, and "the fire that went out from the Lord, and devoured them." Lev. x. 1, 2. And so far as Christ taught as shown and to be further shown, it had to do with men living—men in the present state—and reducing cities to ashes.

Christ told his disciples, if any member of their body—right eye, hand or foot—caused them to offend, it would be better to enter into life (eternal) with loss of some member of their body, than that their "whole body should be cast into Gehenna fire—should perish." Matt. v. 29, 30. And Mark ix. has added, "Where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched," three times repeated. Tischendorf has, it is said, put these additions out as spurious, and Griesbach marked them doubtful. But it matters not since Christ adds his illustration, "Everyone (offending) shall be salted with fire, and (as) every sacrifice shall be salted with salt," referring to Lev. ii. 13, as the law prescribed. See Mark ix. 49: Salted and burned up with fire.

Gehenna, a Hebrew word, literally means the valley of the son of Hinnom, as all acknowledge, which came up to the city of Jerusalem on the south. Dead animals and offal from that populous city were piled in there and a fire kept burning to consume the putrid matter, to prevent pestilence; and worms grew and fattened on the odious feast. Idolatrous Jews once established the worship of Moloch there, by erecting a brazen image having the face of a bull, and in this they sacrificed their children in a furnace of fire into which they fell, being dropped from the arms of the idol. (See Calmet's Dict. of the Bible by Robinson.)

Now, the necessities of ardent believers in the eternal sufferings of hell torments in some under-world, take on the liberty of invention and avow that Christ spoke of Gehenna only as a symbol of the hell of lost souls, where the spirit worm dies not and the fire is not quenched, as they choose to take it, not hatting at what may be a spurious passage, as the searchers of MS. think.

But will it strengthen or weaken their conceit in the judgment of reasonable thought to suppose that a worm living, growing, and fattening on its putrid diet, is a symbol of an imaginary lost, shadowless, non-material soul? This explanation of Gehenna never was born of revelation. It is pure invention, to help a greater antiexistent invention.

O, aged and decrepit theology! why hast thou brought so horrid and impossible a picture and bid us look? Thy thin, sallow, shrunken, shadowy form reminds us of old cloisters, where thou hadst thy birth; hard by marble closets with darkest walls, where God's best and truest were closed from day-time's bright sun and night's sweet moon and stars. Night there had no morning, and ruddy manhood wasted till gray locks came, and death with mission of mercy, dragged through slow decades; but it came at last. Go back to thy dark ages and cruelties. Go! Thou less merciful than thy hard old servants who left the bones of their poor victims to rot at last. For the goodness and severity of God, are not to be beheld in that way, and such is not the good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people, thou murderer of God's justice.

The grand old prophet Isaiah will teach us better. Hear him tell of the new heavens and new earth, God will make, Chap. lxv. 17-20 and closing the next chapter thus: "For as the new heavens and new earth which I will make shall remain," &c. "And it shall come to pass that from one new moon . . . . and one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh." lxvi. 22, 24.

There is evidence that these men will be slain by the fire everlasting of Jehovah, "For behold the Lord will come with fire . . . . to render his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Isa lxvi. 15, 16. Now, the place chosen for God's worship according to Chaps. lxv. 17-19, lxvi. 10-13, and ii, 3, is in the new order, (called the new heavens and earth,) is Jerusalem re-created and restituted, to be a rejoicing and her people a joy. There is therefore evidence that the carcasses of the slain of the Lord will be cast into the old valley Gehenna, of the Son of Hinnom; a short way to go forth and look on the carcasses of the slain transgressors. And there the worm will feed and the fire be constant; and till consumed these bodies will be an abhorring in filthy, putrid loathsomeness to all flesh. It cannot well be doubted that Christ had this state of things in view when he said the tares would be gathered and burned, and it would be better to lose an eye, foot or hand and enter into life less either of these, than that the whole body should perish—be cast into Gehenna, fire, so often read hell in the Bible.

Exactly as Isaiah and Christ, so the apostles taught the fiery destruction. We can but briefly notice Paul's teaching. Of enlightened wilful sinners he says, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for judgment, and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." Speaking of the kingdom the saints are to receive (whom Christ names his sheep), Paul calls it a kingdom which cannot be moved; that is, shaken and removed, as other kingdoms will be when the heavens and earth and all nations are shaken, as Haggai ii. 6 says, which he quotes. He adds, let us have grace to serve God acceptably; "For our God is a consuming fire." Heb. x. 26, 27, and xii. 26-29. No comment on the above is needed.

"For behold the Lord will come with fire," says Isaiah. And Paul, "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven . . . . in flaming fire taking vengeance on those that know not God, and obey not the gospel. . . . . Who shall be punished (as the goats and the tares) with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." 2 Thess. i. 7-10.

Efforts are vainly made to construe the "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," as if it amounted to everlasting punishment in eternal sufferings of the pains of hell, away from the Lord's presence. It does not so read, nor does it so mean. The punishment is taking vengeance in their everlasting destruction by the flaming fire of the Lord attending his presence. From the presence, does not here signify away from, as the same expression in Acts iii. 19, does not, but from and by his being present. Take in proof also 2 Thess. ii. 8, "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming." But I must stop with this: that there is no such thing taught as the punishment of immortal souls. But God will mete out all the punishment due to sinners in his own way and judgment.

It is stated in a Boston paper that the clergy generally have renounced the idea of punishment in a hell of literal fire. The same publication speaking of Moody as not giving up an eternal hell, says, "even he does not believe in torment of literal fire."

I quote from the same paper, (the Golden Rule, Congregationalist) a part of the speech of Dr. Quilliver, Prof. of Andover, made at a ministerial gathering for talk. As he pointed to an easy chair he said, "I have been imagining John Robinson of Layden (Holland, in 1620, when parting with the puritans—farewell address) sitting all this time in that chair, and repeating with tearful eyes his immortal saying, that "more truth should break forth from the Bible than has yet been learned.'" He said, "creeds have had their use," but, "the wonder is," he continued, "that with all the bad science and worse philosophy which the church has had to carry, it has so much of truth as yet remains."

This is a testimony from so high a fountain of theology as Andover, which is clear and definite as to the bad science and worse philosophy the church has carried. May she be purged by light from the Bible of all the bad and worse that remains.

Let light break forth. Amen.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the supervision of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the instantaneous change of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Jerusalem—Past, Present and Future.

In Joshua xv., in describing the borders of the lot of Judah, we have the first mention of Jerusalem, a city destined to be the theatre of the most thrilling and wonderful events the world ever saw, whose walls were to encircle the grandest temple ever built, and whose streets were to echo with the footsteps of the Son of God. Jerusalem stands in latitude 31 deg., 40 min., 35 sec. north, and longitude 35 deg., 18 min., 30 sec. east of Greenwich, and is thirty-two miles from the sea. It is by many supposed to be identical with the Salem of Melchizedek, but no positive proof is offered in support of this idea.

Dean Stanley thus speaks of it: "To the t[illegible] from the east or west, it must always have presented the appearance beyond any other capital of the then known world, we may say, beyond any important city that has existed on earth; of a mountain city; breathing, as compared with the sultry plains of Jordan, a mountain air; enthroned as compared with Jericho or Damascus, Gaza or Tyre, on a mountain fastness."

The number of sieges the city has undergone is remarkable. In Judges i. 8, we have record of the first. "The children of Judah had fought against Jerusalem, and had taken it, and smitten it with the edge of the sword, and set the city on fire." Siege after siege followed; the city was twice razed to the ground and its walls leveled; and, yet, amid the unparalleled disaster and blood-shed, its prophets sounded forth the oracles of God; his power protected them, and from Samuel until Malachi the last prophet before Christ, they never ceased to proclaim the mercy and vengeance of Jehovah—sometimes lamenting the downfall of his people Israel, and again rejoicing in the prospect of their future glory under Messiah the Prince.

The past of Jerusalem may be compared to a bride; when she was arrayed in her splendor, when her people were prosperous, and when the sun was reflected in glory upon the gold and precious stones of her mighty temple. Again, she may be compared to a desolate widow, who, in the language of Jeremiah, "Weepeth sore in the night and whose tears are on her cheeks." Deprived of her grandeur, her people crushed beneath the chariot wheels of her conquerors, her temple the delight of her heart, despoiled, well might she exclaim: "Behold, and see if there be any sorrow, like unto my sorrow."

One of the most memorable scenes that transpired at Jerusalem, unexampled for terrible suffering and bloodshed, was the siege under Titus, A. D. 70. When Titus advanced his legions the city was torn by fierce factionists, who, upon the approach of the Romans, united their forces to repel their common enemy. Titus, in his first sally, was repulsed, and very near captured, but he was finally successful, and the city, after a dreadful struggle, was taken. Thousands were slain. The temple was strewn with the dead, and its courts ran blood. The Holy of Holies was profaned by the gory hand of war.

On the 10th of August, a day memorable in the Jewish calendar by the destruction of the city and former temple by the king of Babylon, after besieged and besieger, had retired to rest, there rose a fearful cry that the temple was on fire. The flames spread rapidly and the scene was awful; men shouted in anguish at the approaching desolation of that sacred place. Amid the shouts and confusion the Romans wrought dreadful havoc, and, in a short time, the city lay in ruins. The prediction of the Savior, in Luke xxi. 20, was now fulfilled, and the abominations of desolation spoken of by Daniel, set up. From that time to this, Jerusalem has been under Gentile rule. After the destruction of the city under Titus, the most notable events in its history are the changes wrought in it by the conversion of Constantine, the attempt to rebuild the temple under Julian, the apostate, that was accompanied by such dreadful phenomena, the rise of Mohammed, the spread of Islamism, and the attempt of the crusaders to plant the cross and Romish religion upon the city's heights. Of course it is impossible to speak of these changes, particularly in a single paper.

The era in Jerusalem's past that possesses most interest to the Christian, is the one in which Jesus lived. The first thought that arises when Jerusalem is mentioned, is: there Jesus, the Son of God, suffered and died upon the cross for the sins of the world. 'Twas there he uttered the divine promise—"Whosoever believeth on the Son of Man shall not perish, but have eternal life." 'Twas there he proclaimed himself King, and thereafter his ministry of love and mercy; his sorrow and agony was o'er, that he rose triumphant over death and ascended to the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens. "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee under my wings; even as a hen gathereth her chickens, and ye would not." The one bright light that lit up the pathway to God you quenched; the only fountain [illegible] waters to perishing humanity. The place of the temple of God, the abode of his prophets, yet noted as a city of blood. Such is the record. But, if I could stand and gaze on it from the Mount of Olives, it seems to me there would be a voice in my ear whispering, "Behold, the city of peace." Will it be realized? Patience, heart, and thou shalt see.

Jerusalem's past has been one continual chain of wonderful links. Beginning with David and Solomon, we pass alternate links of the bright gold of righteousness and peace, and the blood-stained iron of cruelty, disobedience and tyranny, until we behold the great and precious link of Christ; from thence stretches a chasm of barbarity and fanaticism, inwoven with some slender threads of purity.

Having now noticed some of the principal features and changes in Jerusalem's past, let us consider its present. The present of Jerusalem is luminous, and throws its light far into futurity. We have noted its desolation since its overthrow by Titus. That desolation is beginning to disappear. Palestine is now under the protection of England. The Jews are going in rapidly and settling the waste and barren spots. The soil is regaining its famous fertility under the hand of civilizing influences. Sir Moses Montefiore, the noble Jewish missionary who has spent so much of his time and means in alleviating the destitute condition of his countrymen is rebuilding many parts of the city, so that the Jews can find a home once more within its loved walls. Before the Crimean war none but Turks could hold land; now all is changed, and a citizen of any country is privileged to possess it. Facilities for traveling are increasing rapidly, and one can now visit Jerusalem without having his life endangered by robber hordes. No Bible student can fail to be interested in these late changes indicative of the near future.

"Lift up thine eyes to this burdened horizon,
Child of the promises, what dost thou see?
Bright golden streaks growing wider and brighter.
Break through the darkness and gleam upon thee."

Yes, we can not but see it. Darkness is giving place to light, that heralds the eternal day. To Jerusalem's future I now invite your attention. I have passed rapidly over her past and present that I may devote more time to her future.

The first proposition I present is: Jerusalem is to be the capital and praise of the whole earth. In support of this, let us consider Isa. lxii. "For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest: until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory, and thou shalt be called a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord; and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be called desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah, for the Lord delighteth in thee and thy land shall be married. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee, and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee. I have set watchmen on thy walls, Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that make mention of the Lord keep not silence, and give him no rest, till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." How grand, how beautiful is this testimony. Imagine, if you can, the greatness of her majesty when the joy of the earth. We have record that travelers, looking for the first time upon her walls, were overwhelmed by feelings unutterable; their eyes gushed tears, and they unloosed their shoes as if treading on holy ground. This was in the days of her great desolation. What, then, must have been the rapture of the prophet when he saw afar off her grandeur when she shall be a "city not forsaken?" Who will say that God does not mean to fulfill his word? That Jerusalem is forever cast off? Surely, there are none!

The next truth I will offer for your consideration is: The Jews will be re[illegible] to their own land and then [illegible] them a place of [illegible] Who is acquainted in the least with Jewish history can have failed to mark one great characteristic of the race—the keeping of their nationality intact. In all their wanderings they have never mixed with other nations. Take them as a people, their features are the same, their customs are the same, their hopes are the same to-day, as eighteen hundred years ago. There is still another great characteristic—their wonderful vitativeness. They increase faster than any other people. Many terrible diseases that kill thousands of Gentiles are unknown among them. They have undergone every cruelty that the fiendish ingenuity of man could suggest. They have been time and again expelled from homes created by their own thrift, and deprived of all that renders life pleasant, to fill the exhausted treasuries of their conquerors. Says Dr. Milman: "The conduct of the Popes towards them varied, as bigotry, policy or humanity predominated in the character of the Pontiff." They were even prohibited from eating and drinking together.

In France, under Philip the IVth, they had their graveyards desecrated and the stones used for buildings. They were pillaged and massacred under the banner of "Christianity." It would take pages upon pages to record the unexampled sufferings of this unhappy race. But they will not always be under the curse invoked upon themselves. There is a brighter era dawning. They are not destined to be outcasts forever. Jerusalem rebuilding; a Jew at the head of one of the greatest governments on earth; a Jew controlling its finance; the press of the world acknowledging their advancement and recording every week their actions. Who, that is at all conversant with these things, but sees in these buds of prosperity, promise of glorious blossoms. The light they enjoy now is the first beam of the morning; the radiance of the day is yet to come. A day such as the world never saw. A sunrise before which the pomp and magnificence of earth shall pale. In speaking of this future, the prophets of Israel seemed to rise to the topmost height of inspiration. "God will be as the dew to Israel; he shall grow as the lily and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon. They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon."

The Prophet, after speaking of Ephraim's return from idolatry, ox claims: "Who is the wise, and he shall understand these things." The Lord will assuredly "set up an ensign among the nations and assemble the outcasts of Israel, and shall gather the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth." When reinstated in their own land, all deprivation will be of the past. "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar will come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Prior, however, to the Jews realizing this climax of happiness, the wealth they will have accumulated, and their seemingly defenceless condition will tempt the cupidity of the Prince of Meshech and Tubal, and he will come against their land to utterly destroy it and to deprive them of their riches. This state of things will bring to pass the return of Christ and the establishment of his throne in Jerusalem. In order that we may more fully understand the prophecy concerning the invasion of Gog and the wonderful changes it will effect, not only in Jerusalem, and on the Jews, but upon the whole earth, we will investigate Ezek. xxxviii.

The prophet is addressed by the title, "Son of Man," and stands as a type of him who is to work deliverance in Zion. He is commanded to set his face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him. The phrase "chief prince" is evidently not the correct rendering of the Hebrew "rosh," according to those who have made the subject a study. Ros is a proper name, and not an appellative as in the English version, say the learned. Therefore, instead of "chief prince," it should read, "Set thy face against the prince of Ros, Meshech and Tubal." As to whom the prophet refers by the name Ros—Rochay, to [illegible] with the most ancient name by which Russia was known. Russia, then, is the great power referred to. Having determined this much, we find, by further consideration of the chapter, that Ros, or Russia, in the "latter years," shall come against the land that is brought back from the sword and is gathered out of many nations, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste, but is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them." The terrible violence with which Russia shall come against Israel is described in the ninth verse. "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou and all thy bands, and many people with thee." But, while this occurs, behold an antagonist arises. Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish with all the young lions thereof, will say, "Art thou come to take a spoil?" But what nation or power is represented by Sheba, Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish? There can be no doubt but that they refer to England. Sheba and Dedan (Arabia) is under the control of the British power, and it rules over the Tarshish of the east—India. The symbols, also, of the "young lions" seems to point directly to Great Britain. Thus, when Russia, as the prophet expresses it, "thinks an evil thought" to go up to the land of unwalled villages—England—(whom you remember now controls Palestine) will antagonize her. Still, in spite of this antagonism Russia shall cover the land of Israel like a cloud. There God interposes. His fury comes up in his face, and Gog shall fall upon the mountains of Israel.

The Gog of Ezekiel and the "King of the North" of Daniel are, evidently, the same power. Both come out of the "north parts;" both come against the land of Israel in the "latter years," and both meet with terrible overthrow. Daniel amplifies Ezekiel's prophecy of the overthrow by saying that Michael, the Great Prince, shall stand up. This, evidently, refers to Christ, as does the term "Son of Man," which is proven by what follows: "There shall be a time of trouble such as never was, and many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting shame and contempt." The standing up of Michael, and the coming of the Son of Man described in Daniel vii., are synonymous, and both refer to the same person—Christ. Immediately after his coming, "dominion and glory, and a kingdom, shall be given him, and all people, nations and languages shall serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall never be destroyed." That Jerusalem will be the seat of this kingdom, the Scriptures are positive. Jerusalem shall be called the throne of the Lord, and all nations shall be gathered unto it." "In the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and many people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come and say, Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." When the Lord shall return to be King over the whole earth, great physical changes will take place around Jerusalem. We are told that "his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, that is before Jerusalem on the east, and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west; and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half of it toward the south."

Dr. Smith says that Olivet is not so much a "mount" as a ridge, there being three prominent peaks connected together, or rather more than a mile in length, running in general direction north and south, covering the whole eastern side of the city." This is to be rent asunder, and, instead of the inhabitants of Jerusalem looking out upon a mountain height, "there will be a great valley."

There will be another marked change. Instead of being an inland city, Jerusalem will be the maritime centre of the world. Zechariah speaks of living waters going forth from Jerusalem and connecting the former and hinder seas—the Mediterranean and Dead Sea. This will fit Jerusalem for the extensive commerce she will enjoy as the metropolis of the earth. Those familiar with the history of Palestine will have noticed one peculiarity in the description of many of its districts, viz: the method of rendering fertile the rockiest and most barren mountain sides, by dividing them into terraces like steps. In some sections these are described as being in the highest state of improvement, and beautiful with vines and olives. When the changes under the Great King take place, the diversity of mountain and vale, seas and broad streams, blessed by the bountiful hand of the Creator, will render Canaan once more the Paradise of God.

We have noticed the burning of the Jewish temple by the Romans. It has never been rebuilt. The area upon which it stood was plowed by command of the emperor Hadrian, and literally not one stone was left upon another. That temple that was so magnificent and beautiful that it has been described as a "mount of snow fretted with golden pinnacles," is to be replaced by Christ. The man whose name is the Branch shall build the temple of the Lord. "Even he shall build the temple of the Lord, and he shall bear the glory and sit and rule upon his throne." Ezekiel gives a description of it, and says it will be established when Israel defiles his name no more. If former temples erected by man, called forth the unbounded admiration of beholders, what will be the appearance of the temple built and dwelt in by the Lord? All that the most vivid imagination can conceive, or the most eloquent tongue utter, will fail as completely to convey an adequate idea of its grandeur, as the light of the glow worm fails to light the universe. We know that the glory of the Lord will be there, but we must be changed to fully realize it.

When the temple is erected and the king is on his throne, "whoso shall not come to Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles, even on them shall be no rain." In that day every thing shall bear the inscription, "Holiness to the Lord."

Such is the Bible teaching in regard to Jerusalem's future.

The praise of the earth! The metropolis of the world! The city of the Great King, Christ! When these things are realized, the curse pronounced upon the earth by Abraham's disobedience will be removed. Take the most beautiful flower, dissect and examine it thoroughly, you will find some blight. Take the purest water, apply the micro-cope and you will find it filled with impurities. All that is lovely to our eyes is shadowed by decay and death. But, O! sublime future! O! exalted city, rejoice in the coming of thy King! Ye deserts robe yourselves in verdure! Ye fountains bubble up in gladness! "His glory shall radiate over the whole earth, and his knowledge shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep."

Lift up thy voice Jerusalem in songs etc. sail!
Thy robes of mourning shall be worn no more.
Thy morning dawns in glories bright and vernal.
When sorrow's o'er.

Let Us Alone.

Among all the pursuits and avocations of life, we find some persons seemingly perfectly content, whether they are doing well, right, or otherwise. An offer to reason with, to instruct them more perfectly is spurned at. "We are satisfied." "Let us alone." If such persons make sad mistakes (which all are liable to) and one offer to correct them, however mild and gentle it be, they cry out, "I wouldn't say anything." "Let us alone." Sometimes when they are in their right mind they will say that they are open to conviction, they are willing to learn, etc., but when the test comes, their tongue, that unruly member betrays them, and they say by word and action, they have told an untruth, just "Let us alone." And more, this treacherous disposition is not confined to the non-professors and daily avocations of life; but what is worse, many loud professors of Christianity who make great pretentions, claiming to be baptized in the Holy Spirit, when their faith is called in question just a little, they fly off the handle, and seemingly forget what manner of spirit they are of, raise the pitiful cry "Let us alone!" Poor deluded, self righteous souls, who forget that they are weak, fallible, finite creatures, deeply submerged in and led by an unclean spirit, which in times of old cried out to Jesus of Nazareth, "Let us alone!" Mark i. 24. Although his mission was high and holy. Doubtless the Master had just such persons in view, when he said, "Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." Matt. xv. 14. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

HOTTEST SPOT ON EARTH.

One of the hottest regions on the earth is along the Persian Gulf, where little or no rain falls. At Bahrin the arid shore has no fresh water, yet a comparatively numerous population contrive to live there, thanks to the copious springs which break forth from the bottom of the sea. The fresh water is got by diving. The diver, sitting in his boat, winds a great goatskin bag around his left arm, the hand grasping its mouth; then takes in his right hand a heavy stone to which is attached a strong line, and thus equipped he plunges in and quickly reaches the bottom. Instantly opening the bag over the strong jet of fresh water, he springs up the ascending current, at the same time closing the bag, and is helped aboard. The stone is then hauled up, and the diver, after taking breath, plunges again. The source of the copious sub-marine springs is thought to be in the green hills of Oman, some five or six hundred miles distant.

A TRIAL OF FAITH.

The trial of faith is the sure way of increasing it. We ask for more faith, and God tries what we have, and that is his way of answering our prayer for its increase; he brings us into trials, so that we are compelled to look only to him for help. The life of faith is a wonderful life. Honored is the Christian who is called to live it; he is trained in this life to know more of himself, and more of the unchanging character, love, and tender watchful care of his heavenly Father. How God so loved us as to give his only and well-beloved Son to die for us, and is it probable that he will withhold anything that is absolutely needful for us?—Winslow.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAR. 31, 1869.

WE direct attention to an advertisement, in another column, of books lately received from W. Kellaway. "The Bible Triumphant," and "Earnest Words for Honest Sceptics," are both valuable works. On the first named work the Rainbow remarks: "Teachers and others who are troubled with sceptical attacks about the alleged contradictions of the Bible should at once procure this little book. It is admirable." "Earnest Words" is a work that will commend itself to every lover of truth. As most of our readers are aware, both these books are from the pen of Mrs. H. V. Reed, and they have established her fame as a writer. We regard Constable's work on "Hades" as exhaustive on the theme of the "Intermediate state of man," as well as unanswerable on any fair principles of Biblical exegesis. We have also another work by this learned author, entitled "The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment;" a work worthy of the highest commendation.

The Kingdom of God.

BY O. M. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S SEVENTH QUESTION.

By consulting Psa. cx. 4, we learn that Jesus was to be a priest after the order of Melchisedec; and by reading Heb. vi. 20, the apostle tells us that he is made such a priest, and by turning to Gen. xiv. 18, with Heb. vii. 12, we learn that this Melchisedec was a kingly priest. Therefore, if Jesus is now priest (as all will concede that he is) must he not be a kingly priest? As also the prophet says: Zech. vi. 13 that he will be a priest upon his throne.

REPLY.

Friend Enquirer:—To concede that Christ is Priest after the order of Melchisedec, then your difficulty arises in trying to establish a similarity in every respect between the parties compared, which in many cases in similes, parables, types and other figures is very destructive to truth, draws out erroneous doctrine and presses the figure entirely beyond the instruction of the author. In all figures there is one distinctive point sought to be illustrated, and if more than this the author is very apt to specify; the balance of the figure is drapery thrown in to fill up. Example—take the parable of the Good Shepherd—John x.—given to illustrate the faithfulness of a shepherd. In the Christian life and work of the shepherd we find nothing corresponding to the drapery—"They shall go in and out and find pasture." Verse 9. Again, take the incident in Paul's life where he created dissention between the Pharisees and Sadducees when he cried out—"I am a Pharisee." Acts xxiii. 6. Now are we to conclude from Paul's claim—"I am a Pharisee" that he was a Pharisee in every respect? The Pharisees rejected the counsel of God, they rejected John's baptism, taught for doctrine the traditions of men instead of the commandments of God. Made long prayers for pretense, devoured widows houses and in many respects heaped to themselves damnation. Hence to carry out the similarity in every point would be to make Paul a very bad man and one very unsuitable for a disciple and an apostle of Christ. But to raise the point and the only point of similarity between the Pharisees and Paul—"Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question,"—relieves us of the difficulty and makes Paul a consistent disciple.

With these illustrations before us let us seek from the texts the points of similarity and dissimilarity between Melchisedec and Christ. We will first give the points of dissimilarity as drawn from the texts, and then present the similarities which when done removes your difficulty.

POINTS OF DISSIMILARITY.

MELCHISEDEC.	CHRIST.
1. King of Salem. Heb. vii. 1.	1. ———
2. Who met Abraham, etc. Ver. 1.	2. ———
3. To whom Abraham gave one-tenth. Ver. 2.	3. ———
4. King of Righteousness. Ver. 2.	4. ———

POINTS OF SIMILARITY.

MELCHISEDEC.	CHRIST.
1. Without father. Heb. vii. 3.	"For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake concerning priesthood." Heb. vii. 13-14.
2. Without mother. Ver. 3.
3. Without descent. Ver. 3.
4. Without beginning of days. Ver. 3.
5. Without end of life. Ver. 3.	"Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life. For he testifieth, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Heb. ii. 16-17.
6. Abideth a priest continually. Ver. 4.

Thus you see that your trouble arises out of trying to apply to Jesus a point of dissimilarity, which also you would not be willing to have done to its utmost as it would make him King in Jeru-Salem instead of, as you claim, in heaven.

The text says nothing of his Kingship, nor could we ever infer from this text alone that he is ever to be a king.

But next, as to his being a priest while upon his throne as you quote from Zech. vi. 13, I am certain that if you will read all that is said of this character that you will see unmistakably that it is in another age and under far different circumstances than has ever yet obtained. By consulting the preceding verse you will see that this personage is designated as the BRANCH, who is to grow up out of his place, and to build the temple of the Lord. And from the subsequent verse learn that they that are far off shall come and build in the temple of the Lord. Question:—Has this been fulfilled in the mission of Jesus in the past? By no means. And should you construe the word "temple" as figurative and apply it to the church, and apply the expression "far off" to the temples, I am satisfied that this application you will abandon when you read what else is said of this BRANCH. Let us cite a few texts for your consideration.

1. "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel. And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem: when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning. And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night: for upon all the glory shall be a defence. And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain." Isa. iv. 2-6.

By noticing this text closely you will see that when this Branch reigns,

a. That Zion with her rightful daughters will be cleansed.

b. That the inhabitants of the city will be protected from the heat of the day and the storm and the rain.

2. Jer. xxiii. 5-8 says: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, the Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land."

Here you will readily perceive the following points set forth which unmistakably have in the past never occurred.

a. That when the Branch, the king reigns, he is to execute judgment and justice in the earth.

b. That then Judah shall be saved and Israel is to dwell safely.

c. That then the people will talk of the God that brought the house of Israel up out of the north country instead of their deliverance from Egypt.

3. Jer. xxxiii. 11-22, says: "The voice of joy, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts: for the Lord is good; for his mercy endureth forever: and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the Lord. For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be a habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down. In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the Lord. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and unto the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness. For thus saith the Lord: David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually. And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord: If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, and that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me."

Also in this quotation we see that when this Branch sits upon his throne and reigns,

a. The voice of joy and praise to the Lord will be heard in the cities which were once desolate.

b. The captivity of the land is removed and it is filled with flocks and shepherds, and even the mountains and the vales are again inhabited by Israel.

c. Judah is to be saved and Jerusalem is then to dwell safely.

d. David's throne is no more to be vacated.

e. The priests and the Levites are to perform their work of ministry for the people and to the Lord.

f. The seed of David is to become a numerous host as the stars of heaven.

g. The Davidian covenant is to be respected and carried out as long as the sun and moon endures.

In conclusion, is it needful for me to ask of you if these points ever have in any sense obtained? I know that you possess more judgment than to need such a question.

Jerusalem, the Wonderful.

I have read with pleasure the traveler's allusion to localities in Jerusalem, in the last number of THE RESTITUTION. How often, and with what a sacred interest have I read narratives of travel in Palestine! There are no more delightful books, than books of travel. It is possible with a good book, to sit quietly in your chair at home, [illegible] hundred countries, and behold a hundred wonders. You have the charm of quiet and rest at home, with the pleasure of visiting and viewing places and persons, scenes and transactions in all lands. One can cross the vast blue ocean and penetrate to the most distant regions. And what region is more fascinating and wonderful than the Holy Land? What sea more historic than the Mediterranean? What inland waters more strangely attractive than Gennesaret, the Jordan and the Dead Sea? How intensely with the eye of the mind, have I gazed upon Jerusalem, and its sacred environs! Not very much do I care for the alleged sites of the Holy Sepulchre, and the crucifixion, for there is too much medley of ceremonial and strife, of jealousy, pomp, confusion, together with great uncertainty in regard to local identities. But the valley of Jehoshaphat and of Kidron, the Gethsemane Garden, the slope and top of Olivet, Bethany, Bethlehem, Hebron, and many other places, are known and recognizable with certainty. The question has often occurred, Can I ever visit Jerusalem? Can I go there ere the new age has begun? How one would delight to visit every spot,—to walk about in a spirit of reverence and of prayer, and look intently at every object! What a landscape to have imprinted on one's memory, by frequent and earnest beholding! How many things to make a note of, and write about! What a time and place to study territory and people, streets, houses, manners, climate,—to compare history and prophecy, to see what is, and ponder what has been, and what shall be. Sometimes, one can say, like the Psalmist, "O that I had wings like a dove! then I would fly away" to Jerusalem. I do not say, I would, like a Jew, literally kiss the ground. (By faith, I ever lay my head at Jesus' feet.) But with open heart and eye, and mind intent, impressible, subject to God, I would go and look about the city and all places made sacred by the divine presence, and by divine law, and providence. And with what I saw and what I thought, thousands of others should share, provided my pen should prove a ready power to photograph a myriad things, wonderful by miracle, and attractive even in comparative desolation. One is almost involuntarily attracted toward those thoughtful and wealthy Jews who are watchfully occupied with plans for seeking to recover the land of their veneration and love from its situation of calamity and depression. There is something at least interesting in the idea of occupation with enterprising and discreet colonists, whether Gentile or Jew. My heart is in sympathy with all devout Jews. May their hearts be opened to use the wealth they have either inherited or acquired, in a way judicious and God-pleasing. To no land on earth is such interest attached as to the land of Abraham and Israel, of Moses and Messiah, (I say Moses, though his feet never touched the soil.) That land has in it immeasurable wealth of interests, from locality, capacity, contents, losses, love, agony, transgression, and all the grandeur to come, in the fixed purpose of God. May God bless and save the Jews, and raise up men of strength and renown among them, to do his will, whatever that is. To this end may their minds be early and thoroughly enlightened.

The relation of England to Palestine is one of wonderful interest. I have supposed that upon the conceded diplomatic triumph of Lord Beaconsfield at the late European congress, England would make her hand felt in the Holy Land. What immense benefits does she not seem capable of conferring! The selfish, jealous, cruel, ridiculous and wicked despotism of Turkey ought to be modified or abolished. Travel should be as unrestricted and safe there as anywhere in Europe. Brigandage and all crime should be quickly and surely punished. The skill of science and the comforts of civilization should be introduced there. If Turkey objects, her mouth should be speedily shut. Beaconsfield's boldness at Berlin should appear still in this trans-Mediterranean land. His courage and instincts, and faith in the power and Providence of God, ought to make him intelligently attentive to the welfare of the wonderful land. After inserting the sharp point of the lever, he should be swift and strong to press his advantage. Whatever this epoch in history, and in prophecy will justify,—whatever the will of God as best understood, will render expedient to attempt, ought to be done. If God will, let the cry be, take off the incubus, break the chains, let the land go free. Even though there may be, will be, must be conflict, let the day of regeneration be hastened forward with prayers and sacrifices, with hope, faith and enterprise. Christians are encouraged by promises of divine blessing, to pray for Jerusalem, and they ought to contribute by unanimity of sentiment, and harmony of action—by [illegible] and union of [illegible] to the resurrection [illegible] land from its present state of paralysis, depression and bondage.

As Americans, we naturally cherish our national capital, Washington. We admire its wide avenues and splendid state edifices. We attend with interest to those important transactions there which affect the welfare of the nation. As Washington to America, much more is of right, Jerusalem to all who fear God, both Jews and Christians. It is the pre-destined capital of the earth. It is the city of the Great King. It is historic with grand events. It is the territorial center of the globe. It is to undergo immense changes, and to be blessed with a grand recuperation. It is to be glorified with the divine presence, and to be the sacred rendezvous of millennial multitudes, coming as individuals or by delegation to the consecrated city of the world. Jerusalem is to be the grand city and center of the grand new epoch. What pulsations of hope and joy will its prominent position and beneficent dispensations excite! It will be as heretofore, and incomparably and pre-eminently more, a city of the heart, the metropolis beloved, and having power to excite the most glowing enthusiasm, to command the most devoted loyalty, and to elicit the warmest and most lively affection.

Everything, therefore, that can contribute to enlighten Christendom respecting its past, present, and future, should be encouraged. Skill, industry, enthusiasm and piety are all invited to co-operate in promoting this end. The Christian world should be interested in the most fascinating geography which the world affords, the geography of Canaan. No books of travel should be as welcome as those describing journeys in the land of promise. Its topography, and climate, and productions, its sacred localities, its capacities, its destiny in divine determination, and prophetic assurance, should be warmly welcomed and well understood. Not even in a vision of the glories of the New Jerusalem, ought we to forget the coming grandeur of the terrestrial metropolis.

May the intelligent, patriotic and God-fearing Jews of all lands, be touched by a heavenly fire of divine love and led by a divine influence to devise right things concerning Jerusalem. May their ample possessions supply such facilities as will instrumentally promote the best good, and under God prepare the way for the country of their renowned ancestry and patriotic affection, to be raised to that summit of power and pinnacle of blessing, to which it is in the divine purpose most certainly reserved.

Let all Christians pray for all Jews, and love them as brethren, and greatly desire their prosperity and salvation. If branches broken off for a time, let us remember they will be soon and most surely grafted in again. Jews are yet to rule the world under God and his celestial hierarchy. We most heartily wish them God-speed in every channel of noble benevolence, and every investment of important responsibility. May they lend dignity to official station, and wield their resources for the divine glory.

In Season—Out of Season, Paul to Timothy.

Bro. Chaplin: The subjoined letter written several years ago to a friend then in the ministry of the Episcopal Church and since become a Roman Catholic Priest, now holding a high position in the Papal Hierarchy, in Baltimore may be worth preserving in THE RESTITUTION, and may do some humble service in dissuading others from going backward in their religious course. Can you give it some convenient place in your columns; when you have nothing better to offer? A. B. M.

BALTIMORE, Md., Dec. 26, 1871.

My Dear Sir: I hope you will excuse me for not addressing you, in the common fashion as "Rev." I dare not do so when remembering the precepts, "Call no man Master on earth." "Be ye not called Rabbi"—"Holy and reverend is thy name, oh! Lord." "Use not flattering titles," "nor of man aought we glory"—"Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of." "If any man speaks, let him speak according to the oracles of God," &c. If you have not found time or inclination to read the manuscripts I have sent you, will you do me the small service of re-enclosing them to me as I wish to send them, in that case, elsewhere. I do not desire their return if you will read them.

Pardon me for adding, as I write, that as I learned you were about to take "a new departure"—perhaps a step forward, in your religious life, I determined to present to you as a free will offering, the claims of the Bible as the only safe guide—the exclusive [illegible] in all the fulness, "the truth as it is in Jesus, the faith once (for all) delivered to the saints." You will find it, if you only have faith and courage enough to trust to its guidance, what you need—a refuge from the storm—a covert from the tempest which may now be trying your integrity and manliness. Does not our Lord say to all such, "If any man will do his (Father's) will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself?" "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." Jno. vii. "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me," not learn of the fathers or of the church, for though the church, as guided by the inspired apostles was "the pillar and ground of the truth," it may not be the truth itself, any more than the pillar of the house, is the house itself. That the church itself should become corrupt and apostate, it is only necessary to read the proof in Acts xx. 17-36. Here Paul declared that "after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you not sparing the flock—also of yourselves (this very church at Ephesus) shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw my disciples after them," etc. This mystery of iniquity already worked in the apostles' day. It has effectually done its work in this day. We see, in the endless multitude of sects and churches—speaking perverse things, etc., and presuming to substitute their own inventions, as infant baptism (falsely so-called) etc. Such churches are not the pillar and ground of the truth. It is gross ignorance or daring blasphemy to say so. God is not mocked—"whatsoever man soweth, that also he shall reap."

In respect to the subjects of which I have written to you, I have presumed to exercise only the rights which our common humanity gives me, to point you and every honest seeker for the whole truth, to the only source of real knowledge—to the only end of controversy—the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever, as I have stood on your ground (not however in the clerical office, but in once believing what you believe and preach). I feel that I have some right to point you to the quicksands which I escaped and by which you are endangered. "I speak as unto wise men," saith St. Paul, "judge ye what I say." Let us heed his words then. The result will show whether you will honestly and freely "try the spirits whether they are of God," or whether you will still grope your way in the devious darkness of tradition and human wisdom, which only affords light enough to make the darkness visible—and like every other ignis fatuus will lead you, further and further, from the light of day which shines perpetually from the "Sun of righteousness," to all who will look and see. Wishing you grace, mercy and peace, as the result of the truth apprehended, believed and obeyed.

I remain, very sincerely and truly,

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

Who Shall and Who Shall Not Inherit the Kingdom—A Contrast.

The righteous shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, but the unrighteous shall not. Matt. xiii. 43; 1 Cor. vi. 9.

Those servants of God who sow to the Spirit in the doing, with fear and trembling of what the Spirit commands, shall have an entrance ministered unto them into the everlasting Kingdom of Jesus Christ, but those professed servants who sow to the flesh in selling according to its lusts and passions, shall be refused admittance into God's dominion among the true friends of the King. Gal. v. 19-25; Eph. v. 3-6; 2 Peter i. 5-12.

Those servants of Christ who have said to him Lord, Lord, at the same time practically ignoring the obligations imposed on them in his precept, shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven, but only those saints who have done from the heart the will of God. Matt. vii 21-23; Rom. vi. 17, 18.

It is impossible for any one to inherit the kingdom of heaven whose righteousness does not surpass the mere external righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees. Matt v. 20.

No man or woman shall be called to enter into the kingdom of heaven without first having been converted by the law and testimony of God, and become in disposition like a little child. Matt. xviii. 3.

It is impossible for the fearful and unbelieving to reign in life with Jesus Christ the faithful. The portion of all such characters shall be in the lake of fire and brimstone. Rev. xxi. 8.

Flesh and blood can not possess the dominion of the Deity. 1 Cor. xv. 50.

The unjust are not fit to rule in judgment in an age when exact justice will be meted out to all parties alike. Isa. xxxii. 1: 2 Sam. xxiii. 3.

The self-willed are not worthy to inherit a kingdom wherein the will of God will be the only recognized rule of conduct. Isa. ii. 11: Matt. vi. 9, 10.

The vile and unholy are not worthy a position in a government the [illegible] of which shall be "holiness unto the Lord." Zech. xiv. 20.

Those who are rich in this world's goods, but are not rich toward God in faith and love, shall not become kings and priests in the kingdom of long-standing promise. Jas. ii. 5.

It is not possible for the unwise and ignorant to enter into the glorious rest of Messiah the stability of which shall be wisdom and knowledge.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Have been in the Gospel field all the time since my last report in THE RESTITUTION. Have visited Severance, Doniphan county, Morrill, Brown county, Star school house, near Bro. Noe's and Bro. Messimore's neighborhood, in Cloud county. Near Glen and Bro. Clover's, in Mitchell county; also six miles north of Glen Elder; also in Jewill and Lincoln counties. I also preached on my return in Bro. Messimore's neighborhood, and about six miles from brethren Saylors', in Nebraska and at Severance. I called on Mr. Williams, a courteous and intelligent gentleman, and sisters Williams and Rock, at St. Joseph, Mo. Had a very agreeable visit with these zealous and intelligent sisters. I next visited Ripley, Brown county, Ill., preaching Saturday evening and twice Sunday, and lecturing at the Christian church the following Monday evening in a review of Ingersoll's lecture on the "Mistakes of Moses." I made a short visit with brethren Martin and Scott, at Camp Point, lecturing in the Christian church on Tuesday evening on "Ingersoll's Mistakes." The congregations were generally large and the interest all that could be desired. Six believers in the Gospel of the kingdom were baptized and thus added to the Ecclesia of Christ. Bro. Clover's sister-in-law declared her intention of being baptized. She put off obedience in hopes of her husband accompanying her.

Northern Kansas is the best field for Gospel labor I know of. Adventists are quite numerous, and as a rule are willing to bear the points at issue between them and us discussed. One great draw-back, however, is the scarcity of means to support those who labor among them in the proclamation of the word of truth. Will note in a future article incidents of importance which occurred during my travels.

POETRY.

Abide With Us, for It is Evening.

Tarry with me, O my Savior!
For the day is passing by;
See, the shades of evening gather.
And the night is drawing nigh!
Tarry with me! tarry with me!
Pass me not unheeded by!

Many friends were gathered round me.
In the bright days of the past;
But the grave has closed above them.
And I linger here the last!
Leave me not lonely, tarry with me
Till the dreary night is past.

Dimm'd by me is earthly beauty;
Yet the spirit's eye would fain
Rest upon thy mercy beaming:
Shall I seek, dear Lord, in vain?
Tarry with me, O my Savior!
Let me see thy smile again!

Dull my ear to earth-born music;
Speak thou, Lord, in words of cheer;
Fetide, loitering my feet-ieps.
Sinks my heart with sudden fear.
Cast thine arms, dear Lord, around me,
Let me feel thy presence near.

Faithful memory paints before me
Every deed and thought of sin:
Open thou the blood-filled fountain.
Cleanse my guilty soul within:
Tarry, thou forgiving Savior!
Wash me wholly from my sin!

Deeper, deeper grow the shadows,
Paler now the glowing West;
Swift the night of death advances;
Shall it be the night of rest?
Tarry with me, O my Savior!
Lay my head upon thy breast!

Fields, trembling, fainting, dying,
Lord, I rest myself on thee;
Tarry with me, through the darkness:
While I sleep, still watch by me,
Till the morning, then awake me,
Dearest Lord, to dwell with thee.

SELECTIONS.

Col. Ingersoll's Logic.

When the secular papers take hold of the infidel crew, they handle them without mercy. They deserve none. The way the St. Louis Globe-Democrat takes the starch out of the T. Paine-monument-builder is something admirable: thus:—

It is, perhaps, merely a question of taste as to Ingersoll's flippancy and vulgarity, although an infidel might be no less conscientious if he had some respect for the belief which have ennobled the lives and sweetened the deaths of thousands of millions of Christians through sixty generations. But a more serious fault than the lack of decency in manner is the lack of judgment and capacity which marks his treatment of his grave subject. It is not the fault of Christianity, but the fault of a curious distemper in Mr. Ingersoll's mind, that in Christianity, in the religion inspired by God, he sees only the errors and imperfections of man. Of his own absolute infallibility and personal perfection Mr. Ingersoll does not seem to entertain any doubt; it has not entered into his mind to study himself and to inquire whether he was especially free from the faults and errors of which he [illegible] poses to convict his neighbors. Such vanity is not uncommon, and though in his case it is pushed to a ludicrous extent, it is quite harmless. But something which is not harmless, which is worse than his vanity, his flippancy, his vulgarity, and even his scurrility in mocking all the world's best minds hold sacred, is his utter unfitness, his mental limitation and incapacity in treating the question he has chosen.

Because Christians, in direct and wilful disobedience of the teachings of Christianity, have persecuted each other; because sectarians, through strained constructions of the Bible, have supported narrow and harsh opinions, Mr. Ingersoll would abolish Christianity and repudiate the Bible. This is neither logic nor sense. In the grand history of that religious belief which has done so much to curb the fierce passions of our nature, subjugate the barbarism of the European race, to raise the world from the darkness of savagery, from the sway of cruelty and rapine and lust to the pure light of civilization, to the rule of gentleness and justice and charity, Mr. Ingersoll can see nothing but a St. Bartholomew massacre here and a Puritan blue law there. Picking these out, he holds them up to execration, and triumphantly demands, "Is this your boasted Christianity?" Really, this is too stupid. Give Mr. Ingersoll a barge load of wheat, he would diligently search in it for a handful of chaff, and, having found it, would scuttle the barge and sink the wheat as a worthless mockery. Give him the Little Pittsburgh Mine, he would assay the quartz and granite and forthwith order the mine to be shut up. Yet wheat is good wheat though there be a handful of chaff in a bushel of it, and the Little Pittsburgh Mine pays its owners thousands of dollars each day in pure gold and silver; and the stupidity which would see only the chaff in a cargo of wheat, and only the waste and refuse in a rich gold mine, is not more dense than the stupidity which sees only the dross of human error and weakness amid the pure gold, and boundless wealth of the Christian religion.

To hold such argument needs only a little wit and a great deal of malice. It does not demand either learning, or decency, or honesty; on the contrary it does better without them. A little honesty would teach Mr. Ingersoll that in weighing a religious system in the balance its merits must be taken account of as well as its faults, and a little learning would have taught him that by far the greater part of all the world has to-day which is worth having is due directly and solely to Christianity; while a little decency would have taught him that his rejection of a creed which he neither appreciates nor understands, would seem no less honest if it were free from the scurvy jests of the clown and the specious clap-trap of the demagogue.

Sun-Spot Cycles and Epidemics.

It may be safely asserted that, from the earliest ages, no subject has filled the minds of men with so much astonishment and terror as that of the frequent and awful epidemics which have so often depopulated empires or ravaged the known earth; and it is not a little curious that in the very dawn of medicine they should have been attributed to the wrath of the sun. . . .

It is generally known that spots of rapidly-varying shape and size occur on the sun's disk; that these increase and diminish periodically; and that they are simultaneous with changes in the solar activity as felt on the earth. In a very valuable article in the "Nineteenth Century" for November, 1877, Messrs. Lockyer and Hunter show that these variations are periodical, recurring in cycles of eleven years and a fraction; that they differ as to amount in different cycles; and that they are coincident with terrestrial cycles of vibrations in—

1. Terrestrial magnetism and electrical activity;
2. Temperature;
3. Wind disturbances, hurricanes, and cyclones;
4. Rainfall, with which the writers show that all the famines in India, during this century have been connected,—the famines following after a drought occurring at the minimum of sun-spots.

The increased heat, rainfall and electrical activity occur, then, periodically with the maximum of the sun-spot cycle; this, of course means, in temperate zones, mild but stormy winters, damp, stormy springs, and unfruitful summers, the rain falling seldom, but, if at all, in large amounts. That article suggested the thought that the irregularity of the seasons of such a year would coincide closely with that described by Hippocrates as the Second Epidemic Constitution; and, a priori, one would suppose that such weather would be very favorable for the development of [illegible] fevers, and very disastrous for [illegible] and disastrous for crops. . . .

Here, then are four series of pestilences showing a marked periodicity of about eleven years, and a decided tendency to fall on years near what we suppose with reason to have been those of sun-spot maxima. The apparent exception of the epidemics of the sixth century is easy explicable. If we take 520 for the first maximum, although apparently three years too late, it is not more so than 1520 and 1829 one of which we know, and the other of which we suppose, to have been a maximum year. This year was followed by great floods, etc., during which it is fair to suppose that the pestilence was generated which reached Constantinople in 531-542; Germany in 552-53; Gaul in 565. Looking at all the other great epidemics of the plague as recorded in the table, and comparing the calculated date of sun-spot maxima with the historical accounts of the natural phenomena, the weather, heat storms, floods, etc., recorded in connection with these epidemics, the coincidence becomes very striking, and it seems clear that the great epidemics of the Oriental plague have appeared, increased, and diminished coincidently with the tides of solar energy corresponding with the maximum years of the sun-spot cycles. . . .

Now what can these general influences be, this general cause, this terrible influence of an unknown nature? Does the earth itself change periodically? No. Does the mass of the air or water change? No. What can change them? The force, the heat, the energy which is derived directly from the sun. Does this change regularly, periodically, and at intervals corresponding with those of this pestilence? It certainly does; and all these strange natural phenomena which we have seen to have been observed in all ages as the forerunners or accompaniments of epidemics are now known to depend on, or at least to coincide with, the changes of solar energy corresponding with the sun-spot cycle. Here is certainly the post hoc; shall we not admit the propter hoc?—Ernest W. Cushing in the International Review for April.

The Bible has been translated into 200 different languages, and the copies circulated amount to 166 millions. More than 10 barbarous languages have been endowed with a grammar and literature.

[Oriental and Biblical Journal.]

Testimony of the Monuments.

The various schools of Biblical criticism, both in Great Britain and upon the Continent, are at present at variance with the discoveries of archæology in Oriental and Biblical lands. The Pentateuch is especially the object of variance. The destructive criticism of these schools, without any prospect of answer, has assumed to take away all the land-marks by which we could assign these books to the age of Moses. Egyptian scholars, however, have replaced them as fast as they have been taken away. The later works, such as that of Brugsch, Lepsius, Mariette, consider the Pentateuch as of prime historical importance. Reginald Stanley Poole has published a number of interesting articles in the Contemporary Review, on Ancient Egypt, in which he undertakes to answer the question, "What do the Monuments tell us of Joseph and Moses, of the settlement in Egypt, and the exodus in the Exodus?" The first result is a general agreement as to the date of the Exodus. The general opinion has been that it occurred about 1300. Lepsius' theory places the event toward the close of the fourteenth century. Secondly, the date of Joseph. This event would fall before the eighteenth Dynasty, in the latter part of the Shepherd Dominion, before 1700 B. C. The subsequent oppression would have been a consequence of the expulsion of the Shepherds. It is precisely in the latter part of the Shepherd Dominion that Dr. Brugsch finds the record of a famine of many years duration. The story of Joseph is illustrated, step by step, from the Egyptian texts. The tale of the Two Brothers, an Egyptian fiction, has for its turning point an incident identical with the trial of Joseph. Pharaoh's dream of kine describes the years of plenty and famine under the usual type of the inundation. The installation of Joseph has its parallel in the case of an Egyptian governor of the age of the eighteenth Dynasty, who received exactly the same office, "Lord of all Egypt." The expression "by the life of Pharaoh," and the custom of bowing upon the staff, are traced by M. Chabas, as usual, in the judicial proceedings, and similar to the ordinary oath when the witness bowed on the magistrate's staff of office. The descriptions of Egyptian life and customs, so confirmatory of Scripture record, are very interesting at this time. It is certainly improbable that writers would so minutely describe the circumstances so true to [illegible] were living at the [illegible] were eye-witnesses of the facts.

LONDON, March 25.—The Times' despatch from Bucharest says: "Austria is now keenly alive to the advantages of an alliance with Roumania in case of a war with Russia. At present Galicia is outflanked on both sides, whereas a Roumanian alliance would protect her right flank and render Galicia safe. Austria, therefore, is seizing every opportunity of cultivating good relations with Roumania." The Emperor of Russia has presented to Prince Alexander of Bulgaria a war steamer, 40,000 rifles, and several Krupp guns.

EXPULSION OF JEWS.

Instead of concessions, as expected before the anniversary of the Czar's accession to the throne, regarding the position of the Jews, there is increased severity. The Jews are driven to represent themselves as Protestant Christians to escape expulsion from St. Petersburg. In the towns of Tula, Orel and Kharkoff the Jews in business for many years are ruthlessly expelled.

Russia is preparing to fight China, in alliance with Tashkend, and also forcing Japan into a quarrel with China on the Loo Choo question. China has raised $60,000,000 for war purposes. Some attribute China's perverse course to British influence. Japan is reorganizing its army on the European plan.

It is stated that the Jesuit authorities have already caused all members of their society who are not Frenchmen to leave France. Le Telegraphe says the principal Jesuits are so persuaded Premier de Freycinet is in earnest that they no longer hope to remain in France, and are preparing to emigrate to Spain and Belgium.

The Roman Catholics in Cochin, South India, having lately obtained possession of a church which had belonged to the "Syrian" Christians, proceeded to search the houses in the village for Bibles and other books which the people had bought from a Church Missionary Society colporteur, and made a great bonfire of them opposite the church.

A dispatch from Odessa to the Times says the son of a priest, an expelled student and one of the five Nihilists to be tried by a court martial at Kieff, has been condemned to death. This will make the nineteenth execution in Russia for political offences in less than two years.

Editor Restitution:—I embrace this opportunity to write a few lines and renew my subscription. I have neglected sending, for the want of money, and cannot send much now, but will send more soon, if nothing happens. I have stopped using tobacco after chewing and smoking thirty-eight years, and will try and put my money to better use. I think it is a sin to throw money away in that way. I know brethren that think they are not able to take THE RESTITUTION, that, probably pay out ten dollars a year for tobacco. They are temperate in other things but very intemperate in that. I hope others will look at it in the same light that I do for the benefit of the cause of Christ and the rising generation. It has been over a year and a half since I stopped its use, and have got fairly weaned from it. I cannot very well do without THE RESTITUTION. I have taken it now about twenty years. It is all the preaching I have. I have been to hear a few sermons here, but there was no Bible in them except the texts, and they were short. It does me good to hear from the brethren and sisters scattered over the world. We shall probably never meet in this age, but I hope we shall in the next; and may we all try and be ready for that event. Please send my paper to Oshkosh, Wis., instead of Omro, Wis., until further notice.

I remain your brother in the One Faith. J. G. PINE.

Editor Restitution:—As we near the closing scenes of Gentile times, and view by faith the fast approach of the king of glory, our hearts swell with emotion while we contemplate the grandeur of the events connected with the advent of our Blessed Lord. To the child of God, one who has believed the glad tidings of the kingdom and the name of Jesus the Christ, had their sins remitted in the act of baptism and thus became one of the household of faith, to such the events of the immediate future are of the most thrilling interest. With what delight, what animation and joy will we welcome the long absent and loved one. This mortal shall then put on immortality. The triumph over death will be grand and victorious. No more sorrow, pain or mourning over the evil of this mortal life. What a glorious change for the child of God. What strains of admiration and praise to [illegible] forth by the contemplation of these great and precious promises. Are we ready for these grand events? Is our faith correct? Have we obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine? Are we hourly drawing from the fountain head? Does our hearts overflow with love and thanksgiving to God for the wonderful plan of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ? If so we can lift up our heads and rejoice in knowing our redemption draweth nigh.

If there are any of the one faith in Omaha or vicinity, please write me at that place and oblige.

BREVITIES.

The Andersonville graveyard, as described by a recent visitor, is an unfrequented spot, except for travellers from the North, among whom are many war veterans who were prisoners in the stockade. There are 13,715 graves, of which about 1,000 are marked "Unknown." There is a surrounding wall of solid brick, and the place is kept neat by a resident superintendent under government pay. Part of the stockade is still standing, but nothing remains of the prison, and the site is covered by bushes. There is no trace of the famous brook, nor any mark of the wells dug by the prisoners.

Prof. Thompson of the Minnesota State University has examined and reported on the great Iowa meteorite which fell last May. The day was cloudless, he says when the meteorite passed through the air like a ball of fire, and with a rumbling, crashing noise. It was seen along its course for several hundred miles, terrifying the people greatly, and finally exploded with two tremendous reports, near Estherville. Two large pieces fell two miles apart, penetrating several feet into hard soil, and many small fragments were scattered. The entire weight was about 500 pounds, the largest mass weighing 470. The material was found to be chiefly iron.

Heartrending reports come from famine stricken districts of Armenia. In Van alone fifty-two persons, it is said, have already died of starvation. Thousands of peasants are endeavoring to emigrate to neighboring Persian provinces; but, as the roads are covered with deep snow, many perish from cold and exhaustion on the journey.

Hunger is ravaging more than one nation at this moment; not only Ireland, but Persia, Russia, and parts of Austria and of Turkey are its victims, and a thousand square miles of famine is the terse story that comes from Armenia and Kurdistan.

Recently one of the children of the Princess Royal of England, now the wife of the heir of the German Emperor, had been ailing, and with maternal solicitude the Princess personally supplied the little invalid with many of its requirements. This innovation on German court etiquette produced utter dismay, and was brought to the notice of the Empress, in answer to whose expostulation the Princess replied: "If my mother, the Queen of England and Empress of India, can carry milk in to one of her children, who like it so much more because given by her, I think I may do so without forgetting my position."

RESTITUTION FUND.

ARGOS, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Fellow Restitutions—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and inclose the weekly cents.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, God sake to the cause of truth the small amount of $1.00 to twenty-five and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this with a few exceptions, if we but thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing or a trifle. Forgive me, brethren, if I am too plain. Perhaps you are using that noxious weed, tobacco, in some form. Consider for one moment, if we shall ever be the chosen of God as poverty-stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper.

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $1.00, and will they please give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Jonathan Pontious. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 30 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will exclude from our acquaintance on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to see you still the cause Kingdom. Yours Farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. G. Barker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pike, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Barker's qualifications in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of hymns. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) always made a favorite with the world. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with the new book, which is cheap for the book, as to that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Melodist" and no basic book will find this exactly what they want.

POETRY.

In Christ.

TO SISTER FRIZER.

I call thee happy, friend of mine,
For thou, in living fount hast gone;
Hast drank of well of life divine,
And tuned thy lips to holy song.

No fear, nor dread in on thee, now,
Thy peace is made with Christ in God,
To Abba Father, thou mayst bow,
His sealed child by cleansing blood.

The Christ is thine, who stands between
Jehovah's throne and mortal men;
Thine eyes by faith, the land have seen
That none may point with voice or pen.

And nigh to ancient promise made,
By blood of Him who died for thee,
With Christ as firm foundation laid,
Thou entereth Israel's polity.

No longer alien to the Jew,
But having hope in covenant,
Thou fearest not what man can do,
With Christ to suffer—well content.

Believing God, as he of old
Believed, when looking on the land,
Then laidst on anchored hope thy hold,
Unmoved on rock of faith to stand.

And oh! I pray, that He who gave
Thy gift of God by grace to thee,
May in that promised Canaan rare,
Thine eyes its glorious beauty see!

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Twenty-Three Hundred Days—Seventy Weeks—Third, or Supplementary Visit and Explanation of Gabriel.—Dan. x., xi. and xii.—Our Position in this Chain of Prophecy.—No. 12.

J. P. WEETHEE.

1. Gabriel's Second Visit.—The second advent of Gabriel was to instruct Daniel in the nature of the little horn power, and the length of the vision. All other points were explained at his first interview. This will appear, if we examine carefully, the 8th chapter. At the departure of the angel, Dan. vii. 27, Daniel fainted, and was sick for days, being astonished at the vision (of the 8th chapter), but did not understand it. What part was not explained? That which had been said relative to the king (kingdom) of fierce countenance, its rise, character, duration, and overthrow. Daniel had, in his own mind, applied that part of the vision to his own people, then in their seventieth year of captivity. He knew no other people that could be called holy. As that captivity was to continue seventy years only, and as the city, Jerusalem, and its sanctuary had been polluted by the Gentiles, he anticipated the near approach of the time when they should be cleansed. One of the holy ones had said unto him, "Unto two thousand three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. viii. 14. Why are we still in our captivity? Perhaps we have not fulfilled our years. He began to examine the records (Dan. ix. 20; Jer. xxv. 11, 12). Learning that the time had come, he set his face to the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes; confessing his own sins, and the transgressions of his people. "And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast gotten thee renown, as at this day; we have sinned, we have done wickedly. O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger, and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain; because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people (are become) a reproach to all (that are) about us. Now, therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary (that is) desolate, for the Lord's sake."

It is very evident that Daniel was praying for another sanctuary, than the one named in the vision, since Gabriel was sent forth, at the beginning of his supplications, to give him skill and understanding. Verse 22. The angel's explanation begins with time. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city .... Verse 24. These seventy weeks being given to explain the 2,300 day's vision, must, necessarily, be a part of those years, either the beginning, middle, or end of that date. To be the end or middle part, would not afford any explanation. It must, therefore, be the beginning of the 2,300 days. The accomplishment of the events denoted by the seventy weeks, sufficiently prove that, in them, at least, a day stands for a year and that they are weeks of years, or, 70x7=490 years. And, since the seventy weeks (490 years) are a part of the 2,300 days, and the whole is greater than either of its parts, the 2,300 days are more than 490 years- or symbolic days, or years—2,300 years. We, therefore, say that the 490 years are the first part of the 2,300 years. The 2,300 years extend from a certain event to the cleansing, or vindicating of a certain sanctuary. If, therefore, the seventy weeks (490 years) are the first part of the 2 300 days (years) both must have the same beginning, and, consequently, to find the date for the beginning of the seventy weeks, we determine when the 2,300 days begin.

To show that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2,300 days we present the following evidence, which, to us, is conclusive:

First.—Gabriel was sent to explain the 2,300 day's vision, since there was no other to explain; and, to make Daniel understand that part of it that was still a mystery, the character of the little horn power, length of the 2,300 days, cleansing of the sanctuary were still in the dark. He was sent, therefore, to make Daniel understand those points.

Second.—Gabriel gives the seventy weeks as his explanation, and nothing else. To say that the seventy weeks have no connection with the vision, is to affirm that Gabriel, instead of doing what he was sent to do, flew off in a tangent, taking it in his head to talk about a subject wholly foreign from his mission. On his first visit, he talked about the vision; on his second, about a certain seventy weeks having no relation to the vision! This is absurd.

The Seventy Weeks are cut off from Something.—Let us examine this point critically. The word rendered "determined," verse 24, is from the Hebrew חתך (nekh takh, from the root חתך —kha-thakh—cut off. This word is found no where else in the Hebrew Bible, and is rendered determined because the connection between Dan. viii. 14 and ix. 24, was not noticed they saw no propriety in giving its only meaning, cut off, since they saw no number from which it was cut off.

Hentenberg.—Seventy weeks are a period cut off from subsequent duration, and accurately limited.

Gesenius.—In his Hebrew Lexicon—cut off is its meaning.

Chaldee—Rabbinic Dictionary of Storkius.—Kha-thakh, scidit, abscidit, excidit—to cut, to cut away, to cut in pieces, to cut off.

Mercerus in his Thesaurus.—Gives a specimen of Rabbinical usage, in the phrase, kha-thi-khah shelhasar—a piece of cut off flesh. He translates the word as it occurs in Dan. ix. 24, by praciasi, was cut off.

Arias Montanus.—It is translated decisa-sunt—cut off.

Theodotion's Greek Version of Daniel, used in the Vatican copy of the Septuagint—It is rendered sunetme-thesan, were cut off.

Dr. Wilson, a learned writer, says: "I undertake to show that the seventy weeks of Dan. ix. 24, is a part, and the first part of the 2,300 days of Dan. viii. 14."

Prof. George Bush, gives the meaning cut off, and views it cut off from the first part of the 2,300 days.

Alexander Campbell, in his debate with Owen, says, that the 2,300 days are to be dated with the seventy weeks, and that they are years.

Third.—The seventy weeks are evidently intended as an explanation. This will appear from the language used by Gabriel. The seal of the vision is in the seventy weeks, verse 24, —"to seal up the vision." Where, in the seventy weeks the seal is affixed, is not, perhaps, so clear. It is not far from the cross. The time of Messiah's advent into the world, the object of his mission, his crucifixion, transpiring according to the divisions of the weeks, made it sure that all the events named in the 2,300 day's vision, whether near or not near, would transpire in their regular order.

Fourth.—Gabriel's language, in verse 25, is evidence that the seventy weeks are explanatory of the vision, for, in verse 22, he says: "I am come forth to give thee skill and understanding;" and in verse 23, "therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision," and in the 25th verse, he says, "Know, therefore and understand;" as if he had said I came to give you skill and understanding, about the obscure parts of the vision, especially its duration—2,300 days. I now give you the seventy weeks as a key to those days, since they are cut off from the 2,300 days, if I can give you the date—for the commencement of the weeks you will have the beginning of the 2,300 days.

When do the Weeks Begin?—Answer: From the going forth of the commandment, to restore and to build Jerusalem. Verse 25. What edict is this? By whom, and when was it published? These are questions of great interest, since, if we can fix the chronology of the beginning of the seventy weeks we have the date of the commencement of the 2,300 days.

What Commandment is here Intended?—Some expositors make it the decree of Artaxerxes, in the seventh year of his reign in the first month, in which Ezra the priest, and scribe, was commissioned to go up and restore the sacrifices. Ezra vii. 9-26. This decree was not to restore and to build Jerusalem, but simply to restore the worship of God. Other expositors begin the weeks from the twentieth of Artaxerxes, about thirteen years later. The decrees were the following:

1. Decree of Cyrus.—"Thus saith Cyrus of Persia, 'The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which (is) in Judah: Who (is there) among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which (is) in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel (he is the God) which (is) in Jerusalem.'" Ezra i. 2, 3, also v. 13-17, also vi. 3-5.

2. Decree of Darius.—"Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews, build this house of God in his place." Read the decree. Ezra vi. 7-14. About seventeen years passed between the decrees of Cyrus and of Darius.

3. Seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus.—Ezra vii. 9-26. (See above). This decree was made about four years after the one by Darius.

Twentieth Year of the Reign of Artaxerxes.—This commandment was the only one that concerned the restoring and rebuilding of Jerusalem. Persons visiting Nehemiah (Neh. i. 1-4, also ii. 4-9, at the Persian court, informed him of the condition of Jerusalem. "The wall of Jerusalem (is) also broken down, and the gates thereof are burnt with fire." Neh. i. 3. Nehemiah afflicted himself nearly four months, which, coming under the king's notice, caused him to ask Nehemiah the cause of his sadness? Nehemiah answered the king, "Why should not my countenance be sad, when the city, (not the temple) the place of my father's sepulchre, (lieth) waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire? Then the king said unto me, For what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of heaven. And I said unto the king, If it please the king, and if thy servant have favor in thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres that I may build it, (Jerusalem). And the king said unto me, (the queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me; and I set him a time, (when I would return, twelve years, chapter v. 14, and xiii. 6). Moreover, I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, (Euphrates), that they may convey me over, till I come into Judah; and a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which (appertained) to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that I shall enter into. And the king granted me, according to the good hand of my God upon me." Neh. ii. 3-9.

There can be no doubt of the commandment intended by Gabriel in Dan. ix. 25. The walls were rebuilt in fifty-two days, in the midst of the most untiring opposition. Nehemiah was their governor twelve years, when he returned to Persia in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes. Some years after he made another visit to Jerusalem and corrected some dangerous practices into which the people had fallen.

The Chronology of the Commandment.—What data are given in Dan. ix. 25, for fixing the date of the twentieth of Artaxerxes? That being the date of the commandment, we have these words: "From the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, (shall be) seven weeks, and three score and two weeks." Verse 25. Sixty-nine weeks measure the space between these two events—the edict and advent. The date of the crucifixion is astronomically fixed at A. D. 33. The expression, "Messiah the Prince," does not fully remove all obscurity, since the first advent occupied a period of thirty-three years. Some think that it means, to Christ's public ministry. This may be true. We are not prepared to say, however. From verse 26, we are inclined to place the seal at the cross. It is not our purpose, in these numbers, to enter into a critical investigation of all the events of each vision, neither do we design to come out on the definite time question. We shall not trace any chain of prophecy that does not, in our view, extend to the introduction of the coming age; so that we can readily see where we are in the various prophetic series. We are tracing our third and last series in Daniel, and we intend to show our position by the events themselves, and we shall make use of the various prophetic times, as signs of the proximity of the coming age. We have aimed to show that the seventy weeks are designed to enable us to measure the 2,300 days. What the sanctuary is, or what is understood by being cleansed or vindicated, or justified, or what the daily is, or the abomination that maketh desolate, we may explain hereafter.

Objections Answered—The Rest of the Dead—The Judgment—The Second Death.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

These objections to the non-resurrection of the wicked are all found in the book of Revelations. Yes, they are all in the 20th chapter. They are not found in the law, or in the prophets, or in the Gospel.

It will be conceded by all, that the book of Revelations, is full of symbols, and figures, and representations, which are not literally true. That these symbolical representations, can be understood symbolically. That to give to a symbolic statement a literal sense is just as untrue, as it is to give to a literal description a symbolic sense. That the sense of any passage that is new or doubtful, should be determined by what is written in the law and in the prophets. And that the interpretation of any passage that is in conflict with the general tenor of the Scriptures cannot be correct. Now, with these self-evident propositions in mind I will proceed to answer the above objections.

THE REST OF THE DEAD.

It is claimed, that the dead and the wicked dead. That after they have suffered all that is demanded of them, in the law, or in the Gospel, they will be raised from the dead to be punished again. But where is this written?

It is written, that, because the Lord is the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, and of all that are like them, they will be raised from the dead. But, the Lord is not the God of the wicked, they live without hope and without God in the world, and therefore they will not be raised from the dead.

It is written, that the promise of a resurrection was made to Abraham and to his seed. But the wicked are not the seed of Abraham; therefore they have no promise of a resurrection.

It is written, that Christ the seed of Abraham, was raised from the dead in fulfillment of the promise made of God to the fathers. But the wicked cannot be raised from the dead on account of that promise.

It is written, that Christ was raised from the dead, as the first fruits of them that slept; as the first born from the dead; as the first born among the brethren; and as the first sheaf of the harvest of the dead. But the wicked do not sleep in Christ; they are not to be born again; they are not among the brethren; they do not belong to the harvest of which Christ is the [illegible] that were in it. Did death [illegible] from the dead.

It is written, that all that are in Christ, all that are his will be made alive. But the wicked are not in him, neither are they his; therefore they will not be made alive.

It is written, that all who believe on Christ will have everlasting life and be raised up at the last day. But the wicked have not believed in him, and therefore will not be raised up at the last day.

Once more, it is written, that all who are accounted worthy of the resurrection, will be raised from the dead. But the wicked are not worthy of the resurrection, therefore they will not be raised from the dead.

The resurrection being conditional, none but those who have complied with the conditions of the resurrection will be raised from the dead. Then, the unconditional resurrection of the wicked, being out of harmony with the general tenor of the Scriptures on the subject, cannot be the true sense of the passage.

In the verse next preceding our text, the Revelator saw those who were to be raised from the dead. He saw the dead in Christ, and those who should afterward "die in the Lord." He saw those who were then worthy, and those who should afterwards become worthy of the resurrection. He saw them all in one company. "And among these who were to be raised from the dead, he saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." "But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished."

The rest of the dead are all the worthy dead who are not "included in those who were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God." But they all belong to the same harvest, they are all the seed of Abraham, and they are all worthy to be raised from the dead. This illustrates Paul's order of the resurrection, the resurrection of Christ and the harvest which he represents.

Christ the first fruits, and afterward they that are Christ's at his coming, and then the rest of the dead. But Christ, and those that are his at his coming, and the rest of dead, all belong to the same harvest, of which Christ was a specimen. Then the rest of the dead does not mean the wicked, as claimed.

THE JUDGMENT—REV. XX. 11, 15.

"And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it; from whose face the earth and the heavens fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of the things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

It is claimed that this judgment will be literal. That the wicked, after having suffered the one punishment which has passed upon all men, the only punishment known in the law and in the prophets, and without having performed any of the conditions of the resurrection, will be raised from the dead to be judged and punished again.

We know that those who have made the Lord their God will be raised from the dead, and that those who became the seed of Abraham will be heirs to the promise of a resurrection. We know that all who are in Christ will be made alive, and all who believe in him will be raised up at the last day. And we know that all who become worthy of the resurrection, and who have complied with its conditions will be raised from the dead. But what about those who have never complied with its conditions, how are they to be raised up?

This passage represents that all without any respect to character or conditions of resurrection will be raised up and made to stand before God. Is this literally true? Can it be the true sense of the passage? Perhaps a few questions will help to bring out the sense of this wonderful passage.

Did the Revelator see a great white throne literally? Did the Lord sit upon that throne as earthly kings sit upon thrones? Did the earth and the heaven flee away so that there was no place found for them? Did the dead small and great stand before God? Were there any real books in this judgment? Were the dead judged out of the books? Did the sea deliver up the dead that were in it? Did death and hell deliver up the dead that were in them? Were death and hell cast into the lake of fire? Did they die a second time? Were the dead cast into the lake of fire? Was the lake of fire a literal lake of fire?

Can any of these questions be answered in the affirmative? Is there a single feature of this description that is not figurative? Can it be a description of literal facts?

Affirmations are made concerning God, and the earth, and the heaven; concerning the dead, and the books, and the sea; concerning death and hell, the lake of fire, the second death and the judgment.

Are these statements literally true? or, are they figurative? What is said of the earth, and the heaven, and the dead, and the books, and the sea, and death and hell, and the lake of fire, is figurative. The remainder of the description may be. Then, we understand this description to be a figurative representation of the judgment of the dead. The dead are represented as standing before God, and as being judged while they are dead. The award of this judgment is represented as being life to all whose names are in the book of life, and the dead whose names are not in the book of life, were cast into the lake of fire. Thus, we have a symbolical description of the judgment of the dead, and their final destiny.

THE SECOND DEATH.

It is claimed that the second death is dying a second time; that, therefore no one can die the second death, who has not died once and been raised from the first death, that, therefore all the wicked must be raised from the dead in order to die the second death.

To die a second time is certainly a second death; but it may not be a second death of Revelation. The expression "second death" is used only in this book, and as every author may explain his own terms, we will consult the Author of this on this subject.

The Revelator had said, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," and "on such the second death hath no power." From these passages we might very naturally infer that the second death means to die a second time. But that this is not the sense of the passage in this book is evident from verse 14, which says, "Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." What is the second death? The answer is, to be cast into the lake of fire is the second death.

If, to cast death and hell into the lake of fire, is the second death, then, to cast anyone else into the lake of fire, would be the second death, as, "whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." This is the second death.

WHO WILL SUFFER THE SECOND DEATH?

All who will be cast into the lake of fire will suffer the second death. The beast and the false prophet were cast into the lake of fire. The devil was cast into the lake of fire. Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. The dead whose names were not found written in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire, and the living wicked shall have their part in the lake of fire. These all suffered the second death. They were all hurt of the second death. The second death had power over them all. But who of them died a second time? Who of them had been raised from the dead? What is called the second death is affirmed of them all. Then, the second death in this book does not mean to die a second time.

In my next I will try to show the harmony of the Scriptures on the resurrection question, which will conclude my effort upon this subject for the present.

In order to grow in grace, we must be much alone. It is not in society—even Christian society—that the soul grows most vigorously. In one single quiet hour of prayer it will often make more progress than in days of company with others. It is in the desert that the dew falls freshest and the air is purest.

Sow thy seed by morning light,
When the eastern sky is bright;
Scatter seed along your way,
As you journey at noon-day,
Sow them o'er the flowery plain;
Though birds devour, some may remain.

A real Christian seldom sees a defect in his neighbor. A pure lake reflects the beautiful sky, the clouds, and the whole overhanging trees; but when it is ruffled, it reflects nothing that is pure. A bad man seldom sees a good trait in his neighbor. An imperfect glass reflects nothing correctly, but show its own deficiency. A perfect mirror reflects nothing but bright and pure images.

Ah! to how many faith has been
No evidence of things unseen,
But a dim shadow that reveals
The creed of the Phantasmals!
For whom no man of sorrow died,
For whom the tragedy divine
Was but a symbol and a sign,
And Christ a phantom crucified;

The Spirit is called the Comforter; but before he assumes that name he is called the "Spirit of truth." All true Christian comfort must be based upon the truth. There is no comfort in a lie. There may be an opiate, or there may be a stupefaction in it; but the truth, the Spirit of truth alone, is the Comforter. As long as he comforts he will tell you the truth; and he will tell you the truth in order to comfort you.

THE TWO SLEEPERS.

There is a cradle song and sound—
A mother singing lullabies—
A little child with wearied eyes—
And angels keeping watch around.
And as the mother through the day
Sings to her darling while he sleeps,
Her eyes are turned from him away
Up to the rugged hillside steep.
And still she sings, as still she weeps,
That gentle, tuneful lullaby—
"Sleep, little one, while angels keep
A holy watch—my darling, sleep.

There is a cradle on the hill—
No gentle lullaby is heard—
There is no mother's soothing word
To break the silence deep and chill.
A little narrow, mossy mound—
A hillock where the daisies grow—
The violets nestling close around—
A little grave—while on the air
An echo from the vale below
Comes floating to the sleeper there—
"Sleep, little one, while angels keep
A holy watch—my darling, sleep."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a yearly belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Kingdom of God,

BY O. M. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S EIGHTH QUESTION.

I have been taught that the term "the Christ," as applied to Jesus—as I suppose you also concede—signifies a Prophet, a Priest and a King. Now as Peter confessed Jesus to be the Christ, Matt. xvi. 16; and others also confessed him to be the Christ, Acts viii. 37, and declared the same, Acts ii. 36, must he not be the Prophet, the Priest and the King now? And therefore the kingdom now.

REPLY.

The word "Christ" simply signifies "anointed," and may be applied to any one to whom the act of anointing has been administered, be he prophet, priest or king. Therefore they were Christs. But the expression "the Christ" would indicate or mark out some particular Christ, and is made to refer

1. To the character of whom Moses prophesied: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him shall ye hearken; and the Lord said, I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I command him. And it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." Deut. xviii 15, 17-19.

2. To the character of whom the Psalmist speaks: "The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Psa. cx. 4.

3. And to the King to sit upon David's throne as predicted: "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; Of the fruit of thy body will I sit upon thy throne." Psa. cxxxii. 11. To Zedekiah: "Thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high." Ezek. xxi. 25-26. And to the mother of Jesus: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32-33.

But now the question arises, since Peter made his confession using the present tense—"Thou art the Christ," did he use the present tense to denote a then existing fact, or did he use it prospectively? That he did not use it to denote a then existing fact is very evident,

1. From the language of Paul pertaining to Christ's priesthood, in which he says: "For were he on earth, he should not be a Priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law." Heb. viii. 4.

2. From the many expressions relative to the then future existence of the kingdom—such as to the people when drawing near to Jerusalem—"He said a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." Luke xix. 11. To the disciples when eating the supper—"I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come." Luke xxii. 18. "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." Luke xxii. 29. "Fear not little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32. To Joseph of Arimathea—"Who also himself waited for the kingdom of God." Luke xxiii. 51.

Therefore, as these Scriptures unmistakably show that Jesus was not then an officiating priest and king, your question is answered; and every mode of argument applied, to commence his official work this side of his ascension, when carried out will place the commencement of that work in the future.

I am well aware that to this last remark you, and possibly others may object from the consideration that it is often stated, and I have no doubt but what strongly believed that when Jesus comes again, then his official work as priest is at an end, then the mediatorial throne is vacated, and that mercy to humanity is then ended. But let me ask, that, notwithstanding men so preach it, and the hearers so believe it, do the Scriptures so teach it? Where do the Scriptures teach that he ever ceases to teach? Ever ceases to act as priest? Ever sat upon a mediatorial throne and is therefore to give up a mediatorial throne; and that mercy is to cease when Jesus comes again? Nowhere but abundantly to the contrary upon all those points.

But let us look at this subject a little further, and learn more of it if we possibly can. Jesus of Nazareth was anointed, and therefore, became, as the act indicates a Christ. He is the character prophesied of as the coming Prophet, Priest and King of the world, and therefore was entitled to be called the Christ.

Next it is said of his disciples: "You have a (chrisma) anointing from the Holy One." And, "The (chrisma) anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you." 1 John ii. 20, 27. Therefore, they are anointed ones—Christs—and were said to have been called Christ-ians at Antioch, and addressed by Peter and exhorted in their sufferings to suffer as a Christ-ian. Further, these anointed ones—Christians, who have been called out from the world, taken together as a mass, as a collective body are symbolically viewed under the symbol of the human body. See Matt. xviii. 8-9. "Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee; it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire;" Rom. xii. 4-5; "For as we have many members in one body and all members have not the same office; so we, being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." 1 Cor. xii. 12. "And as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." 1 Cor. x. 16. "The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body, for we are all partakers of that one bread." 1 Cor. xii. 18, "Now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. Verse 27. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Eph. iv. 16. "From whom the whole body fitly joined supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." Eph. i. 17-22. "The God of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . gave him to be the Head over all things to the church which is his body."

Thus, with this symbol before us the disciples as the many members and Jesus as the head, when all are raised from the dead changed to immortality and Jesus as the head takes his place with them they then become the Christ body, which assumes the government of the world. They are the seed of the woman who are to bruise the serpent's head. They are the seed of Abraham who are to administer the blessings to the families of the earth. They are the Ah-Shaddai—mighty coming ones of Abraham. They are the Tahvah—the coming Redeemer of the world manifested to Moses. They are the one like the Son of Man who approaches the Ancient of days as seen by Daniel. And then, and not till then is the full complement of the expression, "Thou art the Christ." Most assuredly then the expression, with Peter was prospective, and will forever remain so till the Christ body is complete.

Christian Union.

Dearly Beloved Brethren and Sisters:—In order that this priceless boon of a Savior's purchase be exhibited by us, who claim to be the disciples of Jesus, it is highly important that we have unwavering confidence in the prophetic word—that the prophets of Israel spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. Taking the Scriptures of Israel as our only rule of faith and practice in godliness, and sure guide to the Eden of rest, and thereby renouncing all sectarian names and human creeds, or articles of faith which have been drawn up by uninspired men, stating what they must believe, and what they must not believe, all for the purpose of creating a party and exalting self instead of Jesus the Life-Giver.

2. That we abide by the literal interpretation of this best of all books, the Bible of Abraham's God!

3. That we believe that its author has given it to us, clothed in language that we may understand.

4. That we allow each other the right to search and understand the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments for themselves.

5. That man must "live by every word of God."

6. That "every word of God is pure." Hence, in order to our purification, it must be believed and obeyed.

7. That we believe "all Scripture given by inspiration of God," is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly "furnished unto all good works." Hence, the importance of searching them daily, in order to obtain the mind of the Deity.

8. It is highly important that we "give heed to the sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise."

9. That we belive in a literal fulfillment of the prophetic word.

10. That when we hear a truth or doctrine advanced, which comes in collision with our peculiar notion of things, instead of rejecting them turning them into burlesque, we should remember that God has made it our duty to compare them with his unerring word, and, if they are found to be in harmony with it, then it is for us to receive them, though it may be at the sacrifice of a degree of popularity which we have gained by propagating error, or keeping back truth for the sake of worldly gain!

11. We should remember that the Great Head of the church has made it our duty to preach a whole gospel.

12. We must occupy a position that will enable us with pleasure to grant unto our brethren and sisters who may chance to differ with us on the true import of certain portions of the Scriptures of Israel, freedom of thought and speech, and, at the same time, exercise Christian kindness and patience towards them.

13. We must, at all times, occupy the position of a learner in the school of Christ.

14. We should acknowledge Jesus as our only head and leader, and those who do the will of God, as our brethren and sisters, seeking to fill our proper place in the body—the church of God.

15. We should seek to exalt Jesus instead of ourselves.

16. We should have love one to another, even as Jesus hath loved his sheep, by laying down his life for them!

17. We should "esteem others better than ourselves."

18. We should imitate Jesus our pattern, by bringing our will into subjection to the will of God! And, in the accomplishment of this noble work, God's will will be seen in our writings, sermons, exhortation, and in all our works.

Dearly beloved, let these rules be observed, and the cry of division would no longer be heard among us, and our weather-beaten bark would have the waters of strife and misrepresentation for those of peace and joy. Amen.

R. V. LYON.

"But be ye Doers of the Word, and not Hearers Only, Deceiving Your Own Selves."—James i. 22.

What does James mean by this language which is so pointed? The next verses following explain all. If a man looks in a glass he sees his natural face, but turns straightway and forgets what manner of man he was; forgot how he did look. So it is with hearers only, in one ear and out through the other—forgotten. Why? Because it lacked the practical part to make it perfect. We must practice our calling if we would be perfect in it, or, as James says, "Faith, without works, is dead." What, then, are the works? Let James tell us. "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, or hungry," and you say, "be filled or clothed," will that answer without you help him? I guess not. There is a little work to be done there in order to clinch your faith. Why, this? Because we are not living for ourselves alone, but for others. We must not be selfish, for it is one of the lusts of the flesh that are continually warring in our members. We must beware. How will the world, in general, believe us that we are Christians without we throw these little acts of kindness around us, and not only the pleasure it gives to the donor and recipient? It is a gratification to know that we have done these little thousand and one gifts, or acts of kindness, wherever it lay in our power, whether to brother or sister, friend or foe, it matters not. It all goes in our lifetime, and is a guarantee of our faith; "but let not your left hand know what your right doeth." Do not parade your benevolence publicly, for the Lord knows that it is only loaned to us. Why! how is this? says one. What I own, I own. Yes, my friend, but can you take it with you when you die—your brown stone front, or your splendid ground, or your coffers? No; you cannot. What are you going to do? Why, leave it behind. Well, then, you are not owner. This is the vineyard of the Lord and Master, and he is coming ere long.

Well, dear brethren and sisters, I wish I could do better in my writing, but I do the best I can, and sincerely hope the little efforts I am putting forth in my feeble way, may add encouragement to others of like faith; that, together, we may strive for that crown that awaits all who hold out faithful to the end; and that we may be patient in well doing, and, by so doing, seek, for what! Wealth? No. Simply this: Glory, honor and immortality; which means eternal life. This will put us, friends, where death will not reach us; no sorrow, nor pain any more. And we must learn to wait for the reward, be patient, and not tire of the efforts; however futile they may seem to us, they will be made right in their time. Leave that to the Lord.

Learn to wait—life's hardest lesson,
Cannot, perchance, through blinding tears,
While the heart-throbs sadly echo
To the tread of passing years.

Learn to wait—hope's slow fruition;
Faint not, though the way seem long;
There is joy in each condition;
Hearts through suffering may grow strong.

Constant sunshine, however welcome,
Ne'er can ripen fruits and flowers;
Giant oaks, only half their greatness
To the scathing tempest's powers.

Thus a soul untouched by sorrow,
Aims not to a higher state;
Joys seek but a brighter morrow;
Only sad hearts learn to wait.

Human strength and human greatness
Spring not from the sunny side;
Heroes must be more than driftwood
Floating on a wayless tide.

Yours as ever in patience,
THOS. HUGHES.

There are strings in the harp of every life, which though covered with dust, give out music when the wings of truth stir the air.

"The very word humanity," says Max Muller, "dates from Christianity." No such idea, and therefore, no such term, was found among men before Christ.

DON'T NOT.

"When the day of life is dreary,
And when gloom thy course enshrouds—
When thy steps are faint and weary,
And thy spirit dark with clouds,
Steadfast still in thy well doing;
Let thy soul forget the past—
Steadfast still the right pursuing,
Doubt not! Joy shall come at last."

It is not unworthiness, but unwillingness, that bars any man from God. Thousands have missed of him by their unwillingness, but he never put off one soul on account of its unworthiness.—Florel.

It is in the minute circumstances of a man's conduct that we are to inquire for his real character. In these he is under the influence of his natural disposition and acts from himself, while in his more open and important actions he may be drawn by public opinion, and many other external motives may have taken part in them.

Those that keep from evil in times of common iniquity, God will keep from harm in times of common calamity.

DAY BY DAY.

Every day has dawn,
Its soft and silent eye,
Its noontide hours of bliss or pain—
Why should we grieve?

Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And scorn the little days that pass
Like angels on the wing?

Each morning round a small, sweet face,
As beautiful as near
Because it is so small a face
We will not see it clear.

And so it turns from us, and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Though we would give our lives for it,
It never comes again.

SELECTIONS.

[N. Y. Times.]

Construction of the Globe.—The wise Intelligence which Molded the Design.

A lecture was delivered in Chickering Hall last evening, Feb. 26, under the auspices of the New York Academy of Sciences, by Prof. B. N. Martin, D. D., entitled "Proofs of Design in the Material Construction of the Globe." The lecturer remarked that the great argument of a creative design in the construction of the globe existed among the varying aspects of nature. Seeking to prove from the phenomena of the globe the existence of a creative intelligence, one has but to investigate every department of that world which is the abode of man, and to drew forth into view the varied adaptions in every part of it which indicate an intelligent authorship. It required an investigation of the fundamental principles of the mind, its operations and impressions as given to our consciousness. The great argument of a design in the formation of the globe, of which one finds some suggestions and intimation in the writings of Plato, Aristotle, and Cicero, seemed to have reached a culmination in our own century in the elaborate treatises of Paley and Brougham and the Bridgewater volumes. Darwin had attempted to show that there was a change constantly going forward in the organism of animals, in order to adapt themselves to the circumstances under which they found themselves existing. All those that could successfully adapt themselves to circumstances lived. Those who could not died, without there being any original design in it. This kind of reasoning admitted of a twofold modification and reply. On the one hand, it might be shown that this self-adjustment is not capable of giving an adequate account for the facts of organic adaptation. It is not the only factor. The other mode of reply consisted in showing that the principle of creative design is equally observable in the permanent arrangements of the earth and its original constitution, which are incapable of modification or development. There was but a single substance on the globe adapted to the purposes of fuel. Carbon furnished the whole supply. Here we had a definite provision of one single elementary substance alone capable of answering that necessary purpose. While fuel was not absolutely essential to the animal life of man, it was necessary to the progress of society and to the advance of civilization. This fact, the lecturer thought, indicated a design and intelligence back of it all. Another remarkable adaptation was found in the presence of iron. The variety of uses to which iron was applied were innumerable, and indicated a wise provision of nature. In the past we had had the stone age, the brass age, and the iron age. The civilization of mankind really commenced with the iron age. The many adaptations which we saw around us, the many conveniences and instruments of progress, the many ornaments of taste and beauty, and all things which contributed to the progress and happiness of man, were so clearly the product of design that we were forced irresistible to the conclusion that behind them all was a wise and beneficent intelligence which had molded them all with a design. In closing, the speaker said: "Shall we not join that chorus of rejoicing ones on high, who sing before the Throne. 'Great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty!'"

The love that survives the tomb is the noblest attribute of the soul. If it has woes it has likewise its desires; and when the overwhelming burst of grief is lulled into the gentle tear of recollection, then the sudden anguish and convulsive agony over the present ruins of all we most loved are softened away into pensive meditation of all that it was in the days of its loveliness. Who would root such a sorrow from the heart? Though it may sometimes throw a passing cloud over the bright hour of gayety, or spread a deeper sadness over the hours of gloom, yet who would exchange it for the song of pleasure or the burst of revelry? No; there is a voice from the tomb sweeter than song; there is a remembrance of the dead to which we turn even from the charm of the living.

Gen. Loris Melikoff, the new Russian military dictator, is a handsome soldier, with black curly hair, large, dark, sparkling eyes, a somewhat bronzed complexion, and features which, without being quite regular, are comely and refined. He is of middle stature, of a slight, nervous structure and spare person. His manners are polished and extremely affable, while his conversation is lively and easy. He has been one of the most successful of the military governors who have been invested with supreme power in their districts during the last year. He is a man of great and varied accomplishments. In addition to his native language, Armenian, he is familiar with and speaks Russian, French, Turkish, and Persian, but not German and English.

A house built in 1639 still stands in Dedham, Mass., and is the oldest in New England. It is beautifully situated under heavily branching elms, with a moss-covered roof. Much of the original furniture, 240 years of age, still remains, and has been in the possession of one family, named Fairbanks, during all of that time.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 7, 1880.

AT our meeting in Plymouth, Sunday, April 4, two young ladies, Miss Lottie Armstrong and Miss Kittie B. McDonald came forward to yield the obedience of faith to the command of our Savior in the great commission. In the afternoon we repaired to Pretty Lake, a most lovely sheet of water, and buried these new converts to our dear Redeemer beneath the rolling waves that a strong wind was drifting toward the shore where the ordinance was administered. Our young sisters made up their minds upon due investigation, and resolutely and unhesitatingly were placed in that liquid grave so significantly symbolical of the death, burial, and resurrection of both the Redeemer and the redeemed.

WE give Bro. A. King's concluding article on the non-resurrection of the ungodly in this number. On this particular theory we have now placed before our readers the lengthy arguments of three different writers without note or comment. We have read these articles with attention, and, though indisposed to enter into any argument, having promised to keep quiet, we feel at liberty to express our individual sentiments that we may not be misapprehended by any of our brethren, nor misrepresented by any of our exchanges. We still believe that Jesus in John v. 28, 29, taught not only a literal resurrection of the dead, but also of two distinct classes or orders of the dead, one of these classes attain to the resurrection of life, and the other class come forth into the resurrection of judgment. For parallel texts consult Luke x. 14 and Luke xi. 32, 33. Where the same Greek word is rendered judgment instead of damnation. As it respects Acts xxiv. 14, 15, we do not think there has been any mistake made in rendering Paul's language into the English. We have no doubt that Paul believed that there would be a multitude raised from the dead who have died in an unjustified state. When we read the eleventh chapter to the Romans it is difficult for us to conclude that he was persuaded that an overwhelming majority of the lineal descendants of Abraham embracing seventy or eighty entire generations since the ten tribes went into captivity, must go down to utterly helpless graves. He well knew that only a remnant would win the heavenly exaltation of sharing with the Redeemer the honors of eternal royalty; but he also knew that the prophet had written that "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory." There can be no just grounds of complaint on the part of those who limit the resurrection to the just alone that they have had no opportunity to publish their sentiments through THE RESTITUTION. We assure them that it has been against the protest of many of our readers that the non-resurrection theory has been admitted. Though not endorsing it ourself we have been willing to hear all sides. The different parties have had ample space to explain themselves, and now very many of our readers imperatively demand that the paper be devoted to subjects of a more practical bearing on the living issues of our own age and generation. With this demand, personally we feel disposed to comply. If we will now go to the work of preaching the gospel to the living, God will take care of the dead.

ST. ANNE, ILL., March 31, 1880.

S. A. Chaplin:—

DEAR BROTHER:—Please allow me to intrude upon your valuable time a few moments. Can you give me any information as to a railroad being built at Jerusalem and the Holy Land? I understand there was a Railroad Company organized under the "Foreign Railroad Law" of Massachusetts. Do you know who the officers of said Company are, & where any information could be had concerning them? Can you give me the name and address of some Christian brother residing at or near Jerusalem?

B. R. NORDYKE,
Agent C. L. & C. R. R.

The following article from a paper kindly sent us by some friend will furnish our brother all the information in our possession in regard to the contemplated railroad in Palestine. In this literal way such prophecies as these are to receive their strictly literal fulfillment.

In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land. Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance. Isa. xix. 23 25.

We can give the address of no one at Jerusalem except Wm. W. Doughty whose articles we have copied into our paper from the Age to Come Herald, and to whom we are now sending THE RESTITUTION. We do not know how long he will remain in Palestine. It seems a little singular to us to direct a paper to Jerusalem, Palestine, Syria.

THE PALESTINE RAILROAD — DAYBREAK IN THE EAST.

Since the brief statement last month of the Palestine railroad we have learned additional facts concerning it which give the enterprise new importance. It is certain to become, when completed, an efficient element in Eastern politics. In case of peace, it will be of continuous benefit to the nations it connects; in case of war, it will give immense advantage to the power which controls it. As was understood when the charter was first made public, the Massachusetts corporators are a small factor. The real work is to be done with the financial support of two large English banking houses, and the charter was obtained with the minimum amount of capital and number of incorporators. There are in the company fifteen men, with each one share of stock at one hundred dollars, and only eight of the fifteen live in Massachusetts—just enough to come within the law. It is likely, however, that the enterprise will receive aid in this country, perhaps more than was first expected, for within three days a Boston capitalist has subscribed for twenty-seven thousand dollars' worth of the stock. The same spirit, furthermore, which led him to subscribe is likely to be an inducement to others.

Under the charter the proposed road will extend from Cairo in Egypt to Mosul on the river Tigris, with branches to Jerusalem, Jaffa, Nablus, Beirut, Aleppo, Iskenderoon and Erzeroum, if it should be judged best or necessary to build them. In detail the route is described as follows: Beginning at Cairo, the road runs northward on the Pelusiac branch of the Nile to Port Said, the northern end of the Suez canal. At this point connection will be possible with the lines of steamers running between the East and Europe. Turning eastward from Port Said, the road will pass over the level plain near the seashore, across the desolate tract between Egypt and Palestine. Soon after entering Palestine it goes through Gaza, Esdud (the ancient Ashdod), and thence to Ramleh. At this place the branches for Jaffa and Jerusalem will leave the main line, the Jerusalem branch ascending the valley of the Nahr Rubin and Wadi Surar. It reaches the city from the north and west of the Gihon valley, and the station will be at or near the Damascus gate. Leaving Ramleh, the main line runs north through the plain of Sharon to a point near the ancient Bethar, whence a branch is proposed to Nablus, the ancient Shechem. Continuing northerly from Bethar to the Abu Zabura, the road ascends that river valley and crosses the Carmel range through the Megiddo pass.

From Cairo to this point the maximum grade is twenty feet to a mile, and through the pass it is forty feet to a mile. From the base of the hill of Megiddo a branch is proposed, to run down the plain of Esdraelon, and thence northward along the shore through Acre and Sidon, and by the ruins of Tyre to Beyrout. Iskenderoon lies north of Beyrout at the north-east corner of the Mediterranean Sea, upon the gulf of the same name. The main line passes from Megiddo across the plain of Esdraelon, by the base of Mount Tabor, and along the west side of Lake Gennesaret. It crosses the Jordan at or near Jacob's bridge, and follows up the valley, and gradually climbs the Jebel Heish at a grade of sixty feet to the mile. Crossing the summit and descending the valley on the other side, it stretches across the plain to Damascus. Thence it is projected to the Euphrates, to connect with the Euphrates Valley railroad, which is about to be built by an English company. From the river it extends to Mosul, and will connect there with a proposed railroad from Diabekir and the Black Sea. Branches to Aleppo and Erzeroum will be constructed as soon as desired after the completion of the main line.

Such is the plan. As it stands, it brings the Russian frontier near Egypt and makes connections with India more feasible. If it should prove to be the beginning of a widely extended system of railways from India to Asia Minor and the Mediterranean Sea, it will quicken wonderfully the older civilization of the East with the newer civilization of the West. It will strengthen the power of English arms, English customs and the English language. With the influence England now has over Turkey, with the island of Cyprus in the control of England, with a railroad straight into the continent built by English money and managed in English interests, the island kingdom would be more than ever a power in the East. Such a road as this will strengthen England in her defense against Russia, whenever the contest comes between the enlarging boundaries of the dominion in India and the southward creeping line of the Muscovite empire.

It is the intention of the officers of the road to push its construction rapidly as soon as the necessary authority can be obtained from the Turkish government. This authority is expected soon, through the exertions of the projectors and the English and American ministers at Constantinople. The President of the road will depart in a few weeks for London, Constantinople and the East.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Terms Defined—Little Horn, What Power?—Gabriel's Third Visit—Literal Narration of Events From the Days of Daniel to the Resurrection—Various Dates—Characters—Time of the End.—No. 13.

J. P. WEETHEE.

1. Terms Defined.—The first term which we propose to explain is the Sanctuary. What is its signification in the vision? (See Dan. viii. 14.) "Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." What is this SANCTUARY? The following is the Hebrew:

עַד עֶרֶב בֹּקֶר אַלְפַּיִם וּשְׁלֹשׁ מֵאוֹת וְנִצְדַּק קֹדֶשׁ ad erev boker alpayim vesh'losh maoth v'nitz'dak kodesh.

Kodesh is the word that is rendered sanctuary, and is the word used by Gabriel's forerunner, a heavenly messenger. It is a symbol of some thought, for words are symbols of thoughts. There must be in that word, some clear, distinct, and leading thought. What is that thought? How is the word used in other places?

We have examined the Hebrew word Kodesh in more than one hundred passages, with the following results:—1. Its primary meaning is holy, and is a Divine attribute; one of the names of the Deity,—"Holy and reverend (is) his name." Psa. cxl. 9. 2. Its second feature is that of place. Wherever God dwells that place is a holy place, or sanctuary, whether in a person, house, or land. God himself is called a sanctuary. Ezek. xi. To Judah was God's sanctuary (Psa. cxiv. 2) because He dwelt with Judah. Messiah was to be a sanctuary. Isa. viii. 14. Heaven is a sanctuary (Psa. cl. 19) since it is God's dwelling-place. While God dwelt with Israel, they were his sanctuary. The holy of holies, which was first in the tabernacle in the wilderness, then in Jerusalem, and finally, in the temple, is called the sanctuary (kodesh) not less than eighty times. Holy of holies is the usual meaning of sanctuary. Its meaning then, was enlarged so as to include, both the most holy place, and the holy place. After that it gave its name to the whole tabernacle a type of the universe; then to the temple, afterwards to the city, then to the land. Exod. xv. 17; Psa. lxxviii. 54; Isa. lx. 13. The entire earth will be a sanctuary. The word sanctuary has for its distinct and leading thought, the dwelling-place of Jehovah, whether in a person, house, or land.

But it is asked: What does it mean in Dan. viii. 14? This question we propose now to consider. It was given in answer to a question, which one holy (one) asked another holy (one) קָדוֹשׁ "Then I heard one holy (one) speaking, and another holy (one) said unto לְפַלְמוֹנִי —la Palmoni—this particular one (that he heard speaking). How long (shall be) the vision (concerning) the daily (sacrifice), and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary (kodesh) and the host (צָבָא tza-va, multitude) to be trodden under foot." Verse 13. The sanctuary is God's dwelling-place among men, and, therefore, while occupied by him it is holy, and host means the vast company that resort to it for worship. These two expressions refer to the same event. "The sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot," Dan. viii. 13, and "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 24. So, likewise, are Dan. ix. 26, and Rom. xi. 25. The sanctuary, about which the "wonderful numberer" (Dan. viii. 13) was speaking, was in Jerusalem, and fared the fate of that city; so did the host, or people. There never has been a time since the fall of Jerusalem by Titus that that sanctuary and host have not been trodden down of the Gentiles; consequently the sanctuary (holy place) is not yet "cleansed." What shall be done to the sanctuary? "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Verse 14. Let us examine the Hebrew, for that is the language used by the Palmoni, the heavenly messenger. The Hebrew of the word "cleansed," is נִצְדַּק (n'tzadak) v'nitz dak, Niph. Pret. with ו vau conver. Its primary meaning is acquitted, made free: Used here as a future tense,—then shall the sanctuary be acquitted, made free, cease to be trodden under foot. It shows the reverse of what it has been during the latter part of the 2300 years.

3. Daily.—The Hebrew is תָּמִיד ta mid,—הַתָּמִיד ha ta-mid, the continual. לֶחֶם תָּמִיד le hem ha ta mid —the continued bread, or the bread constantly placed in the temple—night and day. Ta-mid is found in Dan. viii. 11, 12, 13; in Dan. xi. 31, and in Dan. xii. 11. Sacrifice does not follow in the Hebrew, in either one of the five passages. That word is supplied by the translators, and incorrectly, we think. When the word sacrifice is necessary to the meaning it is expressed, as in Dan. ix. 27, "He shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." Daily must, therefore, limit some other noun,—abomination—as the daily Pagan ritual. The sacred fire was kept constantly burning in their temples, as an object of worship, and to aid in consuming unclean animals offered in sacrifice, these daily or continual heathen practices were to God an abomination. These fires were kept continually burning; it was, therefore, a continual abomination; this we call the Pagan daily or continual abomination, which, under Constantine the Great, was removed, to give room to the Papal abominations.

4. Abomination.—We are now prepared to examine the word translated abomination. In Dan. ix. 27, we have the following Hebrew:

וְעַל כְּנַף שִׁקּוּצִים מְשֹׁמֵם

v'al K'naph shik-kutz-im m'shomaim; and on the wall (battlement) the eagles of the Desolator. One Hebrew Lexicon renders it as follows: "The Scripture use of the word abomination is what we now propose to investigate. We have examined the term in about one hundred and thirty passages, in the singular and plural, with the following results:—The English word has two principal Hebrew words, to-at rah, and she-ketz. From the 130 passages, we deduce the this great truth:—whenever abomination refers to a person, place, or thing, which, in itself, is unclean, in the eyes of God, the word she-ketz is used; when it refers to the actions and practices, that are impure, the Divine Spirit uses the word to at rah. Let us examine a few passages to illustrate the general practice. To at rah is used in more than one hundred texts, from which we make our quotations:—"Bring no more vain oblations, incense is an abomination (to-at-rah) unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with." Isa. i. 13. "And none considereth in his heart, neither (is there) knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burnt part of it in the fire; yea, also I have baked bread upon the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh and eaten (it); and shall I make the residue thereof an abomination (to-at rah)? Shall I fall down to the stock of a tree?" Here the Jews are practicing heathen idolatry. Their actions, in the sight of God, were (to at-rah) an abomination.

"And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof and the goodness thereof; but when ye entered ye defiled my land, and made my heritage an (to at rah) abomination?" Jer. ii. 7. "Were they ashamed when they committed (to at-rah) abomination? "And they build the high places of Baal, which (are) in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through (the fire) unto Molech, which I commanded not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this (to-at rah) abomination, to cause Judah to sin." Jer. xxxii. 35. "And they were haughty and committed (to at-rah) abomination; therefore I took them away as I saw good." Ezek. xvi. 50. Heathen corrupt practices are here called abominations. "Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men, is (to-at-rah) abomination in the sight of God." Luke xvi. 15. "And there shall in nowise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither (whatsoever) worketh (to-at-rah) abomination, or (maketh) a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Rev. xxi. 27. To at-rah always refers to impure and unlawful actions.

Let us now see how the Spirit uses the word she-kets; what thought he designs to convey. Since language is the medium of thought, through it we shall see the thought, which came directly from Jehovah. This alone is inspired.

List of Unclean Things.—"And all that have not fins nor scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which (is) in the waters they shall be an abomination (she kets) unto you; ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcasses in abomination (she-kets).

Among the Fowls.—"These are (she-kets) an abomination among the fowls; they shall not be eaten, they (are) an (she kets) abomination; the eagle, ossifrage, vulture, kite, raven, owl, cormorant, night hawk, cuckow-hawk, great owl, swan, pelican, gier-eagle, stork, heron, lapwing, and the bat. All fowls that creep, going upon (all) four, (shall be) an (she kets) abomination unto you." * * * *

Creeping Things.—"And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth (shall be) an (she-kets) abomination. Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon (all) four, or whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they (are) an (she kets) abomination. Ye shall not make yourselves (souls) abominable תְּשַׁקְּצוּ ti shak ke tzoo with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled therefore." Lev. xi. 10, 13 20, 41, 42, 43.

"For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom (Molech) the (she kets) abomination of the Ammonites. Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, the (she-kets) abomination of Moab, in the hill that (is) before Jerusalem; and for Molech, the (she-kets) abomination of the children of Ammon." 1 King xi 5, 7. Here idols are called (she kets) abominations; and, as they were continual, they were daily abominations.

"They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens, behind one (tree) in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the (she-kets) abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord." Isa. lxvi. 17. (See verse 3).

Shek kutz-im, the plural of she kets, is found in Dan. ix. 27, and is explained above. "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily (sacrifice), and they shall place the (she-kets) abomination that maketh desolate." Dan xi. 31. "And from the time (that) the daily (sacrifice) shall be taken away, and the (she-kets) abomination that maketh desolate (margin, to set up the abomination) set up, (there shall be) a thousand two hundred and ninety days." Dan. xii. 11. The daily or Pagan (she-kets) abomination is removed, and its substitute the Papal (she kets) abomination set up.

The 1290 days (years) date from the period of the removal of one abomination, and the setting up of the other.

"When ye, therefore, shall see the (she-kets) abomination of desolation, (ha-m'sho-maim desolator) spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (ko desh) sanctuary; who readeth, let him understand." Matt. xxiv. 15. Cestius Gallus about the middle of the year A. D. 66 comes into Judea. He besieges the temple of Jerusalem; retires; is defeated by the Jews. The Christians, seeing a war about to break out, retire to Pella, in the kingdom of Agrippa, beyond Jordan.

"But when ye shall see the (ha shekkoots'—ha m'sho maim) abomination of desolation, (desolator) spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand where it ought not (let him that readeth understand) then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains." Mark xiii. 14. The Roman was always an empire of idols, Pagan and Papal. Pagan idols, baptized, became Papal idols, with new names those of departed saints. The Papacy is baptized heathenism. Supplementary Paganism: it is the abomination of the Desolator.

5. Desolator—Who?—We shall be obliged to confine this number to defining terms—leaving the other subjects, at the head of this number, for future investigation. Our numbers are accumulating beyond our expectations. We started out with two leading thoughts in our mind:—1. The Coming Age itself. 2. The Proximity of that Age. On the first thought, we were as brief as the subject would allow, to be presented distinctly, and in a manner to be understood.

In eliminating the second thought we proposed to follow each chain of prophecy that extended to that event, and by comparing the events predicted with the history of the world, to learn our present position relative to the coming age. In Daniel's prophecies there are three of those continuous chains of events, in three classes of symbols, seen in, at least, three distinct visions: 1. The metallic image, extending to the coming of Christ to establish the fifth universal monarchy. 2. The four great beasts extending to the coming of Christ and the saints' reign. These two chains we have traced and finished. 3. The vision of the ram, he goat, and little horn of Dan. viii. This vision is without any serious difficulty, so far as it relates to the first two classes of symbols, the ram and he-goat, both being explained by the angel Gabriel. The entire difficulty lies in identifying the agent symbolized by the little horn, and in eliminating his agency, as explained by the messenger Gabriel in his three noted visits to Daniel. We have condensed our expositions as much as the nature of the subjects will allow. Follow us, then, as we pursue the intricate ramifications of our second thought.

Who is the Desolator?—Our English translation of the Hebrew M'shomaim, is desolation; in the margin on Dan. ix. 27, it is rendered desolator. Which is correct? Our common version brings to view a great system of idolatry by the word abomination, and a terrible wasting, without naming an agent, yet the vision, of which this is in part an explanation, presents an agent and agency.

THE GREAT AGITATION.

The war on the Jesuits continues with unabated violence, neither side showing any evidence of yielding. In Les Debats John Lemoinne has another article. He says: "Under the Republican Government the Jesuits have always been more leniently treated than under a monarchy; and it is only when the Republic refuses itself to be expelled by them that these arch plotters and conspirators raise the cry of persecution and talk of Nero and Diocletian. Le Soleil publishes a circular letter from the Archbishops and Bishops who are the founders of the Catholic University of Algoefangers, announcing their intention to continue the educational work of the institution undismayed by the provisions of the recent law on higher education. It is estimated that there are 20,000 pupils of unauthorized religious congregations in France, one-half of whom are taught by the Jesuits. The decrees promulgated by the Government order the parents and guardians of these pupils to withdraw them.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

FAIRBURY, Ill., March 31.—The Supreme Court has finally decided the important question of permitting the reading of the Bible in the public schools, in favor of such reading. The issue was raised in a school in Forest township, where the directors ordered fifteen minutes' reading of the Bible each morning, and directed all scholars, during its reading, to refrain from other studies. Mr. McCormick, a Catholic, regarding the reading as religious instruction, and not contemplated by the public school system, directed his son not to refrain from studying during the reading of the Bible, whereupon he was expelled from school. The case was decided in favor of the directors by Judge Pillsbury, and the decision is affirmed on McCormick's appeal to the Supreme Court.

POETRY.

An Inquiry.

TO S. ROXANA WING.

Pray where are our watchmen and leaders?
Sir, have they deserted the field?
Do they think the foes are all conquered?
Or, do they think they will quietly yield?

A few are yet firm and unyielding,
And fear not the battle's contest;
Still watching and cheering their comrades,
But where, oh where are the rest?

Say, have they lost sight of the promise?
Their trust bark by tempests been riven?
Forgetting, to those who prove faithful,
The glorious reward will be given.

We know that God's work will go forward,
His plans are unyielding to man;
Then let us take courage and onward,
Our Savior will soon take command.

May God bless our leaders who are steadfast,
The end of their watching is near;
The welcome, "well done, faithful servant,"
Awaits them, when Christ shall appear.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Resurrection.

Editor Restitution:—I am aware of the objections at times made in your paper by some sensitive brethren against any different ideas appearing in it from brethren who send you communications on sundry subjects of the deepest interest. After close and patient investigation, I find where one of these sensitive ones exist, there may be ten who wish the closest examination of the points which form the grand and glorious system of truth as professed by our people, and which they never would have arrived at if amicable discussion and exchange of brotherly sentiment had been shut out. It is the highest privilege of men, untrammeled by creeds, to search out every point of truth for the edification of one another, and any light that can be obtained by different brethren, to be made known and submitted to the whole. Such a proceeding is our imperative duty. We are not supposed to write or speak in order to please outsiders who do not, in any degree, sympathize with our views, and, by so doing, in a measure, compromise the truth. In my last paper I could not set forth points which have a particular bearing upon the question of the resurrection without being too tedious, so I trust you will excuse and consider this as the conclusion of the other, and give it an insertion at your earliest convenience, as the other cannot be understood without it.

It ought to be evident to every careful enquirer, that the apostle had in view, in 1 Cor. xv.; Rom. v., and all other kindred Scriptures, the believers in Jesus, both dead and living, and them only! as every one of his letters are addressed, exclusively, to that class; not one word, or one letter addressed to unbelievers. Any other view will obviate the necessity for the existence of two classes at all! Albeit, the Scriptures keep both classes distinct and separate from Genesis to Revelations. This is so prominently set forth that it is difficult to mistake it. There is not one promise in the Bible belonging to unbelievers as such, until they repent, believe, and turn in by gospel obedience; as in Matt. xxviii. 19. The application, or offer of the promises to men upon any other terms is only "strengthening the hands of the wicked," and is an unscriptural, unwarrantable proceeding of man upon their own responsibility, (however good the intention) as there is neither command or precedent for such application; and if the higher promises are given to unbelievers, certainly the lesser ones cannot be denied them!

It ought to be distinctly understood that the resurrection is no part of a threatening, but a promise of the very highest order that can be given to the obedient believer, for the simple reason that everything else which has been done for him would be useless without it. In fact, the Scriptures cannot be understood without a distinct recognition of these two sections of mankind. We read of two Adams, two images, two states, two seeds, not three of any of them. Man, up to the present, has borne the image of the first Adam. The next will be the image of the last Adam; but if any are raised in a flesh and blood body, they will have borne the image of the earthy Adam twice. But where do we find any such teaching?

The supposition that there will not be a sufficient number of individuals to fulfill the promises to Abraham, nor enough subjects for the associates of Jesus to reign over, is, in some measure, the basis of this universal resurrection. I have heard such objections made, and have seen writings to the same effect. In addition to this, the writings of Henry Dunn, Andrew Jukes, N. H. Barbour, Jacob Blain, Joseph B. Rotherham, and the late highly venerated George Storrs, and several others, unnecessary to mention, have placed this theory in its present position among the brethren. I have read more or less of the writings of all these men, and I would be very sorry to take their views in support of this or any other doctrine not plainly taught in the "law and the testimony," for this reason: because every one of them have made the most egregious blunders upon other points connected with Scriptural truth of most vital importance, if not fatal to it. If there should be any doubt of what I now state, I can furnish full proof. But a sufficient number for every purpose intended, will be brought out by the extension of the millennial reign, as intimated by the Scriptures referred to in my last paper, i. e., Deut. vii. 9; 1 Chron. xvi. 15; Psa. cv. 8. All of these Scriptures, purporting to be a part of the covenant made with Abraham, promising a blessing to "a thousand generations," or, according to Exodus xx. 6, to "thousands of generations!"

Very few would advocate the idea of generations being produced by immortals, subsequent to resurrection and change. I know of one man holding such view. But certainly there numerous generations must be produced by mortals. This must, of necessity, extend the reign of Jesus far beyond the symbolical "one thousand years." I have seen the writings of a very able writer on some points charging a co-temporary with setting forth the idea, that there will be a greater harvest of souls saved out of hell, than was ever saved from the earth. I have, myself, heard a similar idea set forth by a Universalist minister from his pulpit in the city of Cincinnati. Such are the vagaries of men's minds who wander in intricate mazes outside of Scriptural bounds.

Numbers of brethren amongst ourselves suppose that "the rest of the dead" mentioned in Rev. xx. 5, must be the unbelieving dead. Where is the proof on this point? I am aware that this first sentence in verse 6, "the rest of the dead lived not again, until the thousand years were finished," I say this sentence is rejected by the highest authorities. The "Syriac" translation does not contain it, and this is the earliest manuscript in the hands of any one, claimed to be written at the close of the first century. "Tischendorf" also rejects it; not being found in "Sinaitic" manuscript, but "Alford" and the "Bible Union" retain it. The "Diaglott" has a foot note, supposing it to be an oversight in the "Vatican" manuscript, as it is not found in it. The "Rheims," (Catholic) retains it, which is singular, if omitted in the "Vatican." But each one of those now mentioned retains the last clause of verse 5, "This is the first resurrection." The first, we understand, will take place at the Lord's coming, or the beginning of the reign; and, as a positive mention of a "first" implies the certainty of a second, or another, it is not of positively great or vital importance whether the first sentence be genuine or not, as it does not at all injure the meaning as to a "first" and a second resurrection—one at the commencement of the reign, and another at its conclusion.

Such a state of things must be brought about by the fact that there will be mortality and death under the reign of Jesus, for he must reign until he has put all enemies under his feet, and "the last enemy to be destroyed is death." This being the case, then, why may not this "rest of the dead," or this second resurrection, be the "rest" of the Lord's dead, or the believers who shall die during the millennial reign? A similar class to those already raised, if it does not apply to this class, there is not one word spoken of themselves, or their resurrection, in the whole book. Those who can believe that Jesus will have his believing people unnoticed, and raise a host of unbelievers, can do so. I am not one of them.

There is another strong objection to raising such a multitude of murderers, robbers, adulterers, fornicators, persecutors, and other vile characters, who have already cursed the earth and annoyed society more than enough. There is quite a sufficient number of such upon the earth at present without an overwhelming addition. As if Jehovah delighted in a multitude of evil-doers! It is quite apparent to me that it would be just giving them another chance of resuming their old vocations for some indefinite period, as their period in the dust would make no change in their character, as it would be only like waking from a night's sleep; and all those would be raised without food raiment, house, home or money, to obtain these necessaries. But, it may be said, that all these might be provided for by miracle, and evil-doing prevented by God's interference. Quite true, if he was so minded. But, query: Would he do it? There is, at this present time, a vast amount of suffering upon our earth in every country; but he does not perform any miracle to prevent it, although numbers of them would be found more worthy than vast numbers of those who, it is supposed, will be raised. Who can say that these visitations are not for the punishment of sins? such as have caused the destruction of other evil-doers.

There is also, at present, an immense amount of evil-doing throughout every country, but, apparently, Jehovah does not interfere to prevent it, unless, indeed, these unparalleled accidents which so frequently occur by fire, shipwrecks, railroads, explosions, and otherwise, should prove to be the binding of the tares in bundles, as hundreds are frequently destroyed together in a few minutes. I do not say it is so, nor do I say it is not. There is still another question. Thousands of millions of men have returned to the dust. Can such dust form bodies of flesh and blood, otherwise than by the original process which formed the first Adam, that is, by formation and inbreathing? for there is no principle in man sufficient to raise him from the dust unless he has a union with Jesus and his "life be hid with Christ in God." Col. iii. 3. Such union the unbeliever has not. Ergo, the first process would be necessary. But, query: Would Jehovah, or his Elohim, undertake the necessary process of forming myriads of bodies from the dust, and in-breathing into them to cause life to ensue, knowing right well that the greater part of them would return to the dust again? It appears to me very questionable if Jehovah would experiment in that way. Upon the whole, the most formidable objections can be raised against the likelihood of accomplishing this universal resurrection theory.

Such a period as will be introduced by the extension of the reign of Jesus will give the most ample place to produce the innumerable "seed" promised to Abraham, and it is quite clear that an innumerable "seed of the serpent" will be produced at the same time: for even under the righteous government of Jesus and his brids there will be a host of disaffected members who must be "ruled with a rod of iron," and thus compelled to subjection. By a reference to Psalms xviii. 44; lxxxi. 15; lxvi. 3, marginal reading. It will be seen that numbers will only "yield a feigned obedience." Those will form material for the last great rebellion, when the last of the viper brood, will be driven from the earth "as a man wipeth a dish." See 2 Kings xxi. 13.

The truth is, mankind, as a whole, Jew and Gentile, never did, do not now, nor never will, yield a willing, cheerful, loving obedience to Jesus, either as professors or profane; and, when, at the conclusion of the reign, the restraint is removed, it will require only "a little season" to develop the "serpent's seed," and fit them for their great attack upon the Lord's people, for they will come up as the sand of the sea, and compass the camp of the saints about and the beloved city." We read their doom in Revelations xx. 8, 9. In this we have another argument for the extension of the reign, as it will complete the number of the two "seeds," as it cannot be supposed for a moment that any number of the redeemed is to form this last rebellion against their Redeemer. I have heard two men say that the wicked dead would be raised for this purpose—"the last rebellion."

Thus, it can be seen that the "two seeds" have run up from the first two men born, i. e., Cain and Abel, and have existed from them until the last mortal is driven from the earth. It can be seen, also, that the resurrection of a single unbeliever will be unnecessary, and would end in the infliction of another death, which never has been denounced. This, I repeat, if it has, where? Jehovah denounced death upon Adam; not two deaths. He has pronounced himself unchangable; but if he should be found changable in his threatenings and punishments, so he might be in his promises and blessings to his people; and then what? Why, no certainty of the fulfilment of any of his promises. Let men beware! Such an idea would be blasphemy in its highest form! From such a line, I am satisfied, Jesus will keep his people. ALEX. KING.

SELECTIONS.

[The Lutheran.]

Who Was Pharoh's Daughter?

This question is often asked in connection with the history of Moses, and very little is given us in the Bible from which to answer it. But since men have learned to read the hieroglyphic writing, of which all Egypt is full, much that was unknown has come to light, and a monumental history has been traced which throws much information upon the biblical narratives, and very surprisingly confirms what the Bible says. William Osburn, a distinguished explorer in this department of modern inquiry, in his volumes on "The Monumental History of Egypt, as recorded on the ruins of her temples, places and tombs," has been able to trace, on grounds wholly independent of the Scriptures, what fits exactly to the history of the early life of Moses, gives the names of the parties concerned, and wonderfully illustrates and confirms the whole case with its circumstances.

It appears that "Pharoh's daughter," the person who took up and adopted the infant Moses, bore the name of Thuoris. Her father was the great Sesostris-Ramses. She was not a single, but a married woman, but so married that she still could hardly be said to be married. When already a mature woman, for political ends, her father married her to the only heir of the failing King of Lower Egypt, then an infant but a few months old. In the name of this infant husband she reigned with her father, who, by this strange alliance annexed Lower Egypt to his dominions. The child-husband, though cared for by Thuoris as a mother, never appears to have amounted to much, and when grown up was so imbecile that Thuoris still continued Queen-Regent in his name. She had one brother, who succeeded his father on the throne and reigned jointly with Thuoris, his sister, as his father had done before him. But he died in the third year of his regency, leaving an infant son as his heir to the throne. Thuoris became this child's guardian, and so had sole possession of the kingdom on her brother's death.

At this juncture of affairs the supposition is that Thuoris made the proposal to Moses, her adopted son, then about forty years of age, and royally educated, to take the throne as co-regent with her, at least till the infant son of her brother should become of age to fill the place. And it is this offer which Moses declined, "refusing to be called the Son of Pharoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

Thus his famous choice comes out in its full proportions and grandeur. It was a throne, a co-regency with his royal foster-mother, who had no children of her own, that he thus declined. Of course it was not done in a corner, but a formal public act, in the face of all Egypt, and of a very important political and historical effect, both as respected Egypt and himself. Thuoris seems to have been much disappointed and chagrined at it, went at once to Thebes, adopted the infant son of her deceased brother in his place, and had the child crowned King of Egypt before he was a year old, herself meanwhile exercising the royal functions in the names of her infant nephew, and not much better than infant husband.

Such a refusal and abdication of royal place of course entirely changed the relations of Moses to Egypt and its royal house. Henceforward he had to make his own way as a private man the best he could. The patronage of the throne, or any further favors from Thuoris, or her husband, were no longer his. He had given up all for the sake of his religion, his God, and the eternal recompense in heaven.

The Pharoh who occupied the Egyptian throne at the time of the Exodus, and with whom Moses, as the messenger of God, had such a fierce and prolonged contest, was the nephew of Thuoris, whom she had crowned in his infancy in the place of Moses who refused it. His name appears on the monuments as Sethos II. He was not yet eight years old when Thuoris, his royal aunt and adopted mother died, leaving him to the guardianship of her somewhat imbecile husband, who reigned with him, and dying, left him the sole sovereign of the whole of Egypt.

The husband of Thuoris died the same year in which God appeared to Moses in the burning bush; and it was to him, and to Thuoris perhaps, that the Lord referred, when he said to Moses, "They are dead who sought thy life."

Thuoris seems to have been a kind-hearted, intelligent and honorable woman. She was a particular friend of education. She had Moses instructed in "all the wisdom of the Egyptians." In her lifetime she made very thorough provision for the education of her adopted nephew, Sethos. Books and teachers were specially provided for him, and a special staff of scribes appointed to write for him histories of the exploits of his ancestors, and romantic stories to inculcate reverence and fear of the gods. The tomb of one of these scribes was discovered some few years since, and in some of the very books prepared for the benefit of young Sethos.

It does not appear, however, that the juvenile king profited much by his extraordinary opportunities. If the testimony of his own monuments is to be credited, he was an idle and profligate prince, too much given to pleasure and self-indulgence, either for the cares of state or the duties of religion. The former he left to his relatives and guardians, and the latter he neglected altogether, dishonestly squandering on his lusts what was appropriated for his tomb. He even desecrated the sepulchre of his own foster-mother and aunt, as well as that of her husband. His sacrilege in this respect was unparalleled in Egyptian annals. And as a profligate prince nearly always proves a tyrant king, we are thus prepared in advance to find him exhibiting just these features of character and administration which the Scriptures record concerning him. It was his fate to perish with his army in the Red Sea, in attempting to follow and re-capture the children of Israel.

Book Notices.

The Millenial Harbinger Monthly is the name of a new magazine published in Toledo, Ohio. Its editors, Messrs. Fisher & Miller, design to give the readers public questions replete with contributions on original literature, science, art, politics, religion, and interesting topics generally. The number for April 1879, has come to hand. Its handsome cover is in exquisite taste "outward adorning" of which its unrivalled interior make-up is eminently deserving.

We have received No. 2, Vol. 1, of The Trumpet of Israel. It is published monthly at No. 3 Universal Place, Boston, Mass. It advocates the identity of the British Nation with the Lost Tribes. The number sent has articles of special interest.

The April number of The Herald is before us. This is a magazine designed for "compact readers," and it is well calculated indeed to fill its designed sphere, as it is, for this class, a new book each month. The child receives well its monthly visits with anxiety and hail its arrival with delight. Address J. L. Shorey, 36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

Robinfred, that gem for the wee bairnes, is also on our table. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass., prepare this Jewel of print for the sparkling eyes of the little minikanes of men and women.

MARRIED.

CUFFEL—RAILSBACK—Near Argos, Marshall county, Ind., at the residence of the bride's parents, March 30, 1879, by Eld. A. Chapin, Mr. William H. Cuffel to Miss Nancy M. Railsback.

DIED.

ALBERTSON—At his residence in Hamlet, Stark Co., Ind., Dec. 27, 1879, Brother P. W. Albertson, after a protracted illness of nearly six months.

Funeral services by the writer, delivered at the school house in Hamlet on the third Sunday in March, 1880, from Rev. xiv. 13, the text being selected by brother Albertson a short time before his death, and his request to have some one of the faith to preach his funeral was the cause of so long time elapsing between his death and the funeral discourse. Brother Albertson had labored in the ministry twenty-two years, the most of the time amidst severe persecution. He fell a victim to the destroying angel in the prime of life, aged about 41 years. He leaves a wife and three children and a numerous circle of friends to mourn his loss, but they sorrow not as others that have no hope, but look forward in bright anticipation to the coming of the Lord, at whose coming the sleeping saints shall be relieved from the embrace of the enemy, and the living ones shall be changed to meet to gether never more to be separated.

I also delivered two discourses at the same place on subjects connected with the Gospel of the Kingdom. The audiences were large, and perfect attention given resulting in quite a number anxious to investigate and to learn the truth and a request to visit them again, and I have reason to think that good will result. To the Lord be all the praise.

RESTITUTION FUND.

ARGOS, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Editor Restitution—With your permission I will say a few words to the brethren and for help to support the Restitution for the year 1880 and hence forward visible.

Now, dear brethren, I call on one and all who feel the matter aright, to donate for the cause of Christ the small amount of $7.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this with a few exceptions, and I thought so. I am well aware that some are not so constituted nobly, but I say to those who [illegible] answers to those who have [illegible] a free-will offering.

[illegible] y, I paste a poor! Perhaps you [illegible] used, tobacco, in some form. Or [illegible] spare me who claim to be a christian [illegible] temperately sticken that we can [illegible] a year.

We do hope that every one will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who can or will not pay the $7.00, and will they please give the reason. I am a poor man. My name is Abraham Pontious. I am 42 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $2.00 for one year on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming Kingdom. So, farewell. ABRAHAM PONTIOUS.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Burley—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. M. Fitz, Springfield, Mass.

Mr Burley combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose merits is familiar as a household word to those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of its and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmist" and no music book will find this a very useful book.

POETRY.

[London Christian.]

"I Come Quickly!"

"When ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled, for such things must needs be."—Mark xiii. 7.

He is coming—coming quickly,
To this sorrow-stricken earth;
Though the shadows fall so thickly
O'er the land which gave Him birth;
Though the vine-clad hills of Judah
Lie in misty darkness dim,
Stretching out no hands of greeting
Eagerly to welcome him.

He is coming—coming quickly,
And his feet once more shall rest
On the dusky hill-top shaded—
Purple-crowned Olivet;
For where once despised, rejected,
Where, for man, as man He trod,
He shall stand the manifested,
Mighty Savior, Son of God.

He is coming! though the nations
Whom He came and died to save,
'Mid His advent all unheeding,
Earthly honor do but crave;
They, the Prince of Peace forgetting,
Foaming out their earth-born rage,
Each and all the other fretting,
Bloody war and tumult wage.

He is coming! Like the lightning,
Shining out from east to west,
He will come—through clouds of darkness—
Sun of Righteousness confessed;
For these wars and darkening rumors
Are but thunder-claps before;
Loud Jehovah's voice is speaking,
"Jesus Christ is at the door!"

He is coming! they who listen
Hear the thrilling golden bells;
See the distant white robes glisten
Which the High Priest's advent tells;
Smell the sweet pomegranate's fragrance
Stealing on the faden air;
Know the spotless feet are pressing,
Lingering, willing still to spare.

He is coming—quickly coming,
All the crooked to make plain;
Much—so much—has got entangled,
He will set it right again;
And his hands, once stretched in pleading,
Now will open wide to bless,
With the peace of God abiding,
Those who do his name confess.

He is coming! and the trumpet
Mightily afar shall sound,
Calling to the wondrous meeting
All who rest in Christ around.
Then, while kings of earth are waging
Fiercest wars 'mid mighty din,
He will call His chosen to Him—
"Come, beloved! enter in."

Then,—though waves of sea are roaring,
Men's hearts failing them for fear,
Looking for the things which, coming,
Cast foreshadows dark and drear,—
We will trust that our redemption,
Promised long, is drawing nigh;
For they say to patient watchers,
"Christ the Lord is coming by."

He is coming—oh! so quickly;
He may come perhaps to-day;
It may be the last war-rumor
Has been sent from far away.
We may hear Him any moment
Calling all His ransomed home.
He is coming—coming quickly!
Even so, Lord Jesus, come!

CORRESPONDENCE.

But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—2 Pet. iii. 18.

In the chapter from which the above is taken, the apostle tells us that the day of the Lord will come as a thief, and assigns this as a reason for purity of thought, conversation and conduct. Holiness embraces all these, because, if the inward thoughts—the fountain—is not pure, the stream flowing from it—the conduct—must be impure. What thoughts are embodied in the words, "grow in grace." Grace is favor. Then the language implies that we must grow in the favor of Jehovah. It also implies that this growth is dependent upon our personal efforts. If, then, it depends upon each of us as individuals, I ask, with Peter, what manner of persons ought we to be? Brethren and sisters, how can we produce this growth which is so very essential? By constantly watching over our thoughts, words and conduct.

The idea seems to prevail to a very alarming extent, that some of us are far more exempt from temptation than others on account of temperament. Let us look at this thought in the light of the Word. Jesus Christ is the great example set before us all, and we are each commanded to be living branches of him, the true vine; nor does he call upon one of his followers to attain to this condition and exempt others from it. No, no. But, while we are commanded to grow in grace, yet we are not to suppose that our temperaments are to be changed, or our talents equalized. The person to whom the one talent was given was held just as responsible for its improvement as the one who received the ten. But the thought embodied in the text is: that each has to conquer his own besetments. Let us illustrate: One, before embracing the truth, has a hasty temper and an abusive tongue; another has a propensity to lying; another to the indulgence of his or her appetites. Before every one of us is set the perfect example, and we are each called upon to follow it as near as possible. Now, dear brethren and sisters, we can all see that, if we ever attain to the pattern, it must be by constant watchfulness, effort and prayer. While Brother A has to see to it that his tongue and temper do not conquer him, Sister B has just as difficult a task to gain the victory over her untruthfulness. We will suppose that this brother and sister are slowly gaining the mastery over their besetting sins, each day becoming stronger on account of victories gained. But the slave to tobacco and alcohol is not even making an effort to overcome. The vices are so common that they seem harmless. He smokes and chews the noxious weed with as great a relish as before. Brother, be honest with yourself. Which do you aim to please? The master, or, to gratify a depraved appetite when you use the weed? If the latter, then, in the strength of the Lord quit it once and forever. We know it will require effort, and persevering effort. We know that the besetting sins of each are hard to overcome, but we know they can be conquered, and we also know that the promises are only to them that overcome. Bye and bye a stately edifice is to be erected. This temple is to be built of polished stones. Each of us have just one stone to polish for that building. Brethren and sisters, how are we doing the work? The place we will occupy in that structure will depend upon the manner in which we prepare the stone committed to our care. Dare any of us hope to present our stone, besmeared with fleshly lusts that war against the soul? Just so sure as we make the attempt, it will be rejected as unfit to occupy a place in that glorious temple. Oh, what is fleshly gratification when compared with coming glory? Think what it cost to secure that eternal inheritance, those incorruptible crowns, and then let us each earnestly endeavor to grow in the knowledge of him who bought us. First, by the study of the Word, where his character shines in all its glory and beauty. See what patient meekness, when he stood before his accusers. Let us, at least, make the persevering effort to imitate him in self-control; it will enhance our own happiness and our usefulness. Second, by not forgetting to assemble with his people for public worship and study of the Word, remembering to test everything by the divine crucible. It will not do to endorse the teachings of even our most eloquent preachers without satisfying ourselves that they correspond with the Word. They are human just as we are, and very many times, I fear, allow pre-conceived opinions to outweigh Bible evidence. Nevertheless, it is profitable to hear them, because their theories are suggestive, and the glorious message they bear cannot be tarnished by any human hobby however ingeniously draped. No, no; we are responsible people who will be rewarded according to our works. "What is the chaff to the wheat?" M. ROCK.

St. Joseph, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—In reply to Chalta N. Willet's inquiry concerning this country, will say that this is a remarkably healthy country; also very fertile. We have but little rain east of the Cascade mountains. We depend on irrigation on the table lands; the low bottoms are self-irrigating. The yield of wheat is from twenty-eight to sixty-five bushels per acre; oats and barley, forty to sixty. All kinds of vegetables and grain north of the forfieth parallel, do well here; and such a thing as a failure is not known, only where men are too lazy to comply with the conditions. To a person used to the level, or beautifully undulating lands of Kansas and Nebraska, this country would not be likely to inspire them with a great amount of enthusiasm, for this is a mountainous region; only the valleys are cultivated. The state of society is, morally, in rather a bad condition, but, for fair dealing and other redeeming qualities, people will compare favorably with other new countries; and we find here, as elsewhere, that "human nature is human nature." There are but few here that ever heard the truth, but the people will compare favorably with any place I have ever lived, intellectually, and a good interest is taken in the education of the youth. The leading so-called Orthodox churches are represented here. The price of improved land is varied with location, from $5 to $25 per acre. Plenty of government land to be had under the various acts of congress. There is an act that applies only to the Pacific Coast states and territories, called the "Desert act," that allows the entry of 640 acres at $1.25 per acre, paying twenty-five cents per acre at the time of entry, and the balance, $1.00, at the end of three years from date of entry, obligating the person making the entry, to redeem the land from sterility by getting water on it so it can be irrigated, thus rendering it the best land in the world. This is an easy place to make a living, and any one who is not afraid, or too lazy to work, can do well; and, it is also a good place for those who are desirous of being of use to their fellow man to have full exercise of their desires.

This communication is already too long, perhaps, but a few words more. I desire to say, if our friends come with teams, load light, and do not be in a hurry; take all summer for it. Supplies can be had at short intervals all the way through. If you come to Washington make Walla Walla a point, then you can, from there, take any direction you desire.

Allow me to say to our old friends and brethren who read your excellent paper, that we are well, and better satisfied in all things, so far as worldly matters are concerned, than any place we have ever lived, except we greatly miss the society of the brethren.

Yours, in the hope of a better life,
FRANK PARKER.

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.]

A BUSINESS MAN'S TARNISHED CROWN.

Twelve Years of Worldly Lukewarmness—Consumption—Remorseful Reflections—Vivid Realizations of Loss of Degrees of Glory—Startling Announcement of Christ's Speedy Advent—Even the Saved may Lose Degrees of Reward.

A young man who was very zealous for the honor of God upon earth, and also for the salvation of souls, began after a time, to allow the interests of his increasing family and his success in the world as a man of business gradually to draw his attention from the things of the Lord to the cares of this life; and often when those with whom he usually met in Christian fellowship were assembled together for worship, and speaking to each other of the things of God, he was to be found at home with his ledger, attending to his accounts, or arranging what must be done on the morrow.

This went on for some twelve years—not, however, without many warnings from the Lord and admonitions from his brethren—till he was nearly forty years of age, when a consumption seized him; still his business absorbed his attention as long as he was able to attend to it.

The time came at last when he was laid aside entirely; then he saw his sin and folly, and more than once in his last hours did he speak in language such as follows:

"Oh, how unwise and wicked I have been to neglect the things of God for the cares of this life, and to prefer too much what I thought was my duty to my family to the society and communion of his people! Although my conduct before men has been blameless, yet the last twelve years of my life are lost. It would have been better for me had they never have been given me, because I have used them for myself and not for the Lord. I have been careful about my own things, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's. I shall blush when I see his face (1 John ii. 28). I shall hold down my head as I go into his presence, for I have deprived him of the joy he would have had in saying to me, 'Well done, good and faithful servant;' for how can he do so when I have been so unfaithful?

"I shall see others come forward in that happy day and take their crowns of reward, and their positions in the glory for faithful service done to him while they were upon earth; but I shall have none to receive, because I have allowed this present world to rob me of them through my unfaithfulness. (Rev. iii. 11; 1 Cor. iii. 15; 2 John viii.)

"Oh, how foolish I have been to make such an exchange, to neglect that which is eternal for the things of this world, which perish with the using, and which I must now leave. How I have dishonored that glorious Lord Jesus who has bought me with his blood; and how unlike in my walk I have been to the Apostle Paul, who said, 'Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ' (Phil. iii. 7, 8). But how very different to this I have been! and because I have been so unlike Paul in my walk through life, I am unlike him now in my last moments. For I cannot say as he did, when he was about to leave this world, 'I have fought the good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me in that day.'

'But with me it has been just the opposite to this; for instead of my having fought the good fight of faith, I have been gathering of this world's goods, and seeking to enrich my family, and make myself comfortable and at home on this earth, which has crucified my Lord and Master; and therefore instead of finishing my course with joy, I am cut off in the midst of my days, and am full of sorrow and regret. Neither have I kept the faith, for I have been very unfaithful; hence I know that there is no crown of righteousness laid up for me, as there was for Paul. I have not loved his appearing; and the time for service which was given me is past, it is gone forever. The Lord in his great mercy is now taking me away from the earth, because he knows the longer I am left in it the more I shall be taken up with the things of this world. I own his goodness and love, and bow with thankfulness, because it is his own hand which is doing it.

"Oh, dear friend, let my loss be your gain, and let me entreat you to use faithfully every moment of time which is given you in this world, and everything you possess, for Christ and his saints, and I shall have the delight in seeing you in that day have an 'abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.' You will receive from his hands your crown and place of honor in the glory, while I shall be content with a much lower position, because I have lived to myself and not to him who died for me and rose again."

But the night in which he died was still more solemn. There were two or three Christians in the room with him, when, a short time before his departure, he raised himself up in bed in the greatest amazement and delight, and, lifting up both his hands, said, "Oh, there is something going to take place. Christ is just about to leave his father's throne and come into the clouds to call his saints up to meet him in the air! Don't slumber, nor sleep." He then laid himself back on the pillow and breathed his last without a sigh.

This dying testimony of one who belonged to Christ is very solemn, not only as it regards the near approach of the Lord Jesus to gather up his church, but also as to our faithfulness to him during his absence; and it also shows the great desire this dying brother had that we should not do as he had done, but that we should be found watchful and sober; and though I know that this is not the time for human revelations, but rather for believing the inspired written revelation of God, yet many times since, when I have felt my eyes begin to grow drowsy and myself tired of watching, I have remembered these dying words, and it has helped to quicken my steps forward to run with patience the race set before me, looking unto Jesus.

And surely whatever will help to do this in such days as ours is valuable, when everything around is so calculated to make us grow weary and faint in our minds, and hide that day of glory from our view, and when so many whom we believe to have eternal life in Christ yet, like this young man, are allowing themselves to be deceived by present things. Our salvation depends not on our doings, but on what the Son of God has done for us; for there is nothing more clearly revealed in Scripture than that believers are saved by grace, through faith, and that not of themselves; it is the gift of God. (Eph. ii. 8)

But it is also revealed in Scripture, that those who are thus converted and saved may, through carelessness of walk, become blind, and not see afar off, and may forget that they were purged from their old sins (2 Peter i. 9); not able to look back to the cross nor on to the glory with clearness and certainty, therefore are not living in the enjoyment of that which is really given them, and are great losers, both here and in the glory hereafter (1 Cor. iii. 13-15; Phil. iv. 4). For we are told over and over again in God's Word that the Lord Jesus will in that day give to those who are saved different positions in the kingdom, according to their works (Luke xix. 12-26; Rev. ii. 23; 22: 12).

They who have sown sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and they who have sown bountifully shall reap also bountifully (2 Cor. ix. 6). We read of some having that which they have been building burnt up, but they themselves saved, yet so as by fire (1 Cor. iii. 15). Others, again, having an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ (2 Peter i. 11). Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. xv. 58).—H. T.

The Famine in Persia and Armenia.

Editor Manchester Guardian:

SIR,—We beg to enclose a letter published in to-day's Daily News, by which more details are given about the famine in Persia and Armenia, and should feel obliged if you could also give it space in your influential paper.

We have opened a famine fund for the sufferers in Persia, and have already been able to transmit £400, by telegraph, to our house in Tabreez for distribution to the most needy. We are, &c. PH. ZIEGLER & Co.

20 Dickinson street.

The following is an extract from the letter referred to:—The attention of the public has within the last few days been again prominently drawn to the famine in Kurdistan, Armenia, and Western Persia, and there are many who will no doubt be interested in knowing what official reports indicate the present condition of these populations to be, and what steps have been taken in England for the relief of the sufferers. The following extracts from letters and official telegrams show an increasing pressure of distress from November last up to the present week. The latest accounts of all emphasize the urgent call for assistance. Letters from Oroomiyeh say: "At the time of the threshing last year there were thirty days of heavy rain, which caused all the grain to rot, and destroyed all the grapes, the chief food here; there was very little snow in the winter, consequently the summer brought unheard-of drought; nearly all the grain and cotton fields, vineyards, and melon gardens dried up, and there is no work for laborers. There is no money to borrow, and no one can sell his land. In this district in every hundred houses ten per cent. have food, fifteen per cent. have food for one month, the rest are destitute. This is an appeal of 3,000 Christian families in the vicinity of Oroomiyeh. The Mussulmans in need here number about 50,000. All before us is blackness and darkness." Captain Everett, telegraphing from Erzeroum says: "Famine in districts of Bayazid and Van; no money to purchase grain; people dying of hunger, numbers living only on grass and roots. The government have given a large quantity of grain, but there is no money to transport it from Bulburt to the starving people." Captain Clayton from Van: "Dreadful distress here and in Bashkaleh." Major Trotter, telegraphing from Diarbekr: "Deep snow everywhere; grain to us had in Bulburt, but there is no money for transport. Captains Clayton and Everett join with me in an earnest appeal for aid to save life, and I will guarantee that money transmitted to me from England shall be judiciously and honestly expended." Consul Abbott, from Tabriz: "Distress at Oroomiyeh most terrible, and getting worse, 400 villages in this district alone destitute." Colonel Miles, telegraphing from Mosul: "Extensive relief measures urgently requisite, numbers of deaths, children being sold or abandoned, people flocking in from neighboring villages, all starving." There are nearly six months yet to pass before harvest, and we ask for funds to enable many thousands of human beings to be kept alive till then. Ample machinery exists on the spot for the distribution of the relief which we trust we may be enabled to continue to send, the Marquis of Salisbury having, we are authorized to state, given special permission to Her Majesty's Consuls to assist in this work in conjunction with the leading members of the Mussulman, Christian, and Jewish communities.

A CURIOSITY IN BOOKS.

In the agricultural department of a library in Warsenstein, near Cassel, Germany, may be seen one of the most novel collections of books it has been our privilege to inspect. At first glance they appear like rough blocks of wood, but upon closer examination it will be found that each one is a complete history of the particular tree which it represents. At the back of the book, the bark has been removed from a space large enough to admit the scientific and common name of the tree as a title. One side is formed from the split wood of the tree, showing its grain and natural fracture; the other shows the wood where worked smooth and varnished. One end shows the grain as left by the saw, and the other the finely-polished wood. On opening the book one finds the fruits, seeds, leaves, and other products of the tree, the moss which usually grows upon its trunk, and the insects which feed upon various parts of the tree. To all this is added a plainly printed description of the habits, usual location, and manner of growth of the tree—all forming a complete history of each kind of timber represented, and in form readily understood by all.

The sea is the largest of cemeteries, and all its slumberers sleep without a monument. All other graveyards, in all lands, show some symbols of distinction between the great and the small, the rich and the poor; but in that ocean cemetery, the king and the clown, the prince and the peasant, are alike undistinguished. The same wave rolls over all; the requiem by the minstrels of the ocean is sung to their honor. Over their remains the same storms beat and the same sun shines; and there, unmarked, the weak and the powerful, the plumed and the unhonored will sleep on, until, awakened by the trump, the sea will give up its dead. No marble rises to point out where their ashes are gathered. Yet the cemetery hath ornaments of which no other can boast. On no other are the heavenly orbs reflected in such splendor. Over no other is heard such noble melody.—Henry Giles.

BREVITIES.

Captain Burton, the Oriental traveler and explorer, is about starting on his third expedition to the land of Midian to work the gold, copper and turquoise mines known to exist there, and which are referred to in the book of Numbers.

An Italian priest and philologist has discovered in the binding of a Greek manuscript from the ancient library of St. Ambrose on Mount Athos, two fragments of St. Paul's Epistles in the Greek text. Similar fragments at Paris have long been highly valued.

Since 1804 new translations of the Bible have been made in 226 languages. The British and Foreign Bible Society has published 137 of these versions; the American Bible Society, 41; the National Bible Society of Scotland, 5; the Bible Translation Society, 14; the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 17; the Trinitarian Bible Society, 4; the Netherlands Bible Society, 11; the societies of Germany, 9; of Switzerland, 9; and of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, 6.

In one of the Roman Catholic cantons of Switzerland, the local authorities have discovered a way of defeating the law of the country which permits colportage. "It seems," says the Rev. G. P. Davis, "that even now, the cantons are at liberty to fix the conditions under which colportage can be carried on. They have fixed for the colportage of books, at any rate of our books, 4 f a month as the price of a license! In addition to this every parish has discretionary power to impose an extra tax of from 150 francs to ten francs per day, which is, of course, a prohibitory rate."

The German colony of Haifa, founded about ten years ago, occupies a strip of land between Mount Carmel and the Mediterranean Sea, about a mile from the town of Caifa. The houses are substantially built of limestone, and the streets are regularly laid out, adorned with a double row of shade trees. The motive for founding this colony, as well as its three sister colonies, at Jaffa, Sharon, and Jerusalem, rests upon faith in the words of prophecy. The society which undertook the work is denominated the "Temple," and the centre of this organization is in Wurtemberg. It has branches in the United States, in Russia, and in Switzerland. The immediate aim is to give a good example to the natives by founding Christian communities, working for the elevation of the people and country. This colony of Haifa numbers about 330 inhabitants, mostly Germans, with some German-Americans and Russians, and a few Swiss. It is provided with good schools. The colonists carry on various trades and industries, but the greater part of the people occupy themselves with agriculture and vintage, having about 650 acres of land.

PARADISE LOST.

At Chalfont, Elwood first saw the MS. of "Paradise Lost," which must have been completed in 1665. No doubt the mighty theme had dwelt on Milton's mind for years, but the wonderful work was only achieved after the ruin of all the wordly prospects, when he was surrounded by every privation incident to age, poverty, and blindness. Choosing late and pondering something—this was the noble "something" which "posterity should not willingly let die." It was in the Bunhill Row dwelling, the plague having subsided, that the poem was composed, his daughters or any friendly strangers writing to his diction. The copyright was sold to Simmons for £5.

THE JEWS.

While the Jews have increased in numbers and acquired great wealth, and with it an extraordinary political influence, their position is a peculiar and in many respects a painful one, especially on the Continent in Europe. Hostility has been aroused against them through envy at their commercial and political prosperity, while on the other hand the bitter memories of former wrongs cause them to look with no friendly eyes upon Christians. The Record notes that, in Germany especially, the Jews are rapidly increasing in numbers. Hordes of Hebrew Poles most hostile in spirit to Christians, owing to former oppression, have invaded that country. They have become bankers and newspaper proprietors, and are said to be acquiring boundless influence. Efforts are therefore being made to exclude them from the Parliament. What is described as an anti-Jewish League is being formed. With these feelings of mutual irritation, it will be strange if before long there is not some explosion, which may be attended with violence, but which must cause a feeling of insecurity among the Jewish population. There are also many strange rumors afloat as to the restoration of the Jews to their own land.—Evangelical Churchman.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other blessed truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as preparatives to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Into What Faith Were ye Baptized?

This is an important question to all who are seeking to know the Lord, and to follow him with the whole heart. If you have been baptized, have you been baptized into the faith of the gospel? Have you, by believing the covenants of promise, been made high to those covenants, by the blood of Christ, being baptized into his death?

It does not seem possible that we can come into a will or covenant of which we know nothing; that our names can be written in the deed or will of God, our Father, when we have not yet learned when that will was made, what it pledges to give, and through whom, to whom, and how the inheritance is to become ours? Perhaps it may make this matter plain to review Paul's conversion, teaching and hope. The glory of the Lord shone around Paul when on his way to Damascus, and the voice of Jesus spoke to him from heaven. Instantly the scales of unbelief dropped from his eyes and he acknowledged him as Lord, whom before, he had persecuted, and trembling asked, what he must do? Going to Damascus, he received his sight, arose and was baptized, and straightway went to preaching that this is "the Son of God," "confounding the Jews by proving that this is the very Christ."

Paul was looking for Christ, but looking as others of his nation looked, not for the lowly Nazarene, not for a suffering and crucified Messiah, but for one who should come, "glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength," to set up the overturned kingdom of Israel,—have world wide dominion and raise the dead—and thus fulfill the promises made of God unto the fathers. But Jesus spoke to him from heaven, demonstrating that he had indeed been raised, and having thus been raised, that he was indeed the promised Messiah, and Paul believed. Turning now to the 26th chapter of Acts, 6, 7 and 8th verses, you will find that it was for the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers, that Paul was judged, that the twelve tribes served God instantly, day and night, hoping to come to that promise, through a resurrection of the dead; (see Acts xxiii. 6; xxiv. 14, 15, 21, 24; xxv. 10; xxvi. 18, 20, 22, 23;) that "he worshipped the God of his fathers after the way which they called heresy, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; having hope toward God which they themselves also allowed, that there should be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust." Paul believed in the promises and the Jews believed in the promises. He believed in the resurrection and they believed in the resurrection. But he affirmed "that Jesus, which was dead, was alive;" that they must receive forgiveness of sins through him, receive the inheritance through him, be sanctified through faith in him. In saying these things, he was saying nothing more than Moses and the prophets had taught should come; that Christ should suffer and be the first to rise from the dead; and being the first to rise, that others, should, after him, be raised.

Now, we know that the fathers are Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and that Paul was hoping to have what had been promised to them; hoping to come to that inheritance through a resurrection of the dead unto everlasting life, Acts xxvi. 6, 7, 8; xiii. 46, 48; but that he connected those promises with a crucified and risen Christ; linked his hope of coming into possession of that land with the lowly Nazarene. Read now the 12th, 13th, 15th, 17th, 22d and 26th chapters of Genesis and find that the very land into which Abraham was called, upon which Isaac looked and where Jacob rested, was what was promised of God unto the fathers, that it was to be an everlasting inheritance; and, having found from Paul's language, that there is in that promise an implied promise of a resurrection to everlasting life through faith in him to whom power has been given to raise the dead (John v. 25, 26, 28, 29; vi. 39, 40, 44, 54; xi. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27,) and you will begin to see what there is of the faith in Christ. Find from the third of Galatians, 16th verse, that the same promise made to Abraham of an everlasting inheritance in the earth, was made also to Christ, (verse 17,) that God confirmed that covenant in Christ; that the law did not disannul it; and that to all who are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, has that same promise been made. Verses 20, 27, 29. From the 4th of Romans see that the world was promised to Abraham, and that the promise is sure to all who have the faith of Abraham, then turn to Acts xiii. and see what God said to Christ in raising him from the dead, and what he has said to us in raising him from the dead. See verses 32, 33 and 34.

God said to Jesus in thus raising him from the dead: "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee," and in thus making him his Son by raising him to an immortal and incorruptible life, he also said, "I will give you the sure mercies of David, whatever has been promised to you, through the covenant made to David—in 2 Sam. vii. and in Psa. lxxxvii, I will fulfill to you. To you shall be given the throne and kingdom of David. You shall have dominion from sea to sea; the uttermost parts of the earth shall be your possession. All that has been promised to you in the covenants made to Abraham and to David shall be yours." And saying these things to Jesus in raising him from the dead, he says them, just as plainly to us, who believe them, and who have come into the bond of the covenant.

He says: "I have raised Christ from the dead to give him what was promised unto the fathers, and I will raise you from the dead, to give you what was promised unto the fathers." "I have raised him from the dead to give him the sure mercies of David, and I will raise you from the dead to give you the sure mercies of David." "He is to have the throne and kingdom of David, and world-wide dominion, and you shall share in that throne and kingdom and dominion." "The meek shall inherit the earth." "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," and "Hath made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." "I have made him my first-born Son from the dead. You, too, shall be the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Col. i. 18; Luke xx. 36.

"By grace are ye saved through faith." The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. This gospel of the kingdom is what Jesus and his apostles preached. It is to the covenants, giving this earth to Jesus, and to those who come into him by faith, that you are to be made nigh by the blood of Christ.

Did you believe them when you were baptized? If so, then you belong to the commonwealth of Israel; your citizenship is in that promised kingdom. If not, you have not said in your baptism what God has told you to say. You have not said, being thus baptized into Christ's death, "I believe as he was raised from the dead to an immortal and incorruptible life, to come to the promise made of God unto the fathers, and to inherit the sure mercies of David, so shall I be raised from the dead to everlasting life, to come to those promises." Be sure that you have been obedient to the faith.

Practical Christianity—No. 3.

Be sure your sin will find you out. Num. 32:23.

There are many important lessons to be drawn from the short text we have chosen for a heading or starting point; read carefully the whole verse and the context—how full of wisdom, of admonition and instruction; are the words of divine revelation. Before proceeding directly with the subject before us, we will quote a few passages from the living oracles. Gen. xvi. 13. Thou God seest me. Gen. iv. 7. If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well sin lieth at the door. Gen. xliv. 16. God has found out the iniquity of thy servant. Isa. lix. 12. And as for our iniquities we know them. From these Scriptures we learn the omniscience of the Deity; the very hairs of our heads are all numbered, and not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice.

2. His inflexible justice in rewarding the good and punishing the evil

3. That there is in every man a faithful conscience or monitor as true as the needle to the pole, when we do wrong we know it. With these Scriptures and these few words of comment, we will try and bring out a few thoughts and reflections that will be beneficial both to the writer and to the reader. After forty years of wandering in the great wilderness; the time had arrived for Israel to go over Jordan and take possession of the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The children of Reuben, Gad and Manasseh, had got a glimpse of the land of Gilead; east of the Jordan, they saw it was a goodly land; they lay their request before Moses but he reproves them and cites the course of the spies under Joshua and Caleb; they make a proposition which Moses accepts, they propose to leave their wives, their children, their cattle, yea and all their substance and arm themselves, take the lead, go over Jordan, fight the Lord's battles until Israel [illegible] peaceable possession of the land of Canaan, this was a most magnificent offer; one which Moses could not refuse, but forty years experience with that stiff-necked people had taught Moses a lesson of prudence, he makes a square bargain with them and frames it in shape of a law, which the non-fulfillment or disobedience to it would become sin, and it would surely find them out. They had a powerful stimulant to urge them forward to the full accomplishment or fulfillment of their part of the contract, viz., the goodly land, their families and their earthly substance with the promise of peace and plenty. Will the church of God just emerging from the wilderness, standing on the margin of the river, just ready to go over the suspension bridge that spans the gospel and the age to come dispensations, enter into a realizing sense of the importance of a faithful performance of our part of the contract. The motive before us is beyond computation. Theirs was a temporal inheritance; ours is an eternal inheritance of the same land with the curse removed or taken off; incorruptible, undefiled and fadeth not away. The sequel shows that Reuben, Gad and Manasseh kept their agreement. Will less be required of us? a people highly favored of the Lord, the light is resplendent, not only have we the knowledge of the one true God and his Son Jesus Christ, and a revelation from God inspired by the Holy Spirit, and that backed by an argument, no infidel dare assail, viz., a perfect agreement between the prophecy and its fulfillment. Are we ready on our part to give the pledges they gave to Moses, viz., to leave our wives, our children and our earthly substance, arm ourselves, cap-a-pie, and fight the Lord's battles, the captain of the Lord's hosts will lead with a sword drawn in his hand. Josh. v. 13, 14.

There were no furloughs given for them to return and visit their worldly possessions, no respite till the warfare was over, so must it be with the soldiers of the cross; no permit given in the agreement to lay off our armor, to lay up for a rainy day a good stock of filthy lucre. Watchmen, what of the night. It is about 3,332 years since the things spoken of in the chapter under consideration; what great and mighty changes have taken place; not only the four universal empires represented or symbolized by the great metallic image, Dan. ii., have come upon the stage, filled out God's purpose and disappeared; and now just as the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, representing the first universal kingdom, the kingdom of God is about to smite the image on the feet and toes, what is the very latest news from the land of Gilead lying east of the Jordan; that parties are negotiating with the Sultan of Turky for that very land to plant a Turko-Jewish colony, says the account, its to be a Turkish colony, made up of Jews from Palestine, so far as it being a Turkish colony that's a thin gauze covering to satiate the greed of the British Lion, or the aggression of the Russian bear, or the longings of the wild beasts of the Roman earth, whose mouths are wide open for a large slice of the sick man when the carcass is divided. The example set by the two tribes and the holy tribe is worthy of emulation, their sacrifice in leaving their all on the east of the Jordan, arming themselves at their own expense, keeping their word of honor; risking their lives, trusting in the God of battles that if they should be slain he would provide for their wives and children, they prove loyal and true to the end, get an honorable discharge, return to their families; enter upon their inheritance.

There must have been great rejoicing when fathers meet their families, and find that God has been true to their trust; not one is missing, just how long they were kept from their inheritance we cannot say; from the time they made the agreement with Moses to the death of Joshua was twenty-five years, this was a long campaign or warfare; they ought to have had a pension for life and been exempt from military duty; they were satisfied and glad to have a safe return to their homes in the land of Gilead! Again, we say, let us emulate their noble example; serve out our time in the Christian warfare, a glorious prize is to be given at the end of the campaign. Courage my soul thy bitter cross in every trial bear, shall lead thee to thy home beyond, but shall not enter there. Lone pilgrim gird up thy loins, take unto thee the whole armor of God, we are just entering the last conflict with the powers of darkness. Already streaks of light are gleaming in the eastern horizon. Omens of a bright and joyful day, to the way-worn and weary ones. Our contract must be kept in good faith unto the end, no stay at home soldiers or foolish virgins will be admitted to the marriage supper of the Lamb. We must not only fight, but we must overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. Ours is a high and holy calling, in the type they left all but their armor, the anti-type must do likewise, the love of country, gold and greenbacks, houses and lands, family and friends, yea all that a man hath must be sacrificed upon God's altar. If we are to meet the Captain of the Lord's hosts and be led by him in clearing the enemies out of the land we must make the necessary preparation,

All arrayed in robes of light,
All are clad in armor bright; on to victory
All on steed of snowy white,
All are eager for the fray
Judah's lion leads the way,
And is sure to win the day, in Armageddon's war.

Once more and we will close this article. From a careful reading we learn that the tribes did not intermarry; but kept separate; the men of each tribe took wives of their own tribe and thus the tribes were kept distinct and separate. Ezekiel in his vision of the resettlement of Israel, keeps up the same distinction; and who will say that the two and the half tribes will not (after an interregnum of about 4000 years), be able to trace their genealogy back to the time the agreement was made with Moses, and claim the land of Gilead as theirs by agreement, having fulfilled their part of the contract. God's promises are always based upon conditions that man on his part faithfully complies with the conditions; this being done that's the end of all controversy. This may be strong meat for the Jew hater, but it looks very like the covenant keeping God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David. NEWELL HOND.

A mob of Chinese at Yenping-foo recently attacked the Rev. Nathan Sites, an American Methodist missionary, and were on the point of stoning him to death when a local magistrate interfered. The mob said that they were only treating Americans as Americans treated Chinese in California.

Will There be Nations on the Earth After Christ Comes and Sets up His Kingdom?

I understand that there will. To the law and testimony, "And there was given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." "And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 14, 27.

The above texts show that there will be nations on the earth after the kingdom is set up, or they could not serve and obey him. If all the nations are destroyed at the coming of Christ, where will the nations come from that are to serve and obey him after he comes and sets up his kingdom? "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his figtree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation, and the Lord shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even forever." Micah iv. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7. This prophecy refers to the last days and to a time when he judges among the people and rebukes the nations.

"Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again." Zech. ii. 10, 11, 12.

"And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts; I will go also. Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord." Zech. viii. 21, 22.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent which is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit and shut him up, and set a seal upon him that he should deceive the nations no more till the thousand years should be fulfilled, and after that he must be loosed a little season. And when the thousand years are expired Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them." This proves that the nations extend clear on down through the thousand years and the little season when the devil brings them up around the holy city and they are destroyed. This makes an end of all wicked nations of earth, yet righteous nations will still exist to all eternity. LEWIS BRINSON.

Mound City, Mo.

It is estimated that there were not more than 3,000,000 copies of the Bible in the world at the beginning of the present century. The American and British Bible societies have since printed 116,000,000 copies.

BREVITIES.

Last year twelve persons in the United States and Europe gave an aggregate of $3,000,000 to the cause of foreign missions.

The German Publishers' Journal has issued statistics concerning the number of periodical publications published in the world. According to them the total number is about 25,000, of which Germany boasts 4,778; England, 2,503; France, 2,000; Italy, 1,220; Austria, 1,200; Russia, 500; Asia produces 287; Africa, 50; America, 9,120; and Australia, 100.

It is reported that England is about to establish a Naval Station and Trading Colony in the Persian Gulf near the mouth of the Euphrates and Tigris. Her protectorate over Asiatic Turkey doubtless enables her to select such an eligible site for political and commercial purposes. This move is supposed to have something to do with supporting Persia in the occupation of Herat.

Books have not always been so cheap as now. The King of Northumberland in 800 gave for a history of the world 800 acres of land, and a Countess of Anjou, date not stated, once gave 200 sheep and a large parcel of furs for a volume of homilies, and 120 crowns for a single book of Livy! In 1720 a Latin Bible was valued at $150, and this was a time when two arches of London Bridge were built for less than $150. A laborer in those days had wages so small that the earnings of fifteen years had been necessary to buy the Bible.

Dr. Schweinfurth, in a lecture which he recently delivered at the Berlin Geographical Society, on the subject of his latest explorations in Central Africa, gave his hearers a thrilling account of the mode in which capital punishment is inflicted upon criminals by the Al-quadjis, a small tributary offshoot of the great and powerful Djour people. The malefactor condemned to die is bound to a post firmly driven into the ground in some open place where no trees afford a shade, and is there slowly roasted to death—not by any artificial means, involving a waste of fuel, but by the natural heat of the sun's rays as they reach our earth in its equatorial regions. To protract his sufferings and avert his too speedy end by sunstroke, the ingenious Al Quadjie cover their erring compatriot's head with fresh green leaves, which effectually shield his brain from Phœbus's darts. No such protection is, however, accorded to his body, which gradually dries up, shrinks together, and ultimately becomes carbonized. One chance of salvation is open to the roasting man while as yet he is not completely "done to death." If a cloud pass between the sun and his place of torment he is at once cast loose from his post, and becomes the object of popular reverence as a mighty magician in whose behalf the supernatural powers have deigned directly to intervene.

DRYING UP OF THE EUPHRATES.

The decay of Turkey appears to be inevitable. Dr. Washburn's account of the present condition of that unhappy country is especially valuable, being the report of an eye-witness. He writes: "The English consuls in Asia Minor report a state of things which even Mr. Bourke, the Under-Secretary of State, declared to be more horrible than anything he had ever heard of. Almost within sight of Constantinople the district of Adabazar is held by 40,000 Circassians, who have robbed the people of all their horses, cattle and everything movable, prevented the cultivation of the fields, and have murdered in cold blood hundreds of Christians. Nothing is done to put an end to this reign of terror, which has continued for months. The same story of absolute anarchy comes from all parts of Asia Minor, and the condition of Macedonia is equally bad. The condition of Turkey is well-nigh hopeless; the progress of decay and disintegration has been more rapid during the past year than ever before; the time will probably soon come when the British must either abandon the Sultan altogether or interfere actively in the government of the country. They evidently intend to take the latter course, and they have already sent a large number of their best army officers into Asia Minor, as consuls, to prepare the way for an occupation." Surely, this betokens nothing else than the predicted drying up of the Euphrates Valley.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 14, 1880.

OUR readers will doubtless be gratified with the republication of the letters from Palestine. The time to favor Zion, yea the set time has about come. Despite all unbelief, Judah and Israel will soon come to the front, and God will remember the land.

AS IT is expected that Brother R. Corbaley will soon arrive from California to spend a few months in Indiana, the brethren contemplate holding a quarterly conference at the Antioch Meeting House, about five miles south of Plymouth, sometime in June, probably commencing the Friday before the second Sunday in the month. More definite notice hereafter.

THE memorial number of the Bible Examiner, which was issued in March, came duly at hand. This was the last and closing number of a periodical magazine that has exerted incalculable influence upon the religious world on the great questions of human destiny. This number contains a brief memoir, notices of the press, and many tributes of affection and respect to the surviving members of his family from numerous friends.

JUST before going to press we clip the following from the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, of March 29.

DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN.

The Rev. Jacob Bleib, an aged clergyman, was found dead in bed at his residence No. 70 North Division Street, yesterday morning. He had attained his eighty-eighth year, and an examination showed that old age was the cause of death. The venerable man had been a resident of Buffalo for a long time. His ministry was chiefly in the Baptist Church, but of late he had become identified with the Second Adventists. He leaves a wife and three children, a son who is a physician, living at Chicago, and two married daughters living at Westfield and Washington.

THE following statement has appeared in several papers. From its authoritative source, and positive expressions, many, no doubt, have concluded that no change for the better is perceptible in Palestine. The letter, immediately following the extract, was written by one conversant about the Land of Promise, and the desires and feelings of his own nationality:

"Mr. De Haas, ex-consul at Jerusalem, has set at rest a multitude of recent contradictory statements about the Holy Land in the following series of pointed denials: 'There is not a railroad in all Palestine. There is not an American missionary in the Holy Land, nor a Sunday school. But one Protestant church in Jerusalem, another outside of the walls and one at Nazareth. The Jewish population has increased during the last few years, but the population of the country has more rapidly decreased. The Jews have no intention of reoccupying the land. They go there to die, not to live. No Jew around Jerusalem owns or cultivates an acre of ground. The Jews of Europe and America will never return to Palestine unless forced back at the point of the bayonet.'"

To the Editor of the Age-to-Come Herald:

DEAR SIR:—Allow me to reply to a short article in the Boston Journal of March 20, 1880, contradictory of statements about the Holy Land, by Dr. De Haas, ex-consul of Jerusalem. This gentleman makes the following statements:

First: "There is not a railroad in all Palestine." Now, I should like to know who ever said there was a railroad in Palestine?

Secondly: "There is not an American missionary in the Holy Land." Dr. De Haas should not have forgotten Mrs. Hay, of Jaffa, so soon, nor the Eli Jones schools in the different villages around Jerusalem.

Thirdly: "The Jewish population has increased during the last few years, but the population of the country has more rapidly decreased." The Jews have greatly increased, and the population of the country has not decreased; on the contrary, several colonies have been formed there in different sections, mostly Germans; and instead of decreasing, there is a larger population at the present day than five years ago. There are two Sunday schools in Jerusalem, and three Protestant churches.

Fourthly: "The Jews have no intention of reoccupying the Land." The greatest Jewish hope is in the re-establishment of the kingdom in Zion, and the restoration of the Land.

Fifthly: "They go there to die, not to live." I believe it looks more like the reverse, as there are more young people, taking it on the average, that go there; and that will show they go there to live, and die when they are called.

Sixthly: "No Jew around Jerusalem owns or cultivates an acre of ground." That is rather a big statement for anybody to make. The first potatoes and corn or maize raised near Jerusalem was by a Jew named Meshullam, who owns as nice a farm as seen in any civilized country. Almost all the new houses lately built around the city are owned by Jews. A large tract of several hundred acres (on the Plains of Sharon) was conceded by the late Sultan to the Jews, which is now superintended by a French Jewish Society, "L'Alliance Israelite de Paris." Quite a number of buildings have been built for agricultural schools. There Jewish boys are taught all the branches of agriculture, as well as other trades. After a four years' course, each student is allowed a portion of land, on which he raises grain, fruit, etc. This establishment has been more than ten years in existence.

I wish the Doctor would read the 36th chapter of Ezekiel. If he reads it diligently, it may enlighten him on his last statement about the Jews of America and Europe not returning without goading.

In conclusion, I wish to say that it only proves that Consuls are not always the best authority on what is going on in the places where they labor (?) as representatives.

I am, dear sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES ROSEDALE,
A Jerusalem Jew.

5. Desolator Who?—The word shekkets—abomination, presents a vast empire of idols, such as the Pagan and Papal Roman empire was, and still continues to be; the word she-main—desolator, brings to view the ruling spirit of that great monarchy.

We have examined about sixty passages in the Hebrew, in order to arrive at its true meaning. The verb is שָׁמַם shamam—he diminished, wasted, reduced, destroyed. Job xvi. 7; Eccl. vii. 16. He made desolate, empty. Jer. x. 25. He was exhausted, weak, faint. Lam. iv. 5. He was amazed, confounded, astonished. Jer. iv. 9. In the various species and tenses and modes, about fifty times, expressing amazement, astonishment, as in Dan. viii. 27, and ix. 27. I was astonished at the vision; shall make (it) desolate—an astonishment. The noun is, in its usual form is שְׁמָמָה and שַׁמָּה she-ma-mah, and sham-mah—desolation, waste, and amazement, astonishment. Jer. xii. 10, 11; Ezek. vii. 27; Joel ii. 3. The word, therefore, includes two ideas, desolation and amazement; amazement in the beholder, at the terrible desolations of the desolator, as results of the abominations. Daniel sees Pagan and Papal Rome in all his idol worship; sees the empire wading in the blood of Christian martyrs, and he is overcome and faints with unutterable amazement—"sick certain days."

We hope that this complex thought is now fully understood (שֹׁמֵם) sho-maim, found in Dan. viii. 13, ix. 27, xi. 31, xii. 11, and quoted by Christ in Matt. xxiv. 15, and Mark xiii. 14, is a word that expresses such a complex thought. It now remains to identify this Desolator with the Little Horn of the vision:

Little Horn—What Power?—Three candidates are proposed to fill that position, viz: Antiochus Epiphanes, a monarch in the Syrian horn (Dan. viii. 8). The empire of Mahomet (Ottoman) and the Roman monarchy. All writers who expounded the prophecy, before the first advent of Christ, made Antiochus Epiphanes the little horn. Their views are worthless, since, at that time, and for centuries afterwards, the prophecy was sealed; Gabriel, after three attempts to make Daniel understand the vision (Dan. xii. 9) said, "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end; and he was told to shut up the words, and seal the book even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Verse 4.

1. Antiochus Epiphanes was a part of the Syrian horn, or, at that time, was the Syrian horn, but the Syrian horn and Little horn are two distinct horns.

2. Jesus Christ makes it future in his last year A. D. 33, "When ye shall see," Matt. xxiv. 15, and Mark xiii. 14. These two objections are sufficient to overthrow the claims of Antiochus Epiphanes to that position.

3. Others have urged the claims of the Mohammedan power to the Little hornship of Dan. viii.

There are many objections to the pretensions of this power, a few of which we shall name:

1. This was an idolatrous power, as the word (she kets) abomination shows, but the Mohammedan empire has always contended for the unity of the God head—"there is one God." Mohammed made war on those that had not the seal of God in their foreheads, (Rev. ix. 4), but were corrupt and idolatrous Christians; for the Romanists worshipped saints and images. This power was not, therefore, Mohammedan.

2. The directions of its (Little horn) conquests do not agree with the courses of Mohammedan conquests—"it waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land." Mohammedanism pushed toward the north and west as its European empire demonstrates.

3. The character of the Little horn does not agree with the empire of Ottoman. Gabriel says, "His power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." Mohammedanism became great by its own power; it destroyed by conquest in the usual way; nor was it peculiarly destructive on God's holy people (true Christians). It was never the supreme power of martyrdom. Compared with Pagan and Papal Rome it was an infant of days. There are many acts ascribed to the Little horn in Dan. viii. 25, that do not suit the character of Mohammedanism; such as causing craft to prosper. What craft will compare with the Papal hierarchy, or with Jesuitism? How did Mohammedan rule, destroy by peace? or in what sense did it stand up against the Prince of princes?

The mighty and the holy people were called by a new name after the death of Messiah the Prince. (See Dan. ix. 26, margin, compared with Hos. i. 9).

4. It is not reasonable that the Roman power should be left out of the vision. A power that had, as a God, his seat in the temple of God for 1260 years, filling it with idols and with the blood of millions of holy men and women, a power that constitutes such an important part of the metallic image; a power symbolized by the sea monster, with its ten horns and a little horn, that does what the little horn of Dan. viii. does. (Compare the two Little horns, Dan. vii. and viii.)

5. The following noted writers make the Little horn of Dan. viii. the Roman power: Bishop Mede, Sir Isaac Newton, Bishop Newton, Cressner, Whiston, Hurd, William Lowth, Dr. H. More, Daubuz, Jurieu, Vitringa, Fyle, Dr. S. Clarke, Croly, Horne, Watson, Noel, Brightman, The Lutheran Church, Church of England, Ireland, Holland, Germany, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches; and the Continental and British Reformers, Luther, Calvin and many others.

This horn was the ruling spirit of the Fourth Monarchy.

Gabriel's Third Visit.—Gabriel is not expressly named as the messenger sent to Daniel for the third and final explanation of the vision. Circumstances, however, favor this view. The Jews reckon seven archangels, four being named, viz: Michael, Gabriel, Uriel and Raphael. Michael and Gabriel are named in our Scriptures. Gabriel is called God's prime minister, governor, chief angel, he that stands in the presence of God. Luke i. 19. He seems to be the head of that class of angels who stand in the presence of God to receive and carry messages to the saints. Gabriel was the Mercury, Michael the Jupiter of the heathen.

He was the chief of the ministering spirits. Heb. i. 14. Gabriel is sent to Zacharias, Luke i. 19, and to Mary. Verse 26. He was sent to Daniel to explain the vision of Dan. viii. 16. He was sent again to continue his explanation of the vision. And as Daniel is still perplexed about the agency of the Little horn, he is sent to Daniel the third time. If the reader will compare the language of the three visits he will be satisfied of their identity. The angel is now come to make his last attempt, to give Daniel a full understanding of the vision. Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days; for yet the vision is for many days. Dan. x. 14. But I will show thee that which is noted in the Scripture of truth, (verse 21), in the Divine record kept by God.

Literal Narration—Dan. xi. and xii.—General outline of History:

Dan. xi. 1.—The first year of Darius the Mede, was the third year of Cyrus, the Persian.

Verse 2.—And now I will show thee the truth, as I shall read it out of God's book while standing before the throne: "Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia," (after Cyrus). These were Cambyses, Smerdis, and Darius Hystaspes; and the fourth (Xerxes the Great) shall be far richer than (they) all; and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm Grecia."

Verse 3.—"And a mighty king (Alexander the Great, B. C. 320,) shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will."

Verse 4.—"And when he (Alexander) shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided towards the four winds of heaven (into Syria, Egypt, Macedon and Thrace); and not to his posterity (Alexander had no child to heir his throne) nor according to his dominion which he ruled; for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others besides those," (his posterity).

Verse 5.—"And the king (of Egypt) of the south shall be strong, and one of his (Alexander's) princes; and he shall be strong above him, (the king of Egypt) and have dominion; his kingdom shall be a great dominion."

Verse 6.—"And in the end of years (B. C. 277, Egypt and Syria) they shall join themselves together. For the king's (Ptolomy Philadelphus) daughter (Bernice) of the south (Egypt) shall come to the king of the north (Antiochus Theus king of Syria) to make an agreement (or alliance by marriage); but shall not retain the power of the arm; (but she did not succeed in retaining the power of the king of Syria, and the power of the government); neither shall he stand, nor his arm; but she shall be given up and they that brought her, and he whom she brought forth, and he that strengthened her in these times." (He shall not keep the strength by this alliance with Egypt. But Bernice was given up to Laodice, the wife who was put away to make room for Bernice at the court of Syria, B. C. 250).

Verse 7.—"But out of a branch of her roots shall one stand up in his estate, (Ptolomy Euergetes the brother of Bernice who sprang from the same root with herself no sooner succeeded to the throne of Egypt, in the place of his father, than he came into Syria with a great army to avenge the injuries and murder of his sister Bernice,) and shall enter into the fortress of the north, (Syria, B. C. 246) and shall deal against them, and shall prevail." (He conquered Syria, Cilicia, Judea, and nearly all of Asia).

Verse 8.—"And shall also carry captives into Egypt their gods, with their princes and with their precious vessels of silver and gold; and he shall continue more years than the king of the north." Fulfilled.—Ptolomy Euergetes, king of Egypt, plundered Syria, took 40,000 talents of silver, and 2,500 images of the gods.

Verse 9.—Ptolomy Euergetes.—"So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land." Fulfilled.—Ptolomy, king of Egypt, returned into Syria, and then into Egypt. Seleucus Callinicus, in exile, fell from his horse and died; but Ptolomy lived about five years after his death. Verse 8.

Verse 10.—"But his sons shall be stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one shall certainly come, and overflow, and pass through; then shall return, and be stirred up even to his fortress." Fulfilled.—The sons of Seleucus Callinicus, were Seleucus Ceraunus, and Antiochus. Seleucus Ceraunus, the eldest, succeeded his father, stirred up and assembled a multitude of forces, to recover his father's dominions; but being unable to keep his army in obedience, he was poisoned; and his brother Antiochus succeeded him, and retook Seleucia and recovered Syria. These events come down to about 223 years before Christ.

Verse 11.—"And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north; and he shall set forth a great multitude; but the multitude shall be given into his hand." Fulfilled.—Ptolomy Philopator, son of Ptolomy Euergetes, succeed to the throne of Egypt on the death of his father. He was excited against Syria for the losses that Egypt had sustained, and in a great battle near Raphia, conquered Antiochus, B. C. 217. Antiochus lost in the battle 10,000 foot, and 3,000 horse. Antiochus then sent to Ptolomy to solicit peace.

Verse 12.—"And when he hath taken away the multitude, his heart shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many ten thousands; but he shall not be strengthened by it." Fulfilled.—Ptolomy was so lifted up by his successes, that instead of following up his successes, he gave himself up of debaucheries. Visiting his provinces, he came to Jerusalem, and offered sacrifices, and was with difficulty restrained from entering into the throne of Holies. After his return to Egypt he commenced a persecution of the Jews, and slew 40,000, but was not strengthened by it.

Verse 13.—"For the king of the north shall return, and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former, and shall certainly come after certain years with a great army and with much riches." Fulfilled.—After fourteen years of peace, a new war broke out between Egypt and Syria, Ptolomy Philopator died and left his kingdom to his son Ptolomy Epiphanes, a child of about five years old. Antiochus the Great, conceiving this to be a favorable opportunity to take Egypt, raised a large army for the conquest of the infant king. This verse brings the history to B. C. 202.

Verse 14.—"And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south. Also the robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall fall." Fulfilled.—Just at that juncture, Egypt itself rebelled, and Philip, king of Macedon, entered into a league with Antiochus the Great, to divide Egypt between them, B. C. 200.

Verse 15.—"So the king of the north shall come, and cast up a mount, and take the most fenced cities; and the arms of the south shall not withstand, neither his chosen people, neither shall there be any strength to withstand." Fulfilled.—The Romans at this point, shall for the first time, appear on the stage to take part in the affairs of the East to establish the vision. These events bring the chain of history to B. C. 198.

Verse 16.—"But he that cometh against him shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him; and he shall stand in the glorious land, which by his hand shall be consumed." Fulfilled.—But Rome took part of Egypt, came against Macedon, Syria and even against Palestine, and finally will consume the people of God as stated by Moses and Daniel.

Verse 17.—"He shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and upright ones with him; thus shall he do; and he shall give him the daughter of women, corrupting her; but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him." Fulfilled.—Rome, from the first time it was introduced to the affairs of Egypt, shall set his face, to enter by force the whole kingdom of Alexander the Great. He gained possession of Egypt by the aid of the Jews. Egypt gave to Julius Caesar, the Roman consul, and general who invaded Egypt, the queen of Egypt, whom he corrupted, B. C. 107.

NEWS ITEMS.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 9.—An American citizen, accused of the murder of a Turk, was recently tried before Heap, Consul General of the United States, found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to two months' imprisonment. Server Pasha, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has protested against the right of the American Consul to try the case, and demands the surrender of the prisoner to the Ottoman authorities. Heap declines to surrender him.

A terrible famine prevails at Mosul, Turkish Koordistan. Four thousand inhabitants died to Bagdad, and hundreds died on the road.

RANGOON, April 10.—The report of the death of King Theebaw of Burmah cannot be traced to an authentic source, but indiscriminate human sacrifices have been offered at Mandalay to save his life. Small-pox is raging at Mandalay, and the heir-apparent has died from the disease. Telegraphic communication is interrupted.

FOUR HUNDRED PERSONS TO BE SACRIFICED.

LONDON, April 10.—A Burmah correspondent says the Mandalay astrologers maintain that in order to remove the evil influences, a great propitiatory sacrifice is requisite, the victims to be taken from all ranks to the number of 400. The priests are to contribute 100. The remainder will be men, women and children. Many arrests have been made to secure a sufficient number for the victims to be selected from. The priests, who have hitherto enjoyed immunity from sacrifice, are quitting Mandalay in great numbers. The Catholic convent was entered to procure victims from among the girls there, but the attempt was frustrated. The internal condition of the country is most unsatisfactory. The people, while seeing the folly of King Theebaw's acts, are helpless to effect a change.

BEACONSFIELD'S FALL.

LONDON, April 10.—A Constantinople correspondent telegraphs: "The elections in England have produced a profound impression, and at the palace almost a panic. The Greeks, Armenians, Bulgarians and Christians rejoice at Beaconsfield's fall. The more sanguine assume that Gladstone will turn Turkey out of Europe, bag and baggage."

ST. PETERSBURG, April 10.—Two hundred Russian convicts have arrived at Odessa for transportation to the island of Saghalien.

A telegram from the Russian Consul at Van Armenia, appeals for aid to save the inhabitants of that district from annihilation. The famine is increasing. One hundred and fifty persons have died of starvation at Aghak. In the villages the girls are dying. One hundred have died at Van. The Russian authorities of Bastoff have forwarded 50,000 pouds of flour to Van.

ASIA—SACRIFICED.

LONDON, April 12.—The 700 men, boys, women, girls, priests and foreigners sacrificed at Mandalay for the restoration of the king's health, were buried alive, not burned, under the towers of the city walls.

The following is the explanation of the horror: When a city is built in Burmah human sacrifices are offered. A new monarch usually has a new capitol. The evil spirits are irritated. There has been no change of the capitol and the virtue of the old sacrifices being gone, to appease the evil spirits, the astrologers declared it necessary to offer 700 lives. The sacrifices were made by order of King Theebaw.

THE MEANING OF A LICENSE.

Look now at the ordination of a candidate for the ministry of rum. He stands before the city fathers. He is called to sell rum; has the evidence within him. A congenial brother of the same communion recommends him to the extent of a thousand dollars. He is looked over. He will do. He pays his money; for the ministry can be bought. He puts his hand upon that devil's document, a rumseller's license, and he goes out regularly set apart by the ordination, which means this: "Take thou authority to tempt men." Take thou authority to change them into beasts." "Take thou authority to stain the streets with their blood." "Take thou authority to desolate homes, to break hearts, to ruin souls." "Take thou authority to mark your way through the world with all wickedness, and when you stand before the Eternal Judge—just show him this license."

THE WAGES OF SIN.

In the western part of New York state there is a town that for years voted no license on the temperance question, and so there was no saloon or place where liquor was sold by the glass in the place. Just before the day on which the vote was to be taken the leading merchant in the place—who was an active church member—was approached by the leading hotel proprietor, who asked him to vote for license; telling him that unless he did so vote, his trade, amounting to over $1,500 per annum, would be withdrawn from his store. The merchant thought over the matter, and feeling sure that the majority would be so large against license that his vote would make no difference in the result, yielded to the temptation, and for the first time in his life voted for license, but was astounded to find that the canvass showed just one majority for license. His condemnation and shame were overpowering, but he kept the trade of his hotel customer. Before the next occasion to vote on the license question his only son had become a patron of the hotel bar-room, and in a year or two filled a drunkard's grave, while his father died of a broken heart because of the consciousness that his own act and sacrifice of principle had provided the means for his son's destruction.

POETRY.

The Lord is Coming.

A. D. WINCH.

The light of His coming is flashing afar,
The rising and glory of Bethlehem's star;
The heavens receive Him no longer from sight,
Descending, encompassed with seraphim bright.

He comes, lo! He comes, for the harvest of earth,
The gems of His crown-bright jewels of worth;
And the mantle of death is folded away,
And the faithful of ages are born in a day.

Hail, land of the Orient, lift up thy head,
The just One has come, the destroyer has fled;
The hills of Judea with gladness rejoice,
And the trees clap their hands at the sound of His voice.

Thy tribute to strangers no longer must yield,
Nor the place of His throne be plowed as a field;
But the city of God arise on its heights,
And the sacred of the nations walk in its light.

Behold, the despised and crucified One,
Once led to the cross, now ascending the throne;
And the kings of the earth cast their crowns at his feet,
And the hosts of the heavens His praises repeat.

Rejoice, O ye faithful; the circling of years
Has hastened His coming to dry up your tears;
The sweet fields of Eden again are restored,
The kingdom of Jesus rejoice in the Lord.

SELECTIONS.

[The Age to Come Herald.]

A TRIP TO JERICHO, JORDAN AND THE DEAD SEA.

On the 15th of January, at 11 a. m., I and my companion, Rev. Mr. Kaley, from Ohio, U. S., started from Jerusalem for the Jordan, in company with the Greek pilgrims, who were going to celebrate the Epiphany, a yearly festival. [We had supposed this festival was observed on the 6th of January, twelve days after Christmas. Will Mr. Doughty please explain this some time in the future?; On account of expense and safety, we consider this an opportune time to make this visit.

Leaving the city at St. Stephen's gate, we descended into the Valley of Jehoshaphat, crossed the Kedron, and passing to the right of the Garden of Gethsemane, followed round the western and southern slopes of Mt. Olives, over the same road that Christ rode the wild colt, when he made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. We soon lost sight of the city, and the little town of Bethany appeared to our view on the left. Passing it we descended into the deep woods, away from all inhabitants. The road runs down a deep valley; in some places very crooked.

It was on this dismal road that "a certain man," of whom Christ speaks, Luke x. 30, "fell among thieves," who stripped and wounded him, and left him half dead. The priest passed by, and the Levite passed by, and neither gave him any assistance. But a Samaritan, scorned and hated by the priest and Levite, who vainly supposed they were more righteous than he, "came where he was;" "went to him;" "bound up his wounds;" "set him on his own beast;" "brought him to an inn, and took care of him" till the next day. He then paid what the bill would probably be till the poor man should be well, and agreed to pay whatever more expense might be incurred. The hated Samaritan, without the high claims of piety, was the neighbor to the man who fell among thieves; while the priest and Levite, with the sanctimonious professions of holiness, were hypocrites.

The location of this road affords a good opportunity for such bloody deeds, which have often been committed here; hence it is called, "The bloody way." It was a pleasant day; and as we descended towards the greatest depression known on the face of the whole earth, the atmosphere became much warmer. Musing and talking of Bible scenes and events, and being in company with the pilgrims, (though not all the time, for we traveled faster than they did,) made our journey exceedingly interesting, which we considered very favorable on this lonely, dangerous route.

At 6 o'clock, p. m., we arrived at the Greek Convent on the plains of Jericho, a distance of sixteen and a half miles from Jerusalem. It is six miles from Jericho to the Jordan, and six miles further to the fording-place. We quickly selected a spot in front of the convent, spread our rubbers, other blankets and tent, made our bed in the open air, and being weary, retired, as we supposed, for the night. But the vicissitudes in human affairs are changeable; and though the stars were shining brightly, it soon began to rain, and the guardsman insisted that we should go into the convent. Reluctantly I arose, took my bed and walked. But at the convent door we had to wait in the rain fifteen or twenty minutes before we could gain admittance; and then we found no place to lie down, nor even to sit down, for it was packed completely full of pilgrims. This retiring standing, in such oppressive air, we could "not stand," so out we went into the rain, pitched our tent, made up our beds again, with our bags, books, boots and pistols under our heads, and slept quite comfortably the rest of the night, with no further annoyance, except from the rats, who made some effort to steal our bread. It continued to rain through the night; but we were well sheltered by our tent from the inclemency of the weather.

The next morning, (the 17th,) we rose early, and started for the site of ancient Jericho, where the walls fell down after being compassed about for seven days. On our way we passed through a large encampment of Bedouins, which looked almost hazardous in such a place as this; but we passed through unmolested, and were soon at the place of destination, Old Jericho; which is a small mountain or hill, all in complete ruins. Here we remained for more than an hour, viewing the ruins and beautiful plains around us, which look almost like a Paradise, being covered with grass, grain, and beautiful trees.

While we were taking our morning meal, a Bedouin came and sat down beside us with his gun. This made us feel a little uneasy, but we made friendship by permitting him to share our breakfast with us, and he appeared very kind. It was much better to make friendship with bread than with balls.

We drank from the beautiful, cool brook near by, which Elisha healed with salt. This brook running into the plains is the cause of their fruitfulness. The Lord's prophets anciently dwelt at Jericho; Elisha tarried here after Elijah was taken up from him. "And the men of the city said unto Elisha, behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as my Lord seeth; but the water is naught, and the ground barren. And he said, bring me a new cruise, and put salt therein. And they brought it to him. And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters; there shall not be from thence any more death nor barren land. So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake." 2 Kings ii. 19-22.

Thus the waters were healed to this present day, as we are witnesses. The land watered by the stream is not barren, and we drank freely of its sweet water, and did not die. How beautiful and true is the word of the Lord here: "Thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters: there shall not be from thence any more death nor barren land."

After feasting upon memories of the past, and viewing the ruins of the ancient city and the fruitfulness of the plains, we set off for the "Mount of Temptation," a short distance west of Jericho. It is said Christ was taken up into this mountain to be tempted of the devil. It is "an exceeding high mountain." From its summit, we had a magnificent view of the wilderness of Judea, the Dead Sea, the Mountains of Moab, the Valley of the Jordan: and at the northern extremity of Palestine, looming up among the clouds, 10,000 feet above the Mediterranean, is Mount Hermon, with its perpetual snows, the most conspicuous and beautiful mountain of Palestine, or in all Syria; and though it is more than one hundred miles distant, it can be distinctly seen with the naked eye.

We next visited Gilgal, where Israel first encamped after crossing the Jordan, and where the priest set up the twelve stones taken from the bed of the river, where they passed through it dry shod. Here the whole male population of the nation under forty years of age, all who were born after leaving Egypt, were circumcised; and from this occurrence the place took its name; "And the Lord said unto Joshua, this day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from all of you. Wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day." Joshua v. 9. Here they celebrated their first passover after leaving the desert and on the next day they did eat of the old corn of the land and unleavened cakes, and the day following the manna ceased.

It was from their camp of Gilgal that Israel went out against Jericho, Ai, Gibeon, and all the surrounding country, till their enemies were subdued, and they had rest from war. Here is where Achan hid the golden wedge and Babylonish garment; and it was from his camp here that he and all that he had were carried out to the Valley of Achor and stoned with stones and burned with fire. The tabernacle remained here for several years before it was removed to Shiloh. It was Samuel's headquarters when he judged Israel, and Saul was crowned king here. It will be seen from this short sketch, that it was an important place early in the history of Israel; but like every other place in Palestine, the glory has departed.

After visiting several other places, we returned to the convent, satisfied with our day's work, where we remained all night. The next morning, (the 18th,) we started early for the Jordan. In two hours we were upon its banks. Its current is very rapid. I gazed upon it a few moments, but not being satisfied with this, I plunged into the liquid stream and was soon on the other side. But no sooner had I reached the bank, than I found a difficulty. The water was too deep for me to touch bottom, and the bank was perpendicular and high. What should I do? I finally succeeded in drawing myself up by roots and bushes that hung over the bank. I was now in the land of Gilead: but I did not remain long. The water was very cold, and I soon found that I was getting chilled very fast: so I did not remain in Gilead long, but dropped myself into the water again and struck for Canaan's shore. With great exertion I reached it: for being worse chilled than I was aware of, the cramp set in, and I came very near being carried under with the current. But the Lord delivered me from the deep waters to still further search out the land.

We now started down the bank of the river toward the Dead Sea, sitting down occasionally to read, meditate, and talk of the historic events which have taken place in this vicinity. I could hardly realize that this was the place I had so many times read about; but it is. Many has been the time that I have desired to see these sacred places, and I have not died without the sight. Here the whole nation of Israel passed over this river on dry ground. The ark of the Lord of hosts, who dwelt between the cherubims, was carried to the water's edge, and as soon as the feet of the priests who bore the ark were dipped in the brim of the water, the river was cut off, and the water stood and rose up upon an heap above, and failed below, until that typical people passed through by the Lord in the ark, which had been set down in the middle of the river.

Again this river parted for Elijah and Elisha, and on the opposite bank Elijah was taken up to heaven; and then it opened again for Elisha's return. Here the Son of God, our Advocate and High Priest, the Savior of the world, was baptized without making confession of sins, for he had never committed sin. The places are actually here that I had read so much about in the good Old Bible in America; and I find them all in the same condition as that the prophetic record long ago declared they should be in until the restitution, which will as certainly come as the present is true.

As we passed down the Jordan, I saw in many places that its banks were caving in. A little back from the river we passed over desert land, where no signs whatever of vegetation could be seen. Some places are crusted over by the intense heat of the sun, and every step would break through into the soft soil beneath, which made it exceedingly tiresome travelling.

We at length, after about three hours' walk, arrived at the Dead Sea. As I had been told that nothing could live in its waters, and that fowl could not fly over it, on account of poisonous vapors arising from it, you can judge of my surprise to find ducks swimming in it, and both ducks and geese flying over it without any apparent injury.

With admiration I walked its shores and gazed into its crystal waters, where I discovered on the bottom variegated pebbles of different sizes. I tasted of its water, and found what I had read of it was true. It is extremely salt and bitter. We prepared for bathing, and soon realized that the reports we had read of the difficulty of swimming in this Sea were true also. I claim to be a swimmer; but I could not swim much here. It was impossible to keep myself in the water; but I floated upon its surface like a cork. Weights are required to hold one down, so that he can make headway. On hearing Prof. Rosedale mention this in his lectures in America, I could hardly credit it; but I find that what he said was all true.

When we came out of the water, there was a peculiar smarting sensation all over our bodies; but after walking over the desert a short distance in the hot sun, it were away. The soil around this sea has the appearance of richness, but nothing could be seen growing in any direction, for miles. But to the north, and west end of the plains of Jericho, it appears like a Paradise; or would, if it was cultivated by a smart, energetic people. As it is, it is beautiful. We returned to the convent, and tarried there for the third night.

Early on the morning of the 19th we started for Jerusalem. After crossing the plain, as we began to ascend the mountain, we could look back and see the pilgrims at sunrise coming on from the convent on the Mount of Temptation, west of ancient Jericho, where they had remained over night before and lodged at the convent at the Brook Cherith, where Elijah was fed by ravens when he fled from Ahab.

When we arrived at this brook, which is in a valley, four or five hundred feet deep, we descended and sat by the mystic stream. It flowed rapidly over the rocks, and the rippling sound could be heard at a great distance. The water is excellent. Here we sat and ate our breakfast of bread and figs; and read and talked of the flight of Elijah from Ahab, and how he dwelt by this brook: "And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook." (1 Kings xvii: 3-7.) We felt as though it was a sacred place, and left it with reluctance. But we could not tarry long now, for we are strangers in the land of promise; so we took up our luggage, and with our staffs climbed up the cragged rocks to the road, and continued our journey towards Jerusalem.

Soon after leaving the Brook Cherith, it began to rain, which made it very slippery under foot, and hard travelling up the steep hills all the way from the Plains of Jericho to the top of Olivet. Our clothes were soon wet through. Then out came the sun and dried them; and this wetting and drying process was repeated several times that very day before we got to Jerusalem. To add to our misfortunes, we wandered out of the right way four or five miles; and when the little town of Bethany at last appeared in sight, our hearts were glad. We will not murmur at our lot, for we have a mission to fill, and hardships are unavoidable. Our Savior travelled this same road once, when he had a work to perform for all our race; and the burden of his labors was so heavy upon him, that finally, "being in agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." (Luke xxii. 44.)

We passed what was once the home of Lazarus, Martha and Mary, weary and hungry; but the recollection of that kind family seemed to inspire and encourage us; and as we wound round the south slope of Mount Olives and came in full view of the city of the Great King, my feelings were indescribable. My whole being yearned for the restitution. The whole anxiety now centres in this city. The sufferings of our race cannot be ameliorated till this city is rebuilt and made a praise in the earth. When will the Lord's House be rebuilt? May he hasten it in his time.

We soon passed the Garden, entered St. Stephen's Gate, and reached our home at 3 o'clock, p. m. This four days' trip, though attended with some hardships, was nevertheless profitable. I may at some future time refer to it again. May the readers of the Herald be benefitted by a perusal of these hastily written lines.—William W. Doughty, Jerusalem, Syria, February 17, 1880.

A CRISIS IN METHODISM.

An Issue Which the Body Soon Must Face.

Seeking the Cause of the Unusual Apathy Before the Quadrennial Session—Remarkable Changes in Doctrinal Thought and Expression—The Problem of Dealing With Heretical Teachers.

CINCINNATI, March 18.—For more than a score of years the approach of each quadrennial session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been attended by the agitation throughout the denomination of some question so prominent as to dwarf all others. Lay delegation dominated the attention of the church at the General Conferences of 1860, 1864, and 1868. Lanahan and the New York Book Concern were the themes in 1872, though the issue of an elective presiding eldership was already forcing itself upon the attention of Episcopal Methodism and Methodist Episcopalism. In 1876, this question, championed by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Cummings, the then out-going president of Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., and by other Nestors of New England Methodism, overshadowed the field of agitation.

The General Conference of 1880 approaches amid a calm that is phenomenal, if not portentious. In all the western conferences, the delegates to the General Conference have been elected without pledges or instructions, a proceeding without precedent in a score of years. The sessions of the eastern (spring) conferences are now beginning, and if they should choose delegates unpledged and uninstructed, the wonder will be complete. This preternatural stillness of the denominational atmosphere is causing comment among the leaders of the councils of the church as to its cause and augury. Why do the great, pertinent, unsettled questions of the policy of the church—questions that will certainly be under discussion at the General Conference, such as the limitation of the pastoral term, the elective presiding eldership, the numerical strength and official functions of the board of bishops, the relations of the missions of the church to its home government—why do not these questions attract the attention and engage the interest of the church? Three causes have been assigned. The first is that the church has become apathetic by a growing worldliness, which has stolen the interest once given to religious and denominational themes and appropriated it to schemes whose ultimate object is several miles this side of the city that John saw. Another is that the present methods of the denomination are so successful and satisfactory that little remains to be desired. The third is that the church is face to face with an unnamed crisis which is of such importance as to belittle questions of mere administrative detail.

Whatever may be the force of the first two of the above named causes, it is believed by many prominent Methodists, close observers of the "signs of the times," that the last is far the most influential in bringing about the present dead calm. The quadrennium just closing has witnessed remarkable movements in the doctrinal thought and expressions of the denomination. It is no secret that some of the oldest, ablest, and most honored men of the church privately disclaim allegiance to some of the teachings of John Wesley and Richard Watson, whose sermons and institutes respectively are the official and infallible standard of orthodoxy of the denomination. In the heroic and aggressive days of Methodism, a slight dissent from the views of these godly men, who were endowed with remarkable insight into the meaning of Scripture, and were empowered to anticipate the results of centuries of research, and write theology for the ages, was sufficient cause for brief trial and unhesitating expulsion from the ranks of the ministry. Methodism at that time had its headquarters in the saddle, and a disciplinary trial would have to divide with a preaching service the bivouac of a night. The king's business required haste, and it got it. In the last quadrennium, dissent has taken on a tone a hundred times more bold than ever before in the history of the church. Bishops, editors, college professors, and metropolitan preachers have written, lectured, and preached "strange doctrines" contrary to "the standard of the church," and have been unrebuked. It is significant of the growing laxity of disciplinary interpretation that the New York Methodist preachers' meeting, a few months ago, raised and discussed a question settled by half a century of denominational usage, viz.: Whether the discipline provided for the bringing to trial a ministerial heretic, no matter how rank and blatant his heresy might be, provided he heartily believed and honestly preached all the doctrines contained in the formulated articles of religion of the Methodist Episcopal church? Judge E. L. Fancher, of New York City, one of the best legal minds in the denomination, was called upon to decide the question. He decided, of course, that a minister can be legally expelled for expressing an opinion contrary to the writings of Wesley and Watson. Judge Fancher very correctly inserts the word "authors" into the phrase, in the Methodist Book of Discipline, "the standards of the church." By this interpolation of a word and the erasure of the final "s" of the word "standards," he makes the phrase refer to the writings of Wesley and Watson, instead of to the articles of religion.

While it is significant of the present crisis in Methodism that so influential a body of Methodist ministers as the New York Methodist Preachers' Meeting should raise a question so well settled by the plain text of the Discipline, when properly interpreted, and by the usage of the church, it is still more ominous that the decision of Judge Fancher was afterward combated by one of the prominent writers of the church, and, to crown the wonder and confirm the sinister apprehensions of the ecclesiastical soothsayers, one of the editors of the church, an officer of the General Conference, was found ready to publish the article, which, with marked ability, labored to show that the Methodist church has no legal right to expel a minister of the denomination for heresy, provided he is a hearty believer in the articles of religion of the church.

This question has been brought into a sort of local prominence here by the expulsion, last fall, from the Cincinnati Conference, of a young preacher of the denomination who held and advocated some peculiar views in regard to the nature and extent of Adam's moral perceptions previous to the fall, and who had become a literalist as touching the meaning of such Biblical phrases as "everlasting destruction" and the like. It so happens that the articles of religion of the church formulating a scheme of religious belief are entirely silent on these important subjects. The charge against him on his trial was, "holding and disseminating doctrines contrary to the articles of religion of the Methodist Episcopal church, as set forth in writings of John Wesley, Richard Watson, and John Fletcher." On this charge he was expelled from the ministry and membership of the church. He immediately charged, through the public press of Cincinnati, that the ecclesiastical court which brought him in guilty under the above charge set their names to what they knew to be false, because even if every specification were true, neither the doctrines therein cited nor their contraries were even alluded to in the articles of religion per se, nor in any setting forth of those articles by the authors named; that whatever these authors spoke of the doctrines mentioned in the specifications they were treating of subjects entirely extra to the articles of religion. It is admitted by some of the highest officers of the church that the verdict was not truthful; that it asserts what is intrinsically false, and the unanswered charge of the expelled brother leaves the court in an embarrassing position. This trial illustrates, not the orthodoxy of western Methodism, but its timidity in disciplinary matters. Instead of standing boldly upon Judge Fancher's impregnable, interpolatory position, and bringing this young man for preaching doctrines contrary to "the standard(s) [authors] of the church"—a charge which could unquestionably have been sustained—it preferred to shelter the trial beneath the articles of religion of the church, even though such action logically compelled it either to clear the heretical culprit or perpetrate a falsehood.

It may be stated, upon the very best authority, that some action will be proposed, at the General Conference, making better provision for trials for heresy than those now provided, and it is quite possible that Judge Fancher's interpolations may be made cancelled. But the introduction of any legislation looking toward a definition of heresy for punitive purposes will as surely be attended by a storm of debate as the cannon answers to the match. Some attribute to the impendency of this question the depression of interest in question of merely economic significance. It is certain that the church, for years, but especially during the last quadrennium, has been shrinking from the inevitable issue that the march of theologic thought is forcing upon her. She has pursued a temporizing policy. She has said to un-Wesleyan and un-Watsonian preachers: "Hold your beliefs if you will, but be silent about them. Preach neither my beliefs nor yours, on these points. Defend the Gospel of these themes if need be, but do not force this issue upon me." It is believed that the General Conference of 1880 cannot avoid the issues.

POETRY.

"Let no Man Say when he is Tempted, I am Tempted of God."

W. L. CROCKETT.

Thou hast thy part for which thy soul has wrought,
And thou hast found it worthiest not thou blame
The Lord for what thy folly gained?
He let thee weight the path of virtue and of truth,
Had'st thou partaken of the precious treasure found
Within the limits of that power way then
Would'st thou have reaped the full reward
Of all thy toil and have found
That God the gracious Father ever below
Upon His sons a glorious heritage,
That can never fade; but on and on
Beyond the circle of the golden sun
Shall bring new honors and new joy;
When all the inanimate rubbish of life are fled
And dawns upon the earth a brighter day;
When from the mountains shall resound
To notes of power, the crowning notes of joy,
And all that harmony can give
In sweetest cadence still upon the ear;
When from the brooks in purest crystal waves
And gurgle out their hymns of gratitude
To Him whose footsteps turn the world shall know,
And all whose bidding earth shall gladly give
Her fullest treasure.
The dark and gloomy days that come
And bend our sorrow now, shall change
Their tears for smiles, and weep no more:
Nor shall grim death go forth his hand
To wither and to blight;
Each note of discord shall be stilled,
And but the fulness of eternal love
And peace, and life, all earth forevermore.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Record of Incidents During My Travels in Kansas.

I. M. STEPHENSON.

Six miles north of Glen Elder, in Mitchell county, I delivered seven or eight discourses, two on the law and Sabbath, by request. In future articles I propose publishing a synopsis of the arguments I addressed, as there are several Sabbatarians in that neighborhood and our brethren there and elsewhere are called upon to meet their argument; and as there are demands for a thorough investigation of this subject I proposed to meet any man they might select. There not being the slightest prospect of such a chance of presenting the arguments pro and con I will avail myself of the only available medium. The Methodists refused to give up their prayer meeting the first evening of my arrival there. The next Tuesday evening the school house having been given into our hands by one or two of the leading members of the M. E. Church, a goodly number of our friends assembled only to find the house pre-occupied by a few women as leaders, and quite a congregation of their party. It was clearly evident that they would occupy the house or have a row, so we passively submitted. They were in a great hurry to commence their meeting, lest I should commence in advance of them first. They prayed and talked as long apparently as they could think of anything to pray or talk about. The animus of their prayers and exhortations was that when done with the trials of this inconstant world they might go to their home in heaven.

A young man whom the women who managed the meeting put forward to lead, called upon all who desired to inherit the kingdom to rise to their feet. Some of our brethren were rising when he added that all who expected to go to heaven should arise, when those referred to sat down. When the interest of the meeting was fast abating, an elderly gentleman stepped forward and affirmed that he believed he had a soul that would go to heaven or hell. "John," he continued, "saw the souls of them who were slain under the altar in heaven." "Christ said that man could kill the body, but could not kill the soul." "Paul knew that he had a crown laid up in heaven,"—that if his "earthy house were dissolved, he had a house not made with hands eternal in the heaven,"—that to be "absent from the body" was to be present with the Lord; therefore he desired to depart, and be with Christ, which is far better. He continued, Christ said, in my Fathers house there are many mansions and I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also. Man can kill the body but cannot kill the soul."

The foregoing is a summary of the harangue to which we listened for twenty or thirty minutes. To which I replied as follows: The Revelator says, "And when he had opened the fifth seal I saw under the altar the persons of those slain on account of the word of God, and on account of the testimony which they held, and they cried with a loud voice, saying, how long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on those who dwell on the earth? And white robes was given to each of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a short time, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren that were to be slain as they were, should be filled up." Rev. vi. 9 11.—Whitlug.

1. These souls were intelligent persons who believed the word of God and testimony of Jesus.

2. These souls, or persons, had blood which had been shed on account of their fidelity to the word and testimony of Jesus.

3. They must rest until their brethren shall be killed as they were—thus teaching that they were mortal souls, who could be slain with the sword.

Not only were these souls intelligent mortals who could be slain, but by reference to Rev. xx. 4 we may learn that they must be raised from the dead in order to future life. The Revelator says, "And I saw thrones and they sat on them and judgment was given for them: and I saw the persons of those beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, and those who had not worshipped the wild beast, nor his image, nor had received the mark on their forehead, or on their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ the thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years were completed."—Whitlug.

1. These souls are the intelligent persons who will sit on thrones and reign with Jesus Christ.

2. On account of their fidelity to the testimony of Jesus and the word of God their heads were cut off.

3. They will be raised from the dead, as clearly taught by the declaration that "the rest of the dead lived not again;" thus demonstrating that they had been dead, and had lived again, or how can it be affirmed that the rest of the dead lived not again?

The red horse and the sword are symbols of death and its cause. The pale horse whose rider is death is followed by the grave to receive the martyred millions, falling from the altars upon which they had been immolated; and the white shrouded dead are bold figures of speech with which to represent the bloody reign of the Great Anti-christ who with his great sword—a symbol of death—has slaughtered a great army of Christians nearly ten times as large as the marshalled armies of the nations of earth to-day.

The blood of these martyred millions cries to heaven for vengeance the same as the blood of Abel cried for vengeance. Matt. x. 28 was quoted to prove the separate existence of the soul. It reads, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the (psuchee) soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in (gehenna) hell." To kill the body is to deprive it of life. The context illustrates this. We read in the 21st verse, "And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death."

Luke's version of this language of Christ will throw light on Matthew's version. Matthew's Gospel has a great many Hebrew idioms, while Luke, who wrote the pure Greek, has omitted most of them.

Luke represents Christ as saying, "And I say unto you my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, but have no more that they can do." "But I forewarn you whom ye shall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed hath power to cast into (gehenna) hell; yea, I say unto you fear him." Luke xii. 4, 5.

1. According to Luke to kill the body is to kill the man, or according to Christ in Matt. x. 21 to kill the man and to kill the body are one and the same thing.

2. Luke does not mention the destruction of the psuchee, or life, but he expresses the same thing in another form.

After man has destroyed the body it must be restored before it can be destroyed a second time by God. When man shall have destroyed his fellow man his power for harm is exhausted. He cannot raise his victim from the dead and kill him a second time; but God can raise those to life who had been destroyed by their fellow man, and inflict the second death upon them for their wilful transgression of his law; and he will do so, or else Christ appealed to a false reason why men should fear God. "It is a fearful thing (says the apostle) to fall into the hands of the living God." But unless God shall destroy the future being (or that which man cannot destroy) of all those who do not obey him, then it would be no more fearful to fall into the hands of God, than it would be to fall into the hands of man; for man can deprive us of the present life; and there his power ends—but God can go beyond and deprive us of the future life—he can deprive us of both the present and the future. Hence in Christ's explanation of the 28th verse and at the 39th verse he says, "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." This is Christ's own explanation of what he means by the destruction of the soul and body. It would be a natural impossibility for one man to save and lose the present life at the same time.

Christ, therefore, teaches that he who to save the present life denies him, shall lose the future and eternal life he has in reserve for all his faithful children. The same Greek word rendered soul at the 25th verse is twice rendered life at the 39th verse. The simple meaning of the text would read, "And fear not them which kill you, or deprive you of the present life; but are not able to deprive you of the future life, but rather fear him who is able to deprive you of both the present and the future life." This is certainly the import of Christ's explanation at the 39th verse.

Paul's last words correctly quoted reads, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 6 8.

1. The place where he expected to receive his reward, namely, upon earth to which Christ must first return.

2. The time when he expected his reward, namely, the day and appearing of the Lord.

3. Those with whom Paul shall be rewarded, to-wit: "All those who love his appearing."

Conclusion, no appearing of Christ, no crown, no reward.

Modern Visions.

Editor Restitution:—As people are sometimes too apt to put confidence in recent predictions and prophecies, I think we should use great caution in giving them our approbation as true. Yet, as God rules in some sense in the destinies of nations, we suppose items of interpositions and manifestations of noted events may, sometimes, in some way, be given, especially where his people may have a special interest of understanding as a guide for corresponding action. From this position the most reliable and valid prediction or vision that I have seen, is that of Washington's, and published in THE RESTITUTION of April 9, 1873. And, in regard to the progress and destiny of this country, and, as the first and second peril mentioned, have had their literal fulfillment, may we not suppose the third may also be equally real and have a special reference to the effect the great Armageddon battle will have on this country? But the inquiring mind wishes to know if this vision was published before the commencement of our late civil war? If it was, when, and where can it be found? Can some of the readers of THE RESTITUTION answer this question?

SELECTIONS.

[The Christian.]

"I Can Do All Things."

"Oh, if I could only have one more fresh start in life," said a young person to me, one day, "how much I would achieve! What upward progress I would make! Oh, to be free from the unhappy memories of past sins and mistakes, to shake off the thraldom of moral infirmities, to rid myself of old prejudices and enemies, and innocent and happy as when a child, walk henceforth in the light and liberty of God's encompassing love!"

Well, why not? Nothing is impossible with God. This wish is not only capable of a fulfillment, but of a much broader one than your desponding heart is now capable of perceiving. But for the lessons of those past painful experiences, what assurance have you that you would tread more steadfastly than heretofore the heavenly path? The mournful, sad past, so full of errors and pains as it now rises in retrospection, is the tender monitor that inspires this present yearning desire for better things. To go back, and start as in infancy with unformed powers for judging between right and wrong, with feebleness of reason to guide your choice, is as undesirable as it is impossible. But to start afresh, with tried and trained weapons for combating evil, an active will, aided by divine power in grasping the saviour helps to a better life, and making them your own, is your present privilege; and this new life, when you have entered upon it, may be as uninfluenced by the memory of by-gone failures, as was that period of life when, a tender nursling on your mother's knee, you viewed this great shining round of activity with new and wondering eyes, never dreaming of the help that would come to you in place of parental teaching by-and-by, in the potent but now lamented form of experience.

The offending past, the disappointing grievous past, full of wrecks of the tenderest hopes, plans, efforts and affections, is a great moral guide reaching out its imploring arms to you to pause and decide whether or no a "fresh start" shall be taken for upward progress. A more glorious start too, inasmuch as a purged, forgiven soul, walking henceforth in the sunlight of infinite mercy, is the redeemed object of God's tenderest care, and a recipient of his never failing sympathy and grace.

"What does all this mean?"

Do you say that your powers for well-doing, once so fresh, are now marred by abuse—dwarfed, incapable of producing blessed results? "Is anything too hard for God?" "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." Let us look hopefully away awhile from our tempted, wearied selves and courageously facing our moral foes as they stand arrayed against us, see if we cannot muster a mightier force than has hitherto been brought to bear against us, to our defence,—even to their subjugation. All the wasted opportunities of our past lives cry out to us to redouble our efforts, and make good their loss, and to apply to the fountain of cleansing, and come forth not only purified but armed with vigor for whatever of Christian conflict awaits us. Why sit down and brood mournfully over the large portion of life spent in weak accomplishment of right deeds, gathering from these prolonged reflections only discouragement for future effort? Do not even the tremendous issues of our misdeeds argue the more loudly for the highest possibilities in an opposite course of action? Surely the powers of darkness are not more mighty than the powers of light, and if the results of sin are so direful, what may we not hope to accomplish in a steadfast pursuit of right, with God for our helper?

Perhaps we weep that so small a fraction of time lies before us, in comparison with that which is already gone. If it be but a fraction, dare we waste a moment in idle lamentation? If you are roused sufficiently to bemoan the past, you are ready to act at once. If life is still in its morning, and a long future stretches out before you, will it not pay to buckle on the armor and start afresh? Oh, how the present bristles with glorious, life-promising opportunities! As every element of nature on the glad spring morning is jubilant in its calls for rejoicing; as every renewed twig and tuft of earth begins to sparkle with new life, so our present and future are teeming with ways and means for Christian activity. Then "lie not down wearied neath woe's weeping willow!" Arise, and through the mercy of God, the "dayspring from on high" shall visit your heart. Cast off the filthy rags of the past,—though they cover the vilest habits of intemperance, or the flames of a despotic temper; whatever long cherished forms of sinful indulgence they shelter, their power may be broken, and you may yet honor God in the overthrow. Pray! Prayer, crowned by faith shall lead to courage and victory. The scars of past defeats may yet serve as badges of future victory and power.

But to doubt that Jesus will, in consideration of past wrongs refuse to lend us his powerful aid in turning to him, (however late in life the desire may be born in us) is to doubt his mission on earth. To believe that one is too old to undertake the tearing down of old tyrannical sins, is to doubt his infinite power. He certainly can make the blackest heart "white as fleece." Enemies and prejudices may be removed, the memories of past mistakes be stripped of their bitterness, and as one safely crosses a bridge over some dangerous chasm, and gazes down with a momentary shudder into the murky depths of darkness below, and goes on with a song in his mouth, so may you go on singing to the end of your days, the most jubilant strains of gratitude for your final and triumphant deliverance from the bondage of besetting sins.—Mrs. E. C. Whitney.

Consular reports from Salonica, Turkey, declare that, with the exception of the towns and the immediate vicinity, the country is in the hands of the brigands. Thirteen distinct bands are enumerated, containing in all about 150 men of various creeds and nationalities—Greeks, Lutzo-Wallachs, Bulgarians, Albanians, and Turkish desetters. At a certain time some of the bands received subsidies from Athens, and professed to be the representatives of Hellenic aspirations, but of late they have divested themselves of this semi-political character, and play the part of simple brigands, levying black mail from Mussulmans and Christians indiscriminately. The brigands avoid, as much as possible, all conflict with the military forces, but they have no fear of the local police or civil authorities, who are too often, it is said, in league with the chiefs.

Presumption first blinds a man, and then sets him to running.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I have been taking THE RESTITUTION for a short time and am much pleased with it, I should have taken it before had I known its merits. Prof. P. H. Hook had it mailed to me, and I must say it has the true gospel ring, indeed it is consoling to know that some dear brethren and sisters are constantly looking for the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior, and are not mere babes wraped in swaddling clothes; but have grown into men and women in the great work, and are filled with wisdom and clothed with robes of righteousness, instead of with the rags of Babylon. Twenty-five years ago I had a written discussion with the late Benjamin Franklin, Editor of the Christian Review, in which I took the Bible ground that man in his present state had no claim to immortality and would "utterly perish in the day of judgment." I need hardly say to you, that doctrine has rendered me to a great extent unpopular among the Disciples, and although I have some very dear brethren and sisters among them, yet their preachers never invite me to take an active part with them in their meeting with very few exceptions. And as I have not been in circumstances to do much by myself, having been greatly burdened by the affairs of this life, I have held but few meetings for years, but, now I have come to the conclusion that I will proclaim the way of salvation, and the coming and reign of Christ; if an opportunity presents itself. There are those by me who profess they look for the coming of the Master, but are wrapped up in all the mysteries of present immortality and momentary conversion and you know it is impossible for me to work with them. O, how I long to be with those who love the truth and engage with them in the great work before us. I will send a few lines which you are at liberty to publish if you see fit, act your own good pleasure. From your brother in Christ.

J. J. WARNER.

Editor Restitution:—I am almost entirely alone here. We have a church of Second Adventists, that is the nearest the truth of any we have here. Enclosed you will find three dollars to apply on the paper towards clearing it of indebtedness. The paper ought to be out of debt; but my little mite won't do much in that direction, but it will help that much. If every brother would do a little it would soon be free from debt. Now brethren put all your shoulders to the wheel and see how easily it will move around. It never can move without something to move it, and it will take money to clear the paper from debt if it is ever cleared. I have been slow about sending in my donation, but better late than never. Let us not wait till the Lord comes and finds our paper in debt. Your brother waiting for the soon coming kingdom.

LEWIS BRINSON.

Mound City, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—I have only to repeat what I have before expressed, my satisfaction with the paper in general. One thing, I trust, you will not fail to keep us fully informed in, and that is, of the movements already begun to rebuild the waste places of Israel's land. The paper, filled with accounts of events transpiring there, is well filled, for really they are the best and strongest evidence we have of the truth of prophecy, and of the soon coming of our Lord.

Yours truly,

B. F. THOMPSON.

[We shall make every effort to procure all the news relative to the restoration of Judah and Israel, believing, with our brother, that the evidences of our Lord's soon-coming are to be looked for in the changes that may transpire in the land of promise.—ED.]

Editor Restitution:—I greatly desire to see THE RESTITUTION flourish, and I think the best way, is to make personal application for subscribers, as such are more apt to read and value that which they pay for. I send you from time to time a New York paper, having scraps such as you may use. I send you by this mail, the N. Y. Times, marked, calling attention to the "Crisis in Methodism;" making a point of the question of future punishment; which question must come up and be discussed; the time has come, that men will no longer take for granted, that which ecclesiastical bodies determine as matters of faith. The word of the Lord is to me, an end of all controversy; and all definitions, and expositions, not clearly stated, and well sustained, by collateral testimony, goes for naught. I sympathize with you in your labors as editor, and hope wisdom from above will be granted you, that our paper may be only means for edification.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Venture not upon the threshold of wrong.

Flavel: Life is but short, therefore crosses cannot be long.

Behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch above his own.

'Tis one thing to have our sins worn away from the memory, and quite another thing to have them washed away at the gospel fountain.

A life of holiness is a life of service.

"If each man's deeply hidden woe
Were written out upon his brow,
For many, then, our tears would flow,
Who rather move our envy now."

Lucan: Times of general calamity and confusion have ever been productive of the greatest minds. The purest ore is produced from the hottest furnace, and the brightest thunderbolt is elicited from the darkest storm.

When death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never our tenderness that we repent of, but of severity. This we should always bear in mind and by keeping bitter words from our lips, drive them from our hearts. Love we can never regret, but hate may fill all our lives with bitterness.

Bickersteth: The possession of religious knowledge may be fatally but easily mistaken for the possession of real religion.

How much would I care for it, could I know
That when I am under the grass or snow,
The ravelled garment of life's brief day,
Folded, and quietly laid away,
How much do you think it would matter then
What praise was lavished upon me, when,
Whatever might be the effort or store,
It neither could help or hurt me more?

God renders earth desolate to induce you to seek a better country. He strikes away every human prop, and puts failure and vexation into every worldly scheme, that you may turn from your idols unto him.

If the Christian sleep, it is like the laborer sleeping in the harvest field, when the storm is threatening and the master's crops are all exposed; or like the soldier sleeping on duty when the foe is in sight.

GATHER THE GRAINS.

"God's angels drop, like grains of gold,
Our duties midst life's shifting sands,
And from them, one by one, we mold
Our own bright crown with patient hands.
From dust and dross we gather them;
We toil and stoop for love's sweet sake,
To find each worthy act a gem
In glory's kingly diadem,
Which may daily richer make.

The memories of childhood, the long, far away days of boyhood, the mother's love and prayer, the voice of a departed playfellow, the ancient church and school-house in all their green and hallowed associations, come upon the heart in the dark hour of sin and sorrow, as well as in the joyous time, like the passage of a pleasantly remembered dream, and cast a ray of their own purity and sweetness over it.

It is not the indolent or the easily-worked man that has the necessary amount of leisure for the attainment of some desirable local or general object. It is rather the busy man who, by the careful husbanding of fractions of time which other less thoughtful people would waste, can and does achieve incomparably great and valuable results.

M. Goovaerts has published at Antwerp a book on the origin of gazettes and periodical newspapers, in which he claims to have proved that Abraham Verhoeven (born at Antwerp, June 22, 1580,) was "not only the first gazetteer of Europe, but also the inventor of the illustrated paper." The first number of his venture, which has fallen into M. Goovaerts' hands, contains an account of the battle of Beckeren, fought May 17, 1605. From the number for April 14, 1606, it appears that the price was two sous per copy. After 1615 the publication of Verhoeven's paper was more systematic and regular, and in 1622, 178 numbers were published in all. In 1620 it became a weekly journal, under the title of the Wekelyks Tydinghe.

Notice!

I beg leave to announce that I have on hand about 5,000 copies of the large seven-page tract lately published at forty-five cents per hundred, and that, to make it more convenient for purchasers, postage stamps will be received for amounts less than a dollar. Send orders to WILEY JONES,

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

In the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Parker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. M. Pile, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Parker combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Pastimelist" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of All his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Jesus Tempted to Mistrust God.

Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward a hungered. And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Matt. iv. 1-4.

Temptation may be regarded in a two-fold aspect, first, in relation to God, and second, in relation to the tempter, be he human or any depraved being, Satan, for instance, engaged in the work. When God tempts men, or in his providence allows them to be tempted,—put to the proof—his design is necessarily always good. God tempteth no one to sin—never places a moral being in critical circumstances with the purpose of inducing him to commit [illegible] aim is to [illegible] to strengthen holy resolutions and principles, to make the subject of the experiment acquainted with his nature in its hidden tendencies, to put him on his guard against surprises, and to train him in the art of depending on a veiled but infinitely powerful arm constantly at his service.

God has a right to put men on their trial, and in fact the ordeal is implied in our moral nature. He could not be a governor over responsible creatures without such a right, and he always exercises it in tenderness of love and unerring wisdom. Nor ought we to have any wish to escape the testing, even should it present itself in a most painful form. We may not apprehend the design of the trial, but there is a design, and verily it is one worthy of his character who is at once our Father and our God. If we are in darkness, he is in light. If we are in the storm, he is in the calm, and the wind, and the lightning, and the thunder are the ministers of his will.

When subjected to a moral assay, whatever its nature may be we either (as the climax of the trial) resist or succumb,—conquer or are vanquished. Our first parents underwent a testing of the simplest kind, in wisdom adapted to their youth, feebleness, and inexperience. Job, who was well acquainted with spiritual things, and with the voice of conscience, and the awful authority of the Eternal King, had a severe testing, but he endured it with a patience and fortitude that has put millions to shame. He was loyal, trustful, submissive when the storm howled, as in the stillness and prosperity before it arose. Unless he had been placed in the midst of calamities, and by heaven's grace borne them so well, he never would have reached the heights of moral and spiritual elevation on which he stood after they were over and gone. Experience warranted him to say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted." It brought him into closer affinity with the beneficent unseen Power, gave him new strength to contend with sin, made him more dependent and child-like, more disposed to exclaim in every future moment of his life—God and not myself—"not my will, but thine be done!"

On the other hand the sin of all evil agents, visible or invisible, in tempting men is directly to lead him away from God. This is the motive, and the only motive. The spirit of the world is sometimes most intensely wicked in more purely moral matters than at others, as when the Prince of this world or any of his kindred functionaries of darkness put them out of thought on some murder or other wrong. The aim in their case is to manifest defiant hatred to God, to spoil his servants in the flesh, to grieve Him in their overthrow, to thwart his loving paternal ends, and if possible to ruin those who might have served him with steadfast hearts for ever. God's end in temptation—that is, in letting his servants—is always good: Satan's is unqualifiedly malicious,—"evil, only evil, and that continually." When God's proving closes in failure, or when the being proven fails to pass bravely through the trial, a lapse into sin is the result, though absolutely against its aim and will; when the Wicked One gains his point, the tempted sins, which was the only design in the assault.

The centre point of interest and moral decision is the man's will. When it bends towards God, the man is safe; when it inclines toward Satan, or to do what is known to be wrong, he is gone. There is no compulsion, be it understood, either from above or from below. The forces attacking the human will are always in harmony with its own nature, namely, moral; in other words, they are motives, persuasions, interests, promises and allurements. A battle of motives is waged, when temptation is in progress;—motives presented by the first Being, motives presented in the most subtle and enticing shapes by the worst being. Yield to the motives presented by the first, and the infinite One is glorified and the tempted is advanced in moral power; bow to the second, and the field is lost—the malignant adversary has come off victorious, affording him [illegible] upon [illegible] that saddens and dispirits the mind.

[illegible] might thunder [illegible] lightnings flash around, and the earth tremble with fear. The question in the hour of temptation is,—can you, will you, confide in the God of humble Faithfulness and Love? This demand was addressed to our blessed Lord in the wilderness; and we are now prepared to watch his attitude in the period of trial, and to understand his answer. The scene is full of instruction as to our own position in the world, and full of encouragement to every tempted soul.

"After this shall he turn his face to the isles, and shall take many; but a prince for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease; without his own reproach he shall cause (it) to turn upon him." Fulfilled.—Julius Cæsar left Egypt and made war on the king of the Cimerian Bosphorus, where his victories were so rapid, that their record was in these words, I came, I saw, I conquered.

Verse 19: "Then he shall turn his face towards the fort of his own land; but he shall stumble and fall, and not be found." Fulfilled.—Julius Cæsar then turned his face towards Rome, and was assassinated in the senate chamber, just as he was about to gain imperial honors.

Verse 20: "Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes (in) the glory of his kingdom; but within a few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle." Fulfilled.—Augustus Cæsar reigned in his stead (Luke ii. 1); he was a raiser of taxes, or made an enrollment. In the height of Rome's glory, at the time when it gained universal dominion, he died peaceably.

Verse 21: "And in his estate shall stand up a vile person, to whom they shall not give the honor of the kingdom; but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries." Fulfilled.—Tiberius Cæsar reigned over the united Roman empire in the place of Augustus, thanks to Livia, who secretly poisoned Augustus, lest he should change his mind. Augustus would have given the succession to Agrippa, but he refused it. Under the death of Augustus, [illegible] by the servile senate. His character was so vile, that Seneca, the historian, remarks concerning him, that he never was drunk but once, and that was from the time he first took to drinking until his death. He was the curse to the Roman [illegible].

Verse 22: "And with the arms of a flood shall they be overflown from before him, and shall be broken, yea, also the prince of the covenant." Fulfilled.—Bishop Newton says: "The overflown shall be overthrown from before him and shall be broken." Tiberius had a violent death. He was suffocated with pillows, on the 16th of March, A. D. 38, and the Prince of Covenant (the Messiah) was broken, or crucified April 3, A. D. 33. While Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee was at Jerusalem at the passover, at which Christ was crucified, when he and his men of war set Christ at naught, he heard of the death of Tiberius.

Verse 24: "And after the league (made) with him he shall work deceitfully; for he shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people." Fulfilled.—And after the league between Rome the king of fierce countenance and the people (nominated) of God, the Jews, as given in 1 Mac. viii., and, also, by Josephus' Ant. B. 12, chap. x., he shall work deceitfully with the nations, by professing the most gentle and unassuming disposition, and by flattering them into obedience, and subjection, and from a little handful of people it became the strongest monarchy on the earth.

Verse 24: "He shall enter peaceably, even upon the fattest places of the provinces; and he shall do (that) which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers' fathers; he shall scatter among them the prey, and spoil and riches; (yea) and he shall forecast his devices [illegible] the stron[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

THE RESTITUTION.

J. A. SHAYLER, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 21, 1880.

ACCORDING to the very latest reports storms have been very violent and destructive in various parts of the west for three or four days past. If account be true, nearly the entire town of Marshfield, Mo., was blown down by a terrific wind storm Sunday night, resulting in great loss of life. Leavenworth, Kansas, was also the scene of disaster, the storm unroofing and demolishing houses and barns. At Holton and Salt Creek Valley, in the same state, at Beloit, Wis., Ashland, Ill., Detroit, Mich., and Memphis, Tenn., serious damages are reported. Extensive fires, also, are raging in various parts of Virginia, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania doing immense damage.

IN regard to communications, we say to all our brethren that we are trying to do the best we can. It is true some articles are delayed for a variety of reasons. We have had all we could do for the last month to prepare for each weekly issue of THE RESTITUTION, as we have been nearly prostrated from the effects of a very severe cold. Our paper is small, our readers expect some variety, and we make every effort to fill our small sheet with the best matter we may have on hand. We welcome articles from all our old correspondents, and gladly announce that we hope to be favored with continued articles from some new correspondents whose first contributions are most highly appreciated.

WE sometimes receive plaintive appeals from persons who claim to be in indigent and suffering circumstances, for which the senders demand a place in THE RESTITUTION. Now, while it may be very wrong for us to withhold such appeals, it may be, in many instances, a greater wrong to insert them. We confess that our own experience, as editor, as well as some things that we have learned from the published experience of other editors of what are termed Advent papers, have decided us to go slow in giving an editorial guarantee to every unauthenticated appeal to the sympathy and generosity of the brotherhood, when we are as utterly ignorant of the real merits of the case as any one of the readers of our paper can be. We can not get along in publishing THE RESTITUTION without quite an amount yearly of extra relief. If we ask any more of our brethren, we must have some assurance that the demand is one to which every Christian and sympathetic heart should lovingly respond. We must however be allowed time to investigate cases hereafter. One seemingly sorrowful case that has been twice pressed upon us we will inquire into and then act.

The Closing Dispensation.

How few are aware that the evening shadows of this Gospel dispensation are stretching across the world. As the sunset of the age approximates, time seems to speed away with a constantly accelerated swiftness. Prophecy and history give no uncertain warning that the crisis of ages impends. The index-finger on the dial-plate of heaven now nears the mysterious figure that marks the closing hour of Gentile times. The awe-inspiring future will soon unveil its solemn realities of judgment dooms and irreversible destinies of life or death eternal. The thief-like coming of our Lord for his precious jewels is near, very near. At some midnight or midday; at some dawning morn or dewy eve, after a very little while, the heavenly Bridegroom will come for his Bride. That parousia will occur as suddenly as the lightning's shaft flits across the face of the storm cloud. In less time than the utterance of the shortest monosyllable will every grave sunder where one sleeps in Jesus. In the briefest moment will the living remnant of the church, left over from the sleep of death for translation, be changed.

Eminent men have read and interpreted the handwriting written on the walls by heaven directed fingers. One says, "Never was there a period that pointed so strikingly and so clearly to the future, as the very hour in which we live." A learned professor says, "We have now arrived at the very borders of that period which is to be signalized by the winding up of that drama which has for ages been enacted in Christianity." A celebrated historian observes, "Modern history seems not only a step in advance of ancient history, but the last step. Modern society seems to bear marks that the fullness of times is come—that there will be no future history; and if this be the case, that we are living in the last age of the world's history, that no other race remains behind to perfect what we have now [illegible] to restore what we have ruined; then, indeed, the interest of modern history becomes most intense." In the gloaming of this evening twilight of time our lot is cast.

The finishing up work of the centuries devolves upon the church of the now passing generation. Responsibilities as solemn as eternity weigh now upon every child of God. The last heir to a crown of glory will soon win the fadeless diadem. For some to-be-transformed child of earth the gates of the heavenly Jerusalem stand ajar yet a little while. Some honored herald of the cross and kingdom, will soon place the last repentant believer of the gospel beneath the waters of holy baptism. Some little church of the faithful and true will soon, and for the last time, place the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of a once crucified Redeemer upon the commemorative table.

He is coming! Israel's Hope and Earth's Restorer, will his words to us be words of welcome? Will time's closing hour find us among the faithful Servants of the King of Kings? He is coming! He that holdeth the Keys of death and the grave. He is coming! He that crowns the heirs of glory and shares his eternal kingdom with the redeemed.

He comes, and comes quickly! May it be in our every heart to say—"Even so come, Lord Jesus."

SELECTIONS.

[The Age to Come Herald.]

I left my room to-day (Feb. 2d,) on account of the cold, and have come down into the Valley of Jehoshaphat to pen a few lines for the Age to Come Herald. It is a great deal warmer here than in my room, but still not very warm; for there is a cold east wind blowing, which is rather disagreeable. Many people are walking through the streets of Jerusalem, crying with cold and hunger. The inhabitants have never witnessed such cold weather before.

I will give you a brief account of my trip to Lydda and Jaffa. With my room-mate, Rev. Mr. Kaley, I left Jerusalem Wednesday morning, Jan. 28th, at 8.45 o'clock, for Lydda, taking the Damascus road through Gibeon, and by the upper and lower Beth-Horan's to the Plain of Sharon, which now presents a magnificent appearance of green waving grain, and [illegible] exceeding anything I have [illegible] we reached Lydda [illegible] is no water mill-privilege in or near Lydda. There is a brook in the rainy season, but it is dry the most of the year.

We tarried here all night, and the next day went north up the plain about nine miles, where we found a Jew from New York, establishing a German Jew Colony. They are having their lumber brought from Jaffa for building, and a few houses are already up. He told us there were two hundred to settle there as soon as they get the buildings in readiness. They have a splendid well, one hundred feet deep and five feet in diameter. The water is good. They have purchased quite a tract of land, for which they paid three thousand and five hundred Napoleons, [$16,845.] A part they bought of the government, and the rest of private individuals. They do not seem to measure land here by the acre; and the only way I could ascertain the quantity they had purchased was by the gentleman telling me it took one hour and a half to cross it, each way. About 13,000 acres. It is useless to speak of the soil; it is rich every where I have been in Palestine.

The river Aujeh, about twelve miles west of Lydda, varies in width from twenty to forty feet, with steep banks, from ten to fifteen feet high, and a rapid current, ten feet deep. It is never dry. Mills could be built upon this stream. There are now two grist-mills upon it, further up than we explored. As we wished to go to Jaffa that night, we left a further examination here for some future time, and started on our way.

We passed a large Bedouin encampment, which gave us no trouble; and after a few hours arrived at the German Colony, or Temple sect, three miles east of Jaffa, who are somewhat divided. They claim that they are to build the Temple of the Lord, to which the Messenger—Christ—will suddenly come, according to Mal. iii. 1. They have a colony at Jerusalem and Mt. Carmel. The houses at this colony are handsome, covered with French tile. Some of them are quite large. They use horses for work. Their plows resemble our New England plows. Their grain is looking finely.

We arrived at Jaffa at 6 p. m., and found that we had travelled thirty miles that day. We put up with Prof. Borchardt's family, where we were [illegible] caught in a shower, and [illegible] into an old building for shelter, intending to remain until the shower had passed; but the rain continuing to fall, I was obliged to walk home in the rain, with my feet loaded down with Palestine soil, which made it tiresome walking.

A few days since, I took a trip down the Kedron four or five miles. In some places the valley is very deep and the mountains abrupt and precipitous. The brook runs in a zig-zag course to the Dead Sea. I left the brook and ascended about one thousand feet to the top of a mountain. Here I had a good view of the surrounding country. To the east was the wilderness of Judea, where John preached and baptized, the Dead Sea, and the mountains of Moab. To the south, I could distinctly see Bethlehem, the birth-place of our Savior, and the Frank Mountain. I could also see Jerusalem, and many other places in every direction. At 3 p. m., I returned by the same route to the city. Some of the mountains in this direction are in a state of cultivation, and some are not.

The history of the past, and the prophecies which reach into the future, make every hill and valley, every brook and fountain of waters, the plains, the rocks, and even the thorns and briars, which are growing abundantly in fulfillment of prophecy, full of interest to the Bible student.

[Prophetic Times.]

Chronological Prophecies.—No. 1.

In reviewing the evidence of the nearness of the end of Gentile supremacy, which is afforded by chronologic prophecy and non-chronologic predictions, we find that while there is irresistible evidence to prove that the end of the times is near, there are no data to enable us to fix on any exact year as the probably predicted time of the consummation. First, then, in proof that it is near, let the three measures of the three dispensations be remembered, and the wide and almost universal range of the law of the completion of weeks.

"Seven times," and seven times only, are appointed as the period of Jewish degradation and dispersion. He who predicted the four hundred years' affliction of the seed of Abraham at the beginning of their history, and who, when those four hundred years were fulfilled, delivered Israel from Egypt and judged the nation which had held them in bondage, predicted later on, that for a great week of 2,520 years Gentiles should rule over and afflict the Jewish people, and that at the end of that time Gentile Jerusalem. Our feet were sore and swollen, and we walked a part of the way with our shoes off.

They have had snow in Jaffa this winter, which, I am told, the inhabitants never saw before. But it soon disappeared. It is warmer in Jaffa than Jerusalem; consequently many of the people go up to Jerusalem to remain during the summer months.

There are three reliable banks in Jerusalem. The principal shops are dry goods, hard ware, crockery, meat and bake-shops, provision and fruit stores, boot and shoe shops, blacksmith shops, and shops for selling olive-wood work. There are two flour-mills, run by horse-power, two hotels, Mediterranean and Damascus. The English have a mission school where the children are taught the English, French, German, and Arabic languages, with success thus far; and scholars are constantly being added to it. It is a charitable institution, and may be considered a blessing to the city. If Jerusalem is a dead place, there are smart, energetic, and enterprising young men here, especially among the English and Germans; and some of them will yet be heard from in the world. Within a few years, there has been between five and six hundred houses erected, outside of the city walls, occupied mostly by Jews and buildings are still going up. Sir Moses Montefiore built a house on the opposite side of the Valley of Gihon, where Jews can remain for weeks, until they can find their lot or place. The Russians are not sulking at present.

In December a steam engine came from England, on an Austrian steamer, and was drawn up to Jerusalem by eight horses. It is now in use in a flour-mill.

Jerusalem is not much of a place for news; no excitement, no drunkenness, no fighting, no railroad accidents, nor anything of the kind. All is quiet and dull.

There was but little rain fell here last season, and crops were light; consequently provisions have been selling for twice as much as usual. This year there is a plenty of rain and snow, and good crops are expected. The Kedron and other small streams are now running beautifully; and the pools are filling [illegible]

[illegible] measures of this [illegible] The prophecy implied a brief succeeding period before the close: "they shall take away his kingdom to consume and to destroy it to the end, and the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." We have seen the kingdom taken away; we wait to see its full consumption and destruction, and the establishment of the kingdom of the Most High. The prophecy of the "time, times, and a half," by its fulfillment, proves that we are close upon the end of the present dispensation, i. e. "the times," and thirdly, the prediction relative to the closing of the sanctuary does the same. The Holy Land, the Holy City, and the site of the temple or sanctuary of God, at Jerusalem, are to be finally cleansed 2,300 years from some starting point which is not exactly defined, but which appears from the prophecy to be closely connected with the restoration of Judah from Babylon—that is, Jerusalem is after that period to cease to be trodden down by the Gentiles, the times of the Gentiles having been fulfilled. Dated from the earliest possible starting point, the commission given by Artaxerxes to Ezra, B. C. 457, this period expired, as we have seen, in 1844, which was a marked epoch in the fall of that Mohammedan power which has long defiled the sanctuary and trodden down Jerusalem. But dated 146 years later, from the era of the Seleucida, this period measured in lunar years expires, like the other two, in A. D. 1919.

The present indications in the condition of Palestine and of the Jews, and in the political events of our day, especially in the east, seem to indicate that the cleansing of the sanctuary and the restoration of Israel are near at hand. When these are taking place; when the Moslems, now driven out of Bulgaria, shall be driven also out of Syria; when some of the national powers of Europe shall conspire to reinstate the Jews in the land of their forefathers, under the guidance of God, then the last warning-bell will have rung; then the last of the unfulfilled predictions of Scripture as to events prior to the great crisis, will have received its accomplishments; then the second pre-millennial advent of Israel's rejected Messiah to reign in conjunction with his risen and glorified saints, as King over all the earth, will be close at hand; then the mystery of God will be all but finished, and the manifestation of Christ immediate. We say emphatically "manifestation," because Scripture does not seem absolutely to exclude the possibility that the rapture of the church, i. e., all true and sanctified living believers may have taken place before. 1 Thess. iv.

How long a time may be required to bring about this restoration of the Jews—who shall say? Never within the last 1,800 years has it seemed so likely as now, for never, since it first arose, has Moslem power laid so low as it does at the present moment. The destruction of the power and independence of the Ottoman empire, like the annihilation of the temporal dominion of the Papacy, should be as a trumpet-blast to the church of God, proclaiming that the day of Christ is at hand. The sanctuary cycle of 2,300 years, equally with the two previous prophecies, indicates that the end is near.

Though differing as to the many details, students of chronological prophecy with one consent agree in this conclusion, which is in itself a strong argument that it rests on a solid basis of revealed truth. The fact that many premature anticipations of the end have by the event been proven mistaken, is sometimes adduced as a proof that all expectations based on chronologic prophecy are of the nature of vain and foolish speculations, deserving only of ridicule and contempt from sober minded, practical Christian people.

But when viewed in the light of the revealed purpose of God to make known the future only by degrees, and only as far as the church was able to bear it, the fact alluded to is merely a proof that the symbolic language in which these chronological predictions were expressed has answered its divinely intended purpose, and disguised, till nearly the time of its accomplishment, the true meaning of the prophecy.

To the early generations of the church it was not given to understand these chronological prophecies at all; later generations made a good guess at their general drift and scale; the reformers obtained approximately true ideas of their scope and application; to many of the prophetic expositors [illegible] of the last two cen- [illegible] light was granted,

[illegible] As in our own day the light has [illegible] come so strong, clear, and bright, that the historic and doctrinal portions of Scripture are scarcely more simple and comprehensible than are its main prophetic outlines to those who carefully study them.

And further, it must in all fairness be granted, that no sooner was the historic system of interpreting the Apocalypse received, and the true scale of enlarging the miniature periods of symbolic prophecy adopted, that some remarkably correct anticipations of future events were made and published. Since then, expositors of chronologic prophecy have proved over and over again, that they are on the right track, even though they may have erred in the application of certain principles, or in relation of certain data, on which to base their calculations. And it is evident, even when they had rightly accepted the year-day] system, and when they had correctly apprehended the meaning of the symbols employed, and duly applied to the events intended, they were by no means secure from minor errors. The very fact that all the prophetic periods have double, and some of them triple and even fourfold eras of commencement and conclusion—coincident with definite stages of development and decay in the Powers symbolized—leaves room for such errors, and accounts for them, without detracting from the value of the system employed. And if such false interpretations were noted, correct ones should in all fairness be remembered also.

One of the earliest and most remarkable of these is that of Robert Fleming, who, in his work of the "Rise and Fall of Rome Papal," published in the year 1701, nearly 180 years ago, anticipated the years 1794, 1848, as critical years in the downfall of the papacy. He added, yet we are not to imagine that these events will totally destroy the papacy, although they will exceedingly weaken it, for we find that it is still in being and alive when the next vial is poured out.

Is it not a proof that this expositor was on the right lines, and had seized the true clue, that he should thus have fixed nearly a century beforehand on the close of the 18th century, as the commencement of the era of Divine vengeance on the papal power, and have pointed out within a single year, the very central period of that signal judgment?

The year 1793 was that of the Reign of Terror, and of the temporary suspension of the public profession of Christianity in France, the first of papal kingdoms; and two years later, the papal government in Italy was overthrown, and the pope carried captive to Vienna.

The remarkable year also of 1848, as a year of crises in the downfall of the French kingdom as indicated in Robert Fleming's writings, by a revolution, (Rev. xi. 13), and the accession of Louis Napoleon, fully proved the correctness of Fleming.

There was not a sign in the political heavens when Fleming wrote in 1701, that such events were impending; he foresaw them solely in the light of chronologic prophecy, and had he weighed a little more maturely the relative importance of the various pope-exalting decrees and acts, which form the starting points of the prophetic 1260 years, he would have fixed on that of Pothas as the most important, and have added to the above accurate and correct anticipations, a fourth, that the years 1866-70, would be years of even more decided crises in the history of the papal apostacy, and would probably witness the entire overthrow and the finality of the temporal sovereignty of the popes. A very considerable number of expositors agreed, in indicating long before their arrival, the remarkable year A. D. 1848 and A. D. 1870, as years of crises in the downfall of despotic power s in Europe, and of papal usurpation; while this half century as the appointed period in which should be finished the long-continued exhaustion and decay of the Ottoman empire, symbolized by the drying up of the Euphrates (Rev. xvi. 12), has been indicated by an equally large number. Mr. Habershon in his "Dissertation on the Prophetic Scriptures," published in 1834, pointed out that the year A. D. 1844, ought to be the year of crisis in this process, which, as we have said, proved to be the year in which the persecuting sword of Islam was, by the power of the Christian nations of Europe, forced back finally in its sheath, since which Ottoman independence has never been a reality. Let those who have justified themselves in turning from any deep or thorough study or prophetic word, on the plea that interpreters differ among themselves, and that their prog- [illegible] long have often proved false, [illegible] have been [illegible] cles that have now passed into the realms of history. Though each one has, as we can see, been fulfilled with marvellous exactitude, error's work have been not only possible, but almost inevitable, in any attempt to fix beforehand the exact date of the predicted event.—E. Bonhomme.

Europe Between the Acts.

Not the least striking feature of the present European situation is the fact that all the men who control it, and who are struggling so energetically to maintain that control, are so far advanced in years as to preclude all hope of their living to see their cherished schemes realized. Prince Bismarck is 65, Prince Gortschakoff 82, Lord Beaconsfield 74, the Czar 62, the Emperor William 83. Yet these graybeards are still as eager as boys in the pursuit of their several objects, and amid the present pause between the two acts of the great political drama, the din and bustle of preparation are audible enough. England is shaking herself free from the circus policy of her chartistag Premier. France is renewing her anti-Jesuit war of 1848. Italy is building monster iron-clads, not without thoughts of Trieste and the Austrian seaboard generally. Greece is fuming over the still unsettled "frontier question." Turkey, true to her time-honored creed of promising everything and performing nothing, is making every effort not to carry out the reforms to which she has pledged herself. Afghanistan is arming for a fresh struggle, and Persia is hanging, as usual, on the skirts of the fray in quest of plunder. Russia is standing on her guard, with one eye bent upon the Nihilists and the other upon Herat. Austria, divided between her fears of Russia and her hopes of fresh booty in Turkey, is stooping to conciliate the despised Roumanians, and to clasp the hand that struck her down in 1866; while Germany, sliding back foot by foot into the pipe clayed despotism of Frederick the Great, is laying fresh burdens on her over-taxed people, "to promote national interests," and preaching peace and good will toward men, from the mouths of 30,000 additional breech loaders.

The Conqueror Conquered.

F. V. BALDER.

I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues, O grave, I will be thy destruction. Hos. xiii. 14.

Death's prison doors were left ajar,
And Christ has entered in,
And robb'd the spoiler of his spoil,
And crush'ed the power of sin.

He holds the keys of death and Hades,
As trophies of his power;
And he will set the captives free
At the appointed hour.

O grave, where is thy victory now?
O death, where is thy sting?
Thy fancied crown the victor's brow,
He'll thy destruction bring.

For he who roll'd the stone up
Can roll them back again,
And bring his ancient nations forth
To walk earth's wide domain.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Short Sermon—Subject: Remission of Sins.

For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. Rom. iii. 23, 24.

In whom we have redemption through his blood even the forgiveness of sins. Col. i. 14.

How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation? Heb. ii. 3.

O, "may the God and father of our Lord Jesus the Christ, who is blessed forever more, help us realize the greatness of our salvation, and the price of our redemption or remission of sins." No human tongue or pen can fully set it forth, "for it does not yet appear what we shall be" and not until the creature shall have been delivered from the bondage of corruption, and brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God, and we can look back upon our lost, degraded, and sinful condition, and contrast it with our redeemed and glorified state, can we comprehend the import or meaning of redemption from sin and its consequences. But we may call upon all that is in us to bless and praise the God of heaven, and adore his loving Son, who has died to redeem us from death, and gives us everlasting consolation and good hope through him. Great! great! incomprehensibly great must be that redemption which has been purchased by the precious blood of Jesus.

Permit me here to submit, that in proportion to the importance of the subject, should be its plainness, and also that the provision is complete, and made for all. 1 John ii. 2. Yes the poor toiling ones of earth may come and find rest. Matt. xi. 28. pardoned yesterday obtains remission of sins to-day it is not because [illegible] has been [illegible] prayers w[illegible] or simplify God's plan of redemption. The sinner now must come to God, and find him where sinners found him 1800 years ago, and obtain remission precisely in the same place and on the same terms. No change in God, but a great change must take place in the sinner both in mind and body, and in character and relation. "The old man must be put off (the old character) and the new man must be put on." Col. iv. 10.

A great change involving the whole man not only must the heart be given to God but those members of the body which have been active in the service of sin and Satan must be employed in the work of God. Rom. vi. 19.

The lost and degraded sinners are invited to come from the foulest and lowest pits of moral and physical ruin and taste and see that the Lord is gracious. To come to God, who is in Christ reconciling the world to himself. 2 Cor. v. 19.

Come from that vile grog shop, and from the dark counterfeiting and gambling shop, and come into Christ or into his church, "which is his body the fullness of him who filleth all in all." Eph. i. 23.

Christ has died to redeem sinners from all the dark and terrible abodes of sin and bring them "into his marvellous light." To change their relationship from servants of Satan to servants of Christ, from servants of the devil to sons of the Great and Holy God. No man can become the servant of God or of Christ till he obeys him or does a righteous act. "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God." 1 John iii. 10.

O, thoughtless sinners, you are now put to test. Will you turn to the Lord and become his sons and become heirs to the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus the Christ and "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness?" Matt. vi. 33. Or will you serve Satan and be his sons and go down to the dark abodes of death, and utterly perish in the day of judgment? 2 Peter ii. 9-12.

Do I now hear some poor sinner say, what must I do to be made free from sin or to be pardoned? I have sinned against the God of mercy and "the soul that sinneth shall die." Ezek. xviii. 20.

My sins have crucified the Son of God; yes, God has so loved me that he has given his only begotten Son to die for me. My hands are red with the blood of the innocent Son of God. O, what shall I do? I deserve to die. What shall I do to have my sins remitted, or to be "delivered from the law of sin and death?" Yes, dear sinner, you are under the sentence of death, and unless you are pardoned in the name (or by the authority) of Jesus the Christ you must die; he is the only one in the great work of redemption that can cleanse you from sin and give you everlasting life. You are legally condemned and you must be legally pardoned. Hence the apostle says, "The law of the Spirit life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death." Rom. viii. 2.

You have sinned against God, and you can only obtain his pardon in or through the name of Jesus. Acts iv. 12; x. 43. We read in Luke xxiv. 46, 47, "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins, should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Notice now the facts:

1. Christ must suffer and rise from the dead.
2. Repentance and remission of sins must be preached in his name.
3. The preaching must begin at Jerusalem.
4. It was to commence after they had received the Holy Ghost, or had been endued with power from on high. Verse 49.

Jesus said to his disciples, "Thus it is written." Where is it written? The law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Isa. ii. 3; Micah iv. 2.

This law is "the law of the Spirit of life," inasmuch as the Spirit spoke it. It is "the law of Christ." Gal. vi. 2. It is "the law of faith." Rom. iii. 27. It is "the perfect law of liberty." Jas. i. 25.

O, sinner, will you now go up to Jerusalem with me and hear what the perfect law of liberty says. Yes, the law that liberates from death. The law of the Spirit that frees from "the law of sin and death." Come, now, let us go up. Here are one hundred and twenty disciples who have met and are waiting, and praying for the reception of the Holy Spirit. Hark! a sound, it "comes like a mighty rushing wind." It fills all the house where tongues like as of fire sit upon them. The vast multitude [illegible] fishermen are now heard to speak the many languages of the earth. Some cry out, "What meaneth this!" Others mock and say, "These men are full of new wine." Now Peter stands up with the eleven and says, "Ye men of Judea and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem be this known unto you, and hearken to my word." Acts ii. 4.

The preaching now commences. The Prophet Joel and David are called to the stand and made to testify to the great events that have transpired. The death, burial, resurrection, and ascension of the Christ, and the pouring out of the Holy Spirit. Let us bear in mind that this is the greatest day that has ever occurred in the history of the Christian church. Christ said, (John xv. 26, 27), "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me: And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning." Here then is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, and the combined evidence of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, that takes away the sin of the world. In view of the testimony brought to bear on this occasion, Peter draws the irresistable conclusion, "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." Acts ii. 36. The testimony is so overwhelming that the heart of the infidel Jews gives way before it and being pricked to the heart, they say to Peter and to the rest of the apostles, "Men and brethren what shall we do?" Then Peter said unto them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus the Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Just here we quote another passage from Peter, "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins." Acts v. 31.

We now hear the first command and also the first promise ever given or made in the name or by the authority of Jesus the Lord and the Christ, who only can give repentance and remission of sins to Israel. Will you now hear the great Prophet, and obey the first command, and receive the first promise made after his death, burial, and resurrection? Do you "gladly receive the word" as they did on the day of Pentecost? If you do, come and be baptized, and your sins shall be remitted and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Never mind that mocker that cries out water salvation, "eight souls were saved by water" in the ark, and but for that salvation they would not be here to cry "water salvation," for no one would have been left to propagate the human species.

The same Peter that preached on the day of Pentecost, says baptism saves us. 1 Peter iii. 21. Remember the children of Israel never sung the song of deliverance until Moses led them through the Red Sea. Take the two texts the words of the Savior, that repentance and the remission of sins must be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem, and the literal fulfillment on the day of Pentecost, when Peter told them to repent and be baptized in his name for the remission of sins, and what honest man can doubt the great law of remission "in the name of Jesus the Christ," given by the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, and by the twelve apostles? Here on the day of Pentecost, we have the design of baptism, distinctly stated "for the remission of sins," and we know when men offer any other form, their gospel did not begin at Jerusalem, and they do not gladly receive the word which was preached on that occasion. They have run past Jerusalem, and unless we can call them back, we can do nothing for them. "They that gladly received the word were baptized." Therefore all who are not baptized do not gladly receive the word.

"When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom and the name of Jesus the Christ, they were baptized both men and women." Acts viii. 12. Therefore they who are not baptized do not believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus the Christ. These two texts place all who refuse to be baptized among the unbelievers, and we must forever regard them as such, and not saved by the Gospel, but condemned.

Hear the commission as recorded by St. Mark xvi. 16. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he [illegible] sure then as they [illegible] resurrection of Christ, the form is baptism. There is no other form that the sinner is called upon to obey in order to be made free from sin.

This passage is the truth of God, and that man who says we are made free from sin without that form flatly denies the word of God. O sinner, if you believe with all your heart you may be baptized. Come then, O come to Christ; put him on, and let him live in you; come into the church, God's holy building, that he may dwell in you by his Spirit. Eph. ii. 22.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Brother Chaplin:—Confined to-day by illness I pencil these few words though little able to do anything. This day the elections begin; and as elections are fewer and longer between than in the United States we need not wonder at the stir everywhere throughout Britain and Ireland. Politics, however, belong not to us. Myself has been asked, "Which side are you on?" And as a believer in the decree—Psa. ii. 7, etc.,—I have had to answer, 'There is indeed interest on our part in viewing the result, which will be known before you see this note from me. Whether the British Empire will still be ruled by an Israelite is to us interesting; though our interest differs in kind from that of Tories and Liberals!

I will just add that never was a general election here watched by France, Germany and Russia, as is the case now.

A few words for the tried and humble. Right it is at all times to be resigned; right to endure patiently; right to submit—right to wait. Under continued trials, however, we may look too much at them. Oft beloved, let us also seek; and have we not in a measure forgot the glory? (Rom. ii. 7). Think of this and its own unfading nature with the appendages! So, however disheartening to appearance now matters may be with us, let us never weary in well-doing.

RESTITUTION FUND.

ARGOS, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1879.

Elder Restitution:—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brethren for help to support The Restitution for the year 1880 and forward its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $3.00 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this, with a few exceptions, if we just thought so. I am well aware that some brethren have contributed nobly, but I make this appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing as a free-will offering.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps I am as poor as any one. I am 49 years old and have a family to support. I have a small farm of 80 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Editor, I will enclose $3.00 to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you all in that coming kingdom. So, farewell.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

In the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Burleigh—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. M. Pile, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Burleigh combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those loving the "Christian Pentecostals" and so much talked of this exactly what they want.

POETRY.

Graves.

M. P. J. C.

Graves—graves—graves!
The earth is a place of graves,
Green trees wave over the dead,
And flowers their perfume shed,
And petals, above the dust
That is laid away in trust;—
Graves—graves—graves!

Graves—graves!
There's room enough yet for graves;—
Room for the broken heart—
Room for the weary head!
Everywhere mother earth
Has room for her dead.
Graves—graves!

Graves!
To the fearful Death we are slaves,
O for the Giver of Life—
The Lord, who saves!
Who hath conquered Death and Hell,
And will open graves—
Graves.

Objections Answered.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

John xiv. 1, 2, 3 is quoted to prove that the saints will be rewarded in heaven. I will quote the Diaglott's rendering of these verses because it has given the true meaning of the word house. It reads: "Let not your heart be troubled; believe into God, and believe into me. In my father's house are many dwellings: but if not, I would have told you; because I am going to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I am coming again, and will receive you to myself, so that where I am you also may be." The Greek word oikia signifies house or dwelling. These are synonymous words. Thus, in the dwelling of God there are many dwellings. Christ said that he was going "to prepare a place." Add to the idea of a dwelling that of a place or foundation and the text would read, "in my father's dwelling place there are many dwelling places, and I go to prepare a (or one of these dwelling places) place for you." The first occurrence of the phrase "the house of God" refers to a place, and nothing else except that his messenger had dwelt there one night. Thus God by his representative dwelt upon a spot of earth; and Jacob called that spot Bethel, which signifies "the house of God." See Gen. xxviii. 19. Subsequently the temple was erected on the same place, and called the "house of God" because God dwelt there by his representative, the Shekinah, the symbol of his presence. That the Lord's house was a dwelling place is evident from Solomon's language. He said: "I have surely built thee an house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in." 1 Kings viii. 13. Thus, God's house is his dwelling place, whether inclosed by a superstructure or not. But that the Father's house was not limited to the place on Mount Moriah where the angel abode one night, nor Solomon's splendid temple, is evident from the following language of Solomon. After having dedicated the temple he prayed, saying: "And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father." But will God indeed dwell on earth? "Behold the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded." 1 Kings viii. 26, 27.

Again, Solomon said when contrasting the universal dwelling place of the Great Father with the local dwelling place inclosed by the temple: "But who is able to build him a house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him?" 2 Chron. ii. 6. Thus, in the most enlarged sense in which the Father's dwelling is spoken of it is unlimited. Paul, in 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18 and v. 1, used the same word which Christ used in John xiv. 2 to represent the whole earth where man dwells, in contrast with heaven, where God dwells. Thus he says: "Besides the momentary lightness of the affliction, works out for us an excessively exceeding aionian weight of glory; we aiming not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are aionian. For we know if the (oikia) the tent of our earthly dwelling be taken down, we have a building from God, a house not made by hands, aionian, in the heavens. For, indeed, in this we are groaning, earnestly desiring to be invested with that habitation of ours which is from heaven: and surely having been invested, we shall not be found destitute. For indeed those being in the tent are groaning, being oppressed; to which we desire not to be divested, but invested, that the mortal may be absorbed by life." Diaglott.

1. The division into chapters has severed Paul's conclusion from his premise. He lays down his premise in the first two verses quoted. In this premise the contrast is between the present state of affliction and an eternal weight of glory; also between the things seen which are temporal and the things not seen which are eternal. Both these couplets in the premise span the habitable earth, so must the conclusion.

2. In this conclusion the Greek word oikia translated house in John xiv. 2, is translated "tent" from skenos, which Paul uses synonymously with oikia. In Greenfield's Lexicon the former is rendered "dwelling," and in the latter "temporary dwelling." This conclusion corresponds perfectly with the premise. Thus, while in this temporary dwelling we are groaning in consequence of affliction and sorrow; but in the eternal dwelling place we shall enjoy an eternal weight of glory; thus we earnestly desire to exchange this earthly dwelling place for the heavenly and eternal dwelling place. "Thus saith the Lord, the heaven is my throne and the earth is my footstool." Isa. lxvi. 1. His head and feet are in the same infinite dwelling. Thus the idea Christ's language conveys to mind is, that in his Father's infinite dwelling there are many dwelling places, and that he was going to arrange for that dwelling place to which he and all the blessed of his Father are joint heirs; and which he purchased with his own blood. Thus, he has gone to the original proprietor to receive a deed of conveyance to his purchased possession. Eph. i. 14. Man never had an inheritance or possession in heaven to lose, nor one lost in heaven to be redeemed by Christ. The same plan will be carried out through the second Adam that would have been carried out through the first Adam had he proved loyal. But by transgression he forfeited the only title to an inheritance God ever prepared for man, which was not a mansion in the skies, but dominion over all the earth. That Christ as the second Adam will restore this forfeited inheritance to which he and all his brotherhood are joint heirs, is evident, from the language of Christ. He says: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. xxv. 31, 34.

1. In the first verse quoted Christ foretold the fulfillment of the promise that "if he should go away he would come again."

2. Having restored the place prepared for man he invites all mankind joint-heirs to come and inherit the [illegible]

3. The earth is the only [illegible] place made for man, lost by man, restored to man, and to which man is heir.

In his discourse on the Mount Christ located the mansion prepared for man and to which the saints are heirs. He says: "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." The saints will certainly inherit the dwelling place Christ has gone to prepare, for they are to be with him. They will inherit the earth, therefore, being his own expositor, he has gone to bring back or make arrangements for the joint inheritance of earth as the home of the redeemed. Of the same import are the declarations of David and Solomon. David says: "But the meek shall inherit the earth, and their inheritance shall be forever." Psa. xxxvii. 11, 18. Solomon says: "The righteous shall never be removed." Prov. x. 30.

Again, he says: "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it." Prov. ii. 21. How can the meek inherit earth and heaven both? How can the righteous inherit the earth forever, and yet inherit heaven at all? How can the perfect remain on earth and yet go to heaven to receive mansions? How can it be true that the righteous shall never be removed, and yet be forever removed? Lastly, Christ did not promise his disciples that he would receive them in heaven, or away from the earth, but just the reverse. He says: "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I am coming again, and will receive you to myself, so that where I am you also may be."

Please remember that before Christ will receive his disciples to himself he will have returned to earth. The adverb "where" relates to earth to which he will return, and not to heaven to which he was going away. He did not promise to receive his people in heaven to which he was going, but on earth to which he was coming back. And while there are many dwelling places in the Father's vast dwelling, only one was prepared for man. 2 Cor. v. 1-4, is quoted to prove that, at death, disembodied souls are invested with spiritual bodies in heaven. Having shown in the commencement of this article that the verses referred to were a legitimate conclusion deduced from the last two verses of the previous chapter, I will only advert to the points proven.

1. In both premise and conclusion the antithesis is not between a lot of souls in one human body being divested of its temporal earthly body and invested with an eternal body in heaven, but between a short period of affliction here and an eternal glory hereafter: also between a temporary earthly dwelling place and an eternal and heavenly dwelling place in the future. The time when this transition shall take place will be when the mortal body shall be invested with immortality. According to the testimony of the same apostle this event will be inaugurated when "the last trump shall sound; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Cor. xv. 52. The apostle then describes the nature of this wonderful change. Thus he continues: "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory." Verses 53, 54. Then affliction shall give place to glory, temporary to eternal things, the earthly to the heavenly home, the corruptible to the incorruptible and the mortal to immortality. No wonder, therefore, that Paul desired to be absent from mortality and present with the Lord in the immortal nature, being prepared by nature and life to receive his own throne, and with all the redeemed to be the ensemble judgeship of the world, to which all the saints are joint heirs to all that Christ is Heir. Amen.

The Kingdom of God.

BY G. H. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S NINTH QUESTION.

I read in Isaiah ii. 3, and Micah iv. 2. That the law should go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. I read also that Jesus bade the disciples to tary at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high; and then that they were to be witnesses of him and to preach repentance and remission of sins in his name among all nations, beginning in Jerusalem. Luke iv. 47, 49. Then following this I find that they tarried in the city after the ascension and received this power upon the important and notable day of Pentecost. Therefore are we led to conclude that the kingdom was then set up or organized.

REPLY.

Friend Enquirer:—It gives me pleasure to consider this question more par[illegible] once I occupied the posi[illegible] Baptist [illegible] I preached your po[illegible] from time to time for fifteen years, and relied upon this array of texts which you now give as invulnerable. It was my Sebastopol. In the contest I shall not say that you are incorrect, for this is not enough; I propose examining the texts you have cited and if you are incorrect in your conclusion as presented in the close of your question, I will leave you to say so.

In the outset I will invite you to Luke's statements. By turning to Acts i. 8, you will find there that the same power is referred to as in Luke xxiv. 49. This power they were to receive not after, as the text would indicate, but by receiving the Holy Spirit. The literal idea in the text and in the original is. "The Holy Spirit having come upon you, you shall receive power." Murdock renders it: "But when the Holy Spirit shall come upon you ye will receive energy." The question now is power or energy for what purpose? The remaining part of the verse Acts i. 8, and Luke xxiv. 48, answers, to become witnesses of Jesus, but to organize a kingdom; no intimation of any organic work. The verses in hand tell us of the extent—in Jerusalem, in all Judea, in Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth—among all nations. Another question of importance is, witnesses of what? Or in other words, what testimony and tidings were they to bear? Not that a kingdom had been organized; but by consulting Luke xxiv. 46, 47, it is to be seen that the points were,

1. To testify of the sufferings and death of Christ.

2. To testify of his resurrection, and

3. To preach repentance and remission of sins in his name, to the extent above mentioned.

Is there any thing further in this—your citation—that will teach of an organization of a kingdom? If so, I fail to see it. Of the day of Pentecost I will agree with you that it was a notable day, that it was one full of interest; but as some of the following questions which you propound will lead to a full consideration of the importance and interests of that day I will not enter into a detail now? But next to the prophecy you cite. One important law of interpretation of all language, laid down by old Father Campbell was, that, we should always take into consideration the parties addressed.

Then applying this law of interpretation of language to the prophecy in hand, and the question arises to whom was it addressed? Isaiah ii. 1, answers: "The word that Isaiah the son of Amos saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem." Thus you see the language of the prophecy in hand was not addressed to the church, nor concerning the church, but concerning Judah and Jerusalem. Next, or consideration.

2. It is to be seen from verse 2, that this prophecy is to be fulfilled in the last days. Hint you may reply that Peter in quoting Joel's prophecy on the day of Pentecost fixed the last days at that time. It is true that he said that the occurrence which had then taken place was a fulfillment of Joel's prophecy; but when we read Acts ii., in connection with Joel ii. 15, iii. 21, it is to be seen by every unprejudiced mind that what occurred on Pentecost was but a counterpart, was but an earnest of what is to transpire in the future when Israel is to be returned to his land: and therefore the last days are yet future.

3. The prophecy refers not to the exaltation of the church but to the exaltation of Judah, and Jerusalem—the mountain of the Lord's house over the tops of the mountains or nations of the earth, and is exactly synonymous with the work which transpires under the sounding of the seventh angel when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. Rev. xi. 15.

4. We find in connection with the proclamation of this word and of this law that the Lord is to judge among the nations. Read verses 3 and 4 together. Now questions: When is he to judge among the nations? Is it a work of the past? Read Acts x. 42; xvii. 31; 2 Tim. iv. 1; Matt. xxv. 31, 46.

Then following as a result of the proclamation of this word and this law, and of this judgment in the earth we see,

1. That they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks, verse 4.

2. That nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more, verse 4.

3. That then they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid. Micah iv. 4.

4. That then every man will walk in the name of God, verse 5.

5. That in that day the Lord will [illegible] over them in Mo[illegible] forth, even forever, verse 7.

7. That then to the tower of the flock, to the stronghold of the daughter of Zion will come the first dominion—the kingdom, verse 6.

Now with these plain simple points relative to the prophecy and the effects to follow thus enumerated I leave you to decide for yourself as to whether they have ever been fulfilled, or can in any manner be applied to the day of Pentecost.

(To Be Continued.)

The Great Theme.

WILEY JONES.

When the glorious Master, whose example we are required to follow, travelled from one synagogue to another preaching, His one great theme was "the gospel of the kingdom." Matt. iv. 23.

When passing at the sea-side, while multitudes resorted to Him, He framed parables of peerless beauty and instructiveness to illustrate "the word of the kingdom." Math. xiii. 19.

In reproving men for giving worldly affairs the chief place in their minds, He tells them to "seek rather the kingdom of God." Luke xii. 31.

To comfort the little flock lest they grow faint and wearied under various discouragements, He says, "Fear not little flock for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32.

His refusal to tarry longer in one city was because He was "sent to preach the kingdom of God to other cities also." Luke iv. 43.

And when He required one to neglect a parent's funeral it was that he might "go and preach the kingdom of God." Luke ix. 60.

In the sacred and solemn interviews with them, between His resurrection and ascension, He talks about "the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Acts i. 3.

And when He defines what doctrine they shall carry to the Gentiles, He says, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world." Matt. xxiv. 14.

That gospel in its fullness exhibits "the manifold wisdom of God," combining within itself, as our system of righteousness, the faith hope, and love that should control the thoughts, affections, and actions of men. Reader, behold the glorious Being, the sin-atoning Lamb, who so constantly preached that gospel in all His personal ministry. How infinitely did His life on earth excell every other in the world's history! Therefore, choose for your life's model and exemplar not Alexander, Napoleon, or Washington; not Cicero, Newton, or Webster; not Augustine, Hildebrand, or Leo XIII; not Fulton, Girard, or Stewart; not Calvin, Wesley, or Moody; but "let this mind be in you which was also in CHRIST," and seek diligently in preaching and practice to "follow His steps." Phil. ii. 5. 1 Peter ii. 21.

Naples, Ia.

"I Am Doing the Best I Can."

Doing the best you can? Are you sure? You, a worldling, living for pleasure and for gain? You, with not a thought for the morrow that is beyond the resurrection, you, with no effort put forth to win the eternal weight of glory! God has done all on his part that he can do to reach and save you. He has shown you the path of life. He has given you a Savior. He has set before you the crown and the kingdom and has put into your hands that gospel of the kingdom as the power of God whereby you are to be sanctified and saved. But you will not even open your ears to hear. You "are not going to bother your brains about it. Whether you are to be judged and saved again at the resurrection, does not matter, nor whether you enter upon your reward at death and are again rewarded at the second coming of Christ, it is all one to you. You do not care, when, nor where, whether on earth, or in heaven." "You know as much, and are living as near right as the most of people who belong to church, and if God is going to condemn you for the few things you have done wrong in your brief life, he will have to condemn you."

But, his command is that "you hear the word of the Lord," that you believe the gospel, that you do com mandments. If you would have eternal life, you must lay hold of it. God has opened the door, and you are to come and enter. If you will not come it is your own self that is to blame, if the condemnation rests upon you, you will not have the blood of Christ touch you, you will not have it upon the lintels of your doors, that the destroying angel may pass over you in the day when the wicked shall be cut [illegible] the churches—so far as your [illegible] light was granted, [illegible] Abings, and [illegible] have been [illegible] are doing wrong. God will not condemn you so much for the few things you have done wrong, as for what you have not done that is right. You must be in Christ to be saved. Are you doing anything for Christ? Anything to please God?

The French Communists are growing bolder every day. One of their organs, the Egalite, publishes the following paragraph: "At the request of a number of our readers, and in commemoration of the workmen's blood which was shed like water in April and May, 1871, the Egalite will continue to appear in red during the two months that the red flag of the Communs floated at the Hotel de Ville of Paris."

With respect to Dr. Schliemann's discoveries at Mycenæ, the Russian savant, M. Stephani, has expressed opinions which have attracted considerable attention in Germany. The learned academician by no means disputes the great antiquity of many of the individual objects ourthen by Dr. Schliemann, but he holds that the remains include objects belonging to very different eras of history. He is of opinion that the tombs originated with the barbarians who invaded Greece in the third century B. C., and made the citadel of Agamemnon one of the chief centres of their dominion. Here he believes they buried their chiefs, and decorated the tombs partly with such ancient relics of an earlier date as had fallen into their hands and partly with ornamental objects produced in their own times.

The railroad to the crater of Vesuvius is now completed. The depot is situated at a height of 810 metres, or 210 metres above the Observatory. A restaurant and cafe capable of accomodating 100 people is attached to the depot. The angle of inclination of this railroad attains at various points 40, 50, and 60 degrees. There are two passenger cars, the Vesuvius and Etna, accommodating 12 persons each. The system adopted in the construction of the railway is of American invention, and is known as "the prismatic system."

Do you wish to live without a trial. Then you wish to die but half a man—at the best but half a man. Without trial you cannot guess at your own strength. Men do not learn to swim on a table. They must go into the water and buffet the waves.

What the world needs is men of strong convictions, of a "rock-firm" faith in the truth of the gospel—faith, not of the head merely, arising from intellectual persuasion of the truth, which is often accompanied with indifference to its claims—but the faith of the heart, arising from a personal experience of the saving power of the gospel.

Some look out in weariness
From eyes that are aged and dim,
And their lives die into silence,
Like the close of a vesper hymn.
There is silver upon the temples,
And wrinkles upon the face,
And their days are like dying summer

Wakes thee to life again.

Here is a concise definition of Nihilism as given by one of its apostles: "Take the earth and heaven, church and state, take kings and Deity, and spit on them—that's our doctrine." That a philosophy of life, of society and of government, that can be thus horribly epitomized, should nevertheless have seized hold of so many minds, and especially of persons among the comparatively educated classes, as is the case at the present time in Russia, is a fact of which the students of the science of society—such as we all ought to be—may well seek earnestly to find the true explanation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King; "Times, and the immutable saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the re-union of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the literal constitution of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also opposes, in every belief of the Gospel, creatures and inventions as prerequisites to the inheritance of the, and a fit life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Jesus Tempted to Mistrust God.

Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered. And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Matt. iv. 1-4.

VERSE FIRST.

This verse starts with "then," meaning after that, and the reference is obviously to events recorded in the end of the preceding chapter. There are the baptism of our Lord, the descent on him of the Holy Ghost in the form of a dove, and the testimony from the eternal throne or his behalf—"This is my Son, in whom I am well pleased." A grand recognition, which may be looked upon as a public announcement of his official rank,—he being the long-expected Messiah, and as an invigorating intervention, at once visible and audible, in prospect of near trials, and others throughout his devoted services, ending with the cross on Calvary. "Then was he led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil," or adversary. This was the wilderness of Judea, a district of country situated along the Jordan and the Dead Sea, eastward of Jerusalem. It was a hilly, rugged, and sparsely settled place, where the soil was better suited for pasture than for the plough. Many a lonely and wild spot was hidden in its expanse, and towards some such desolate region we imagine our gentle Master to have been supernaturally conducted. His guide was the "Spirit." To such a spot, soon turned into battle ground, he went not of his own accord, it should be carefully observed. He was divinely influenced to leave his friends, and frequented paths, and to penetrate the waste where, perhaps, human foot had never trod, and the beasts of prey found a safe retreat. On he went, so impelled, conscious that he was in the path of duty. His staff was this—"a good man's steps are ordered of the Lord;" and with it as a firm support he proceeded reverently in his trackless journey. Whether a hint was given him as to his destination, whether any intimation was conveyed to him about an approaching trial of his faith, the record is silent on the matter. Perhaps there was none; we may venture to think there was none. His part was to maintain unquestioning trust—to be on his guard all the time, to watch and pray that he might not be surprised, exactly as it is incumbent on every child of the heavenly parent to be exercised while in a world where testing is the divine method, and a special means of spiritual discipline. The fact that we will, that we must, be proven, is revealed in the simplest words,—the experience of all in the elect household confirms the recorded purpose,—but the season when and the manner how the Lord retains in his own mind—wisely and mercifully does so. The sailor, navigating his vessel on the ocean, expects storms, and arranges for their advent; but at the commencement of his voyage he cannot say, on such a date a hurricane will blow, and on such another date we shall be driven again, at the peril of our lives, by the frantic winds. The servant of God is similarly ignorant of times and seasons when the enemy will put forth his malignant efforts; and, as a consequence, there is the more need for him to be ever anticipating the evil hour, with his loins girt and the weapons of defense close at hand.

As the Lord acts by instruments in putting his sons and servants to the proof, these are found in his wide domains in sufficient abundance without requiring any creation or direct production of agencies to accomplish his intents. Paltry affections, family, trade, business misfortunes and successes, the tongues and hands of wicked men, and the hidden devices of infernal powers are all at his service, and subject to his control. The malign agencies that act with intelligence, while gratifying their bad hearts are made subservient to his most holy purposes. The wrath of men, of Satan and his vile confederate crew, praises him. He extracts good out of their evil, and life out of their very poison. While his servants are under trial, in the furnace, to use a sacred figure, he looks on during the operation, for not one creature is there doing his work without his permission. They are feebler than microscopic insects when their strength is measured by his; and deep though their cunning may be, and tiger-like their ferocity, he wills and they are restrained—"hitherto shalt thou come, but no further." Therefore, let the weakest and the most perplexed remember the promise as the exposition of their Father's anxiety and watchfulness over their case,—"God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able to bear." He knows, in other words, how much you ought to be able to endure, and will not suffer you to be tested beyond that limit, why then should you not stand in the evil day, and doing all stand?

While, as we have already observed, the sublime baptismal witness seems to have been intended to strengthen the "Only Begotten" for approaching trials, it may also be conjectured, not without a show of warrant, that the experiences in the desert were ordained to moderate the pious joy and exaltation those tokens of favor and approval which had been communicated on his behalf were naturally fitted to produce. Such emotions could not fail to arise in his heart, and were, in truth, the appropriate response to the signal display of the infinite love for, and delight in his sinless character. When the angel spake the words to Daniel,—"thou art greatly beloved," could he hear them without being thrilled with a divine ecstasy? It was the music of heaven—a testimony such as mortal ear had rarely, if ever listened to. Could Messiah hear the judgment delivered by the Jordan, and not feel lifted to the highest heights of solemn gladness, and regard himself as clothed with a dignity which, up to that moment, he may have but imperfectly realized? The counteractive, as in Paul's case, soon came, lest he should be exalted above measure.—It soon came, for lo! thus early we see him led up by the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. He is there to be taught to join fear with his finest transports, to remember that he is a stranger on a rough road, with enemies, as it were, concealed in every thicket, and the whole way he must travel, and those enemies he must vanquish, before he reaches the crown and the gem-built city, where pleasures are the conqueror's inheritance forevermore.

Of a similar experience many a saint, like the apostle of the Gentiles, can tell. There is a time of spiritual elevation,—some striking answer to prayer—some poor sinner won to God through a consciously feeble and unworthy instrumentality—some bright glimpses of the Savior's condescending love and the kingdom glories, and earth for the moment is transformed into heaven, and the heart lies bathed in tears of gratitude and joy. But, my brother, you are still in the enemy's land. An evil eye has been watching your supernal gladness, and it will likely happen before you are aware, that the lights grow dim, an awful feeling of desolation creeps over your consciousness—already you are tempted of the evil one! Be humble, and vigilant as a sentinel on duty. Forewarned,—fear not! Your Lord passed through like changes, and his love and sympathy will make you strong.

VERSE SECOND.

In fasting, one abstains from food, and in this case the abstinence extended over "forty days and forty nights" continuously. True the fasting was really what the word properly imports becomes ever more certain from Luke's narrative, where it is written, "in those days he did eat nothing." Chap iv. 2. It was a long period of abstinence, yet not unexampled, for Moses fasted during an equal number of days on the Mount (Exod. xxxiv. 28,) and Elijah, after eating the cake and drinking from the cruse of water provided by the angel, "went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb, the mount of God." 1 Kings xix. 8

Our Lord, like the two prophets just named, being in the path of duty when he took up his temporary abode in the wilderness away from all ordinary supplies, we may rest in confidence that his heavenly Father would uphold the vigor of his frame, and ward off death, by any exercise of his power that the condition of the world's Savior required, just as he had sustained the leader of his ancient people on the cloud-enveloped peaks, and him who was the terror of Ahab and the antagonist of idolatry, when acting in obedience to his commands. There we may leave the matter, and adore the Supreme goodness. But never let it be forgotten that obeying his will alone secures supernatural interposition. Without that element,—that is to say, without a distinct intimation of his will, penetrating into a scene where food is in all human calculation not to be obtained, could only be characterized as sporting with providence—tempting God. A man going into the interior of a wilderness, or sailing away from shore without provisions, in expectation of being miraculously supported, would soon discover how foolish and sinful was the course he had chosen. When, however, one proceeds by divine sanction on a journey where danger from want, to speak of no other peril, is sure to encounter him at an early hour, he may safely leave himself in God's hands, for in some manner—and who shall set bounds to the resources of the Almighty?—the lives of life will be kept burning. It was so in Elijah's case; so likewise in the case of Messiah. A command however extraordinary and mysterious from one whose name is Love, involves a pledge that every thing needed for its execution will be supplied in due season.

Had this passage in the history of Jesus Christ been described by the first evangelist only, we might have supposed that the long fast, without any attending sense of hunger, was designed to be an interval of abstracted meditation, self-communion, and hallowed prayer in view of temptations at its close; but Luke corrects such a mistake, and shows us the Redeemer had been visited with assailing enticements during the whole fasting days, and not exclusively at their termination, as from Matthew we might have been led to infer. Luke has this (chap. iv. 2): "Being forty days tempted of the devil." As every one may notice, no definite mention is made of the severe and accumulating attacks day after day on his character and status as the beloved of heaven. They may have been of a nature not quite suitable for detailment in our hearing, and therefore silence hangs over the whole period and its transactions. Sadness, therefore, more becomes us than profitless imaginings. Our best friend was then in the depths of strange and agonizing experience—encompassed possibly by enchantments and seductive attractions which every pure mind must repel; and we may ascribe glory to God that he was able to defy the last art employed to blur his virtue, and spoil our hopes.

The protracted season over, hunger is permitted to make its intelligible appeal, in order that a trial we can better comprehend, and which we will be edified by considering, may be introduced. "When he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered." Yes, hungered, and growing feeble in the barren solitude. No mother, no friend, no good Samaritan was near him, but in a true and sublime sense he was not alone, for power, loving and limitless, had carried him along the forty days of fasting, and can he be forsaken now? The past had a voice of soothing, when nature set free, was demanding her own. We shall mark well how he endures actual pain—pain, too, when there is not an atom of nourishment to appease the cravings of want.

Think of it, the Son of God "an hungered!" How near he came at that moment to all the poor and needy in his Father's family! With their affliction he was afflicted; of every pang that rends the tenderest sensibilities he had his portion. Hunger is hard to bear,—hunger in a world where the ravens are fed, and the wild beasts have their meat as the morning looks over the eastern hills. Hunger! and, my brother, you may feel it now, so you can enter into the Savior's trial, though you may not be literally in the waste. You may know that there is plenty almost within the call of your voice in the homesteads that dot the landscape wherever you dwell; in your humble abode you may listen to the buzz of a great city, where wealth is near, and kind hearts too, that were they acquainted with your distress, would run for your aid. In the midst of this superfluity and benevolence you are hungry; and what, humanly speaking, is sorer still, you are, it may be, prostrate in weakness, and the mother of your children is wearied tending on you night and day, and the little store in reserve for an hour of need is gone, and voices dear to you look ask for bread, and ask for it in vain! Now the enemy, as in an audible tone, mocks you in your extremity—"You, a child of God!—fatherly treatment this indeed! You cry to him, is this the response? When you were a boy would your parent have left you in pain and want thus unanswered—unrelieved?"

In a crisis such as the one that has overtaken you, it is your privilege, my afflicted friend, to exclaim with the Man of Sorrows, for his bearing and endurance must be so interpreted—"They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion which cannot be removed, but abideth forever,"—"Thou will keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee."

Sir, We Would see Jesus. John xii. 21.

First—we would see Jesus because he is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely; the first in God's mind and purpose, for, or on account of whom he made the world and arranged the ages; hence his declaration, before Abraham was I am. We would see him (or consider) him as the child born and the Son given. The man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He who was rich but for our sakes became poor; the wonderful, the counsellor, the great, the mighty Lord from heaven: upon whose shoulders the government is to be; who is to be King over all the earth. We would see Jesus as the Redeemer of a lost and ruined world, and of the race of men that inhabit it, as the great Restorer of all things spoken of by the mouth of all God's holy prophets since the world began, as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, who endured the cross and the grave; as the seed of the woman who is to bruise the serpent's head; who arose triumphant a Mighty Conqueror over the powers of darkness, who led a multitude of captives and gave gifts unto men, we would see him as our Prophet, Priest and King, who was dead, is alive, and lives forevermore, who has the keys of hades? Who openeth and no man shutteth; as the angel that comes down from heaven with a chain in his hand, who lays hold of that old serpent the devil, and casts him down into the bottomless pit and sets a seal upon him that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled. We would see Jesus as the root of the offspring of David; the bright and the morning star, the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the great Hereafter who is to reward every man as his work shall be, and that reward is an unending or eternal life in God's everlasting kingdom, world without end, Amen and Amen.

Surely the above contains quotations or citations enough, why the servants of Jesus should desire to see him come in power and great glory. Let us look upon the dark side of the picture, and note some of the reasons to the negative, that not only the servants of God, but the race should desire to see Jesus.

Let us date from the year '30, go back just about 1,900 years to the commencement: In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. this is the account given in the first of Genesis, this is all-sufficient for faith and for our purpose, it honors God and harmonizes his holy word, and that is the height of our ambition. God the Eternal One is the great Architect, designer, or first cause of all things. The Elohim, the angels, the holy ones, are the executors of his holy will and purpose. At the, or in the beginning the materials that compose our world called the planet earth, were brought together and arranged and set in order; how long they were in course of formation or construction we have no means of knowing, it is not necessary for us to know, but it is absolutely imperative for us to believe what God has written or said, for without faith it is impossible to please God. We accept and believe the Bible statement as given by Moses to be strictly true. God the Eternal One originated all worlds' suns and systems, ours among them. The angels his messengers; executed his command and thus all things that compose our world were brought together and placed in order, all governed by exact law, each filled its proper place; no friction, the machinery worked to a charm, so perfect, so complete, that God pronounced it very good, yea so good that God when he had drawn his servant Job into a strait place. Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind and said, who is this that darkeneth council by words without knowledge. Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measure thereof? if thou knowest, or who hath stretched the line upon it? When the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy? Or who shut the sea with doors, when it breaks forth, as if it had issued out of the womb? when I made the cloud the garment thereof and thick darkness a swaddling for it, and brake up for my decreed places and set bars and doors, and said hitherto shalt thou come, but no further, and here shalt thy proud waves be stayed. Hast thou commanded the morning since thy days; and caused the day spring to know his place. That it might take hold of the ends of the earth, that the wicked might be shaken out of it. It is turned as clay to the seal and they stand as a garment. Job xxxviii. 1, 14.

After the testimony contained in the foregoing, and much more to the same point who will dare to affirm that earth and all things pertaining to it, was not good, yea superlative good; when it came from the hand of him who is the full embodiment of good; of unmixed and eternal truth; all that is, that is just, holy, lovely, merciful, kind, and true, go to make up the attributes of the God of the Bible. This was the condition that Adam found the world in when he took the helm or reins of government, all was peace, all was harmony, no friction, not a jarring element, no hard servitude, he was given the garden of Eden, a beautiful pleasure ground to cultivate or till, to eat the fruit thereof, with one exception; from that he was restrained by the law of his Creator, the penalty of which is death, the most fearful, the most stern and inflexible, and as positive as the throne of him who gave the law, to affirm that Adam could not have kept the law is to impeach the character of the Deity. The scene is changed, from the holy, the pure, the lovely and the beautiful, to the very opposite.

NEWELL BOND.

If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?—Job xiv. 14.

The word "if" implies doubt, or uncertainty; there are two points in the sentence. Is there doubt with regard to the first? To ask this question is to answer in the negative. We all should receive such a question as an insult to common sense, were it to be asked seriously and in earnest, whether a man will die or not.

Without a revelation, man would be in doubt in regard to the latter, or rather, he could have no such an idea at all. Science could afford him no aid. It is the exclusive province of revelation to unfold his futurity—his destiny. With out this aid, or the Gospel, which "brought life and immortality to light," the only conclusion to which he could arrive, would be, that "death is an eternal sleep." Life is a phenomenon which no finite mind can begin to comprehend. Here the infidel is stranded, here with all his inventive genius, (which I would by no means undervalue), he cannot produce life. The chemist can analyze any given substance, and ascertain its component parts; for instance, let him take wheat and separate it into its several parts; but he cannot take these several constituents and produce wheat; this is the exclusive work of infinite wisdom to construct, to create.

Take a benighted Pagan, who has been shut out from the light of the glorious Gospel, until he has arrived at the age of seventy, and then let him be taught that Jesus Christ is invested with power to raise the dead, and that he has promised to do it, on condition of his belief in, and obedience to the same person, by being baptized into the name of the Anointed; and he would readily embrace the doctrine, if he had not been spelled by "vain philosophy" or the dogma of inherent immortality. Although this dogma is of heathen origin, yet it has been greatly amplified by the Romish church. Purgatory, invocation of the saints, spiritual manifestations, etc., are the legitimate outgrowth of inherent immortality; take away this, and soon the whole system of Catholicism, and modern spiritualism would collapse, and like the baseless fabric of a vision, leave not a wreck behind. This short, but comprehensive sentence, (the text) when analyzed, is a complete refutation of the dual nature of man, i. e., body and an immortal soul, or deathless spirit. Our orthodox friends (self-styled) are often horrified at the idea of the unconsciousness of the dead.

Life and consciousness, if they are not synonomous terms, are inseparably connected. Consciousness, without life, would be a misdemeanor; hence, it is not life itself, it is an inherent attribute of it, and without it life would be a myth. Hence, it would be preposterous to even suppose that Job (if he had not demented) would ask the question, if a man die, shall he live again? on the hypothesis, that consciousness was still retained, or remained intact? If the doctrine, or rather dogma, of inherent immortality is true, there can be no such thing as death, for immortality signifies deathlessness. I know that our friends often tell us, the body dies, but the soul (the man proper) never dies. In the language of the poet, "The soul immortal as its sire shall never die."

This is the language of the old Serpent to Mother Eve, "Ye shall not surely die; ye shall be as God's, knowing good and evil." But God said by the prophet Ezekiel, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. xviii, 4.

To live again, presupposes that man once lived, then ceased to live, and now the great question: if a man die, (cease to live) shall he live again? Again signifies repetition, and not continued life, or in other words, immortality out of, or independent of Christ the Life Giver.

And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. John vi. 40. Hence, everlasting life, or immortality is conditional on believing on the Son of God, and obedience to his commandments.

All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come, said Job, and where will you wait?

If I wait, the grave is my house, I have made my bed in darkness.

I have said to corruption, thou art my father; and to the worm thou art my mother and my sister.

And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?

They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust. Job xvii. 13-16.

Job's testimony is in perfect harmony with Solomon's. See Eccl. ix. 4-6.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APR. 23, 1880.

SEVERAL communications, — concerning which the writers enquire,— have come to hand. Some have been deferred on account of their great length, and others because our readers had become tired of a long-drawn-out discussion.

We had the pleasure of once more greeting Brother and Sister Corbaley on Saturday last, who had just arrived from California. Bro. Corbaley expects to remain in Indiana some three or four months, should he be favored with health; and he will have opportunity to visit the churches and brethren generally in Northern Indiana. We hope our friends will avail themselves of his labors and remember his expenses.

DESTRUCTIVE cyclones have swept through parts of Illinois and Mississippi. Some persons were killed and many injured. Much damage was done to buildings, orchards and crops. Such tornadoes so often repeated, show quite an unbalanced state of the atmosphere. It is said that the bodies of the dead and injured in last Saturday's storm were terribly begrimed with sand and mud. The faces and limbs of the sufferers were scarified as if they had been exposed to a sand-blast.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Objections Answered.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

I will now quote the whole text which the M. E. exhorter, whom I reviewed, garbled. Paul says, "According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that in all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether by life or by death." Phil. i. 20. Mark, it is not Paul but Christ, who will be magnified in Paul's life or death. "For (he continues) to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain" to Christ, for he had just said that Christ would be magnified in his body. "But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I wot not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you." Verses 21 24.

1. Paul's life or death would magnify Christ, and be gain to Christ, not to Paul.

2. He was in a strait between life and death, but did not know which to choose.

3. There was a third thing which he greatly preferred to either life or death, and concerning which he was in no strait.

That was an ardent desire to depart and be with Christ; not by death, because he could not decide which he would choose, life or death, but he desired to be translated as Enoch and Elijah had been. Mark, it was the man Paul (who could either live or die) who desired to depart and be with Christ, or to remain with his brethren, for their furtherance and joy and faith. He also affirmed that the soul of the thief was with Christ in Paradise that day. "And Jesus said unto him, verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Luke xxiii. 43. This thief does not request that his soul may be remembered. He says, "Lord remember me." The pronoun me represents the man who was hanging on the cross. Christ does not promise that his soul or spirit shall be with him in Paradise, but "I say unto thee thou shalt be with me." The "thou" and "me" stand for Christ and the thief. At the evening or the commencement of the next day the soldiers obtained permission of Pilate to break the bones of the malefactors to prevent their escape on the Sabbath day. They found the two thieves alive. The breaking their bones would not kill them. It would only prevent their getting down and running away.

Now, if the thief was with Christ that day, he left his body alive on the tree. That thief did not ask to be remembered that day, but when Christ should come in his kingdom. Verse 42. Christ assured him that day, or at that time, that his prayer should be answered—that he should be with him in Paradise. There was no Paradise in existence at that time. The one that God had planted had long since been destroyed. It was located east of Eden, and was the beautiful home of Adam and Eve. It was the culmination of earth's glory. When restored, it will be within the New Jerusalem, which will be the metropolitan city of the world. See Rev. xxi. and xxii. The kings and nations of earth bring their glory and honor to that city. Rev. xxi. 24. It will, therefore, be where the kings and nations of earth can have access to it. The tree of life was originally in the midst of Paradise. Gen. ii. 9. It will be in the midst of Paradise again when it is restored. Rev. ii. 7. The obedient in the future age will enter through the gates of the city, and have right to the tree of life. Rev. ii. 14. The throne of Christ will be in that city, "and his servants shall serve him, and they shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xxii. 3, 5. When the whole royal family shall be assembled in the citadel of that universal empire, the penitent thief will be there, for Christ, having come into his kingdom, will have remembered him. He, with all the redeemed, will have access to the tree of life which will be in the midst of Paradise. But, it is claimed, that Paradise cannot be on earth from the fact that Paul was caught up to Paradise which is the third heaven. 2 Cor. xii. 1-4. Please observe.—

1. That the word up is not in the original text. The word to does not signify up or down, but simply motion from or toward a place. It is just as proper to say that he was snatched away to Paradise.

2. The apostle did not endorse the popular idea of a three storied heaven, the third being located far above the starry realm.

Peter represents three successive heavens. First, he speaks of the old heavens before the flood. 2 Peter iii. 5. Second, "the heavens which now are," we contrast with the heavens which then were. Verse 7. "Nevertheless (he says) we, according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Verse 13. Each of these successive heavens, the third being the "new heavens," is associated with the earth, thus teaching, conclusively, that the third heaven is not away from earth. Paul saw in vision the new heavens and earth with Paradise restored, the same as John saw them, and so graphically described them in Rev. xxi. So life-like was this vision that, at that time, he did not know whether it was a reality or a vision.

The Kingdom of God.

BY O. M. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S TENTH QUESTION.

1. We read in Matt. xvi. 19 that Jesus gave the keys of the kingdom of heaven to Peter, and said unto him whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

2. We read in Matt. xviii. 18 that this power of binding and loosing was given to all the apostles.

3. We read in John xx. 22, 23 that, as a qualification to prepare them for this work, they were to receive the Holy Spirit. Therefore, as this spirit was given upon the day of Pentecost, was not the kingdom organized that day? and did not Peter then and there open the doors of that kingdom for persons to enter?

REPLY.

1. "When the Jews made a man a doctor of the law, they put into his hand the key of the closet in the temple, where the sacred books were kept, and also tablets to write upon, signifying by this that they gave him authority to teach and to explain the Scriptures to the people."—Martin in Loco.

But to the Apostle Peter, of course, there was by the Savior no literal key delivered, but only the authority given to first proclaim these terms to the world. And beyond the right to make this first speech upon the day of Pentecost, his pre-eminence over the other apostles did not extend as the texts you cite in your question unmistakably show.

2. We are not to infer from this authority delivered to the Apostle Peter and exercised upon the day of Pentecost, that terms of admission into the kingdom were never proclaimed and complied with before this. But to the contrary we read in Matt. viii. 11, 12, that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will sit down in the kingdom of heaven. Therefore we are to conclude that they received and complied with the terms —given in their day—by which they will enter into the kingdom. Then also others in preceding and subsequent ages likewise.

From this, then, there are two conclusions which inevitably arise:

1. That there was about to be a change made in the terms for admission into the kingdom of heaven, and that Peter was to be the first to proclaim the terms when this change came.

2. That as terms had been delivered and complied with in past ages by many by which they were to gain an entrance into a kingdom not then organized, so the possibility of such a case again in Peter's day. Therefore the proclamation of the terms and a compliance with them upon the day of Pentecost will no more argue a then existent kingdom, than a proclamation of terms and a compliance with them would in the days of the antediluvian, Patriarchal or law period.

We might now stop and consider your question answered, and all of its claims as to a then existent kingdom, removed; but will offer some additional thoughts upon the case and look at possibilities.

With all of the facts before us, here we have the right man, with the right qualifications, at the right place, and upon the right occasion arising to deliver his message which, in its parts, parcels, and entirety is to serve as a law of induction into the kingdom of heaven. With this important work before us which is grand, beyond the importance of the inaugural of any earthly potentate, what do we hear?

1. The discourse, Acts ii. 14-36, and evidently with manifested in the discourse as seen in verse 37.

2. Repentance.

3. Baptism.

4. "And with many other words did he testify and exhort them, saying, save yourselves from this untoward generation." Verse 40.

Now, with Nos. 1, 2, 3, faith, repentance, and baptism, as terms of admission into the kingdom there is no trouble or disagreement. But of No. 4 we must consider and enquire as to what there is in it. Evidently more is to be found in it than simply the expression in so many words—"Save yourselves from this untoward generation;" for was only this in it Luke would not have recorded, "With many other words did he testify." Our claim, then, is, that there are some things as terms in verse 40 which are not specifically opened up. Of course those hearing the exhortation would get them specifically, but one simply reading Luke's record would not. Now, to develop and bring these points out fully,—

1. Peter did his work upon that occasion complete; or

2. He did it incomplete—which last is hardly supposable. Then, if he did his work complete, and we find more terms given specifically elsewhere for admission into the kingdom than are contained in Nos. 1, 2, 3, as above, then they must be contained in the exhortation of No. 4. We do find more terms given than are contained in Nos. 1, 2, 3. See Acts xiv. 22; 2 Peter i. 5-11. Therefore Peter must, if he did his work complete, have delivered these specifications under No. 4. No way of escape from the conclusion possible. Since then these specifications for admission into the kingdom which were delivered under No. 4, of their nature could not be complied with in one day, but require a whole life of work to consummate them, then it follows beyond the possibility of a doubt that those parties to whom Peter then talked were not that day inducted into the kingdom. Then likewise with all others.

To this demonstration which seems to me to be as clear as any mathematical problem there can be but one objection raised, viz.: That, in Matt. xvi. 19, we have the term "kingdom of God," and in 2 Peter i. 5-11, we have the term "Everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." That the kingdom of heaven may be now and the others hereafter. That we may have terms of admission into the one now, and then further terms of admission into the other. But to this play upon the phrases pertaining to the kingdom I invite your attention to your first question and the reply there made.

A Sign of the Times.

A. B. MACRUDER.

WASHINGTON, April 14, 1880.

A bill was introduced in the house of representatives on Monday by Delegate Downing, of Wyoming, to expend $500,000 for pictures to be placed on the walls of the capitol to commemorate the birth, life and death of our Savior Jesus Christ as told in the gospels of the four prophets.

The above announcement will serve to remind some of the proverb, "Better late than never." It is certainly late in the day for the wise and prudent of our Gentile age just now to bethink themselves of signalizing, in the manner proposed, their appreciation of the "birth, life and death of our Savior Jesus Christ." So long ignored or forgotten and sedulously excluded from any mention of his name in the Declaration of Independence or in the Constitution of the United States, the tardy acknowledgment, now proposed, seems indeed to be the homage which vice pays to virtue, not voluntary but extorted.

Others will think the proposition had been as well let alone. The least now said the better. Such pictures on the walls of the capitol "would appear in strange contrast with its follower—the signing of the Declaration —the surrender of Cornwallis—Washington resigning his sword—and the shamefully false representation of what is absurdly styled, the "baptism of Pocohontas," a kneeling female receiving on her bowed head, a drop or two of water from the hands of a cowled priest, standing beside a miniature font—an act, if ever performed in open contempt of the authority and the example of our Savior and a spectacle, fit only to commemorate the folly and illiteracy of the "Ruler of this world" but woefully humiliating to every citizen, however humble, who is instructed in the first principles of Christian faith and practice. But why commemorate only "the birth, life and death" of Christ? of what avail and value to our race, and these without the doctrine he taught—the promises he uttered—the wisdom of his words and the grandeur of his works, in his triumphant resurrection, his ascension to his Father's right hand and his glorious coming again to establish his all-powerful kingdom and reign over all nations until he has put down all rule and authority under his feet. Doubtless the U. S. Congress does not know and would not believe this part of the programme of "the four prophets" and hence it would best become them not to attempt the play of Hamlet, with the part of the Prince of Denmark left out.

"Happy is he who condemns not himself in that which he alloweth."

What are We Coming To?

It would almost appear to the careful observer, as he sends his thoughts abroad over our own country, and the nations of Europe and the world, that the times of tribulation spoken of in the Scriptura (Matt. xxiv. 1, 28,) as anunciatory of the latter days, had already come. The foundations of industry, order and prosperity, seems to be tottering. Governments are corrupted, people rebellious, enterprise paralyzed, trade and commerce languishing, and individuals bankrupt. Suffering and distress prevail everywhere to a most unusual degree.

Wars and rumors of wars, famines, pestilences and earthquakes in divers places, increasing wickedness, and heart-sickening casualities, and crimes startle the community, and large multitudes exclaim: "What are we coming to?" The answers seems plain. The world is hastening to its destiny. Prophecy is fulfilling. history completing. The kingdoms of this world are being disorganized that they may become the kingdoms of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. The nations are filling up the cup of their iniquities, which shall turn in their hands into the cup of the Lord's fury. Leaders of false religions are binding upon their followers heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, which are destined to be thrown back with crushing weight upon their own heads. Communities are laying up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God," and individuals sinning with a high hand against knowledge and love, are provoking the Almighty to a just retribution.

Let the Lord's people be awake, zealous and active for the Master, vigilant and uncompromising against evil, waiting for his appearing, by the brightness of whose coming the man of sin is to be finally destroyed. Oh! let us be ready to meet the Lord. Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. Mark xiii. 33.

The Son of man cometh in just such an hour as ye think not. The time is near. Brethren, the grace of our Lord be with you all. Amen.

A BATTLE.

CABUL, April 23.—General Stewart entered Ghuzni Tuesday, after the battle of Monday, in which the Afghans lost more than a thousand men killed. General Stewart's loss is seventeen men killed and 115 wounded.

General Stewart, while marching twenty-five miles south of Ghuzni, encountered about 15,000 Afghans, and while he was preparing to attack them 3,000 of the enemy's horse rushed upon both flanks of his line. After one hour's desperate fighting the enemy was beaten, and the whole body dispersed over the country.

STARVING CHRISTIANS.

LONDON, April 24.—The Christian Committee at Bagdad telegraphs that a terrible famine is raging throughout Mesopotamia and Kurdistan. Immense masses of starving Christians are crawling hither for relief. Our resources are totally inadequate to meet their necessities. A public meeting will be held at the mission house in a few days.

NEW YORK, April 24.—A dispatch from Havana says that a column of marines came upon a band of insurgents strongly intrenched in the mountains in Guantanamo, and in the fight following the Spanish officer was killed and six soldiers wounded. The Spaniards rested on the battle-field, and next morning resumed their march; but the insurgents, under cover of the mountains, surrounded the Spaniards, penning them in the wood forty hours without food or water. The Spaniards got through the lines and gave information of the desperate situation of the detachment. A relief column was dispatched, and the insurgents fled, carrying away their wounded but leaving seventeen dead.

QUINCY, Ill., April 24.—A cyclone struck the north part of this (Adams) county last evening, doing great damage along the line. It went from west to east. As far as heard from some twenty houses and barns were demolished. Several persons are reported killed and wounded, but their names have not yet been learned.

It is estimated that forest fires in New Jersey have burned over 600 square miles of territory, destroying a number of valuable houses. The damage to the cranberry bogs alone is placed at $20,000. Two or three persons have lost their lives in the Virginia forest fires.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Of two evils we must choose the less, but of two sins we must choose neither.

The final day will hasten on—
The hour we shall know.

When happy seasons end, and leave us sad, it is soothing to reflect that sadness will have an end also; that as the sunshine has given place to the shadow, so the shadow will be succeeded by the sunshine again. Joy is sown for the righteous, and "gladness for the upright in heart."

A little while to labor,
A little while to wait
A time to bear the burden
Outside the dear home-gate;
A little more of fighting,
A little more of loss,
Of toiling, yet pursuing,
Beneath the heavy cross,
And then the toil is over,
And then the rest is near,
And God's good land with its happy band
Shines soft and clear.

THE GREATEST JOY OF LIFE.

Unless I make religion my great and engrossing concern, I shall be a stranger to all solid peace and enjoyment. I have at times caught a glimpse of the comfort which it yields to the spirit, when I merge my will into God's will—when I resolve to have no will of my own separate from God. I feel quite assured that this renunciation of self, and entire devotion to God's service, would give a simplicity and grandeur to my existence—would throw an unclouded sunshine over all my ways—would raise me above the cares and provocations of this life—would enhance even my sensible gratifications and superadd those gratifications of a higher order, which constitutes the main and essential blessedness of heaven. O my God, may it be thus with me! Call me out of nature's darkness into thine own marvellous light. Give me to aspire after the graces and hold forth to my acquaintances, and, above all, to my children, the example of all righteousness. Conform me to the gospel economy under which I sit—that as Christ died for my sin, I may die to it—that as he rose again, I may rise to a newness of of life, and feel it my meat and drink to do thy will.—Chalmers.

HUMBOLDT'S DESPAIR.

Alexander Humboldt says in his posthumous memoirs: "I was not born in order to be the father of a family. I regard marriage as a sin, the propagation of children a crime. It is my conviction that he is a fool, and still more a sinner, who takes upon himself the yoke of marriage—a fool because he thereby throws away his freedom, without gaining a corresponding recompense; a sinner because he gives life to children without being able to give them the certainty of happiness. I despise humanity in all its strata. I foresee that our posterity will be far more unhappy than we are; and I should not be a sinner if, in spite of this insight, I should take care to leave a posterity of unhappy beings behind me? The whole of life is the greatest insanity, and if for eighty years one strives and inquires, one is still obliged finally to confess that he has striven for nothing and found out nothing. Did we at least only know why we are in this world! But to the thinker everything is and remains a riddle, and the greatest good luck is that of being born a blockhead." So much for discarding the Bible.

A VICTIM OF ATHEISM.

This conviction is the natural consequence, even for the largest intellect, of having lived for eighty years in the world without any belief in the being of a God, and without any nobler purpose than that of self-aggrandizement. Without any higher purpose than to gratify curiosity, to know why we live in this world, though it be dignified with the sounding name of advancement of knowledge, life would be destitute of either dignity, grace or importance.

Meeting of the Cabinet.

LONDON, April 14.—The Cabinet met to-day for the first time since the dissolution. The members were all present, and their mutual greetings before the session were made up of condolence on their defeat and congratulations on their approaching release from the responsibility of power. Earl Beaconsfield is reported to have said he rejoiced at the prospect of spending the remaining years of his life in the cool shade of opposition. It is believed that this will be the last meeting of the present Cabinet, and that at the meeting to-day arrangements were made for presenting the resignations of Ministers to the Queen immediately on her return to England. The personal belongings of several Ministers are now being removed from their official residences in the foreign office, home office and other offices, and this is is held to be a confirmation of the report that Earl Beaconsfield intends to resign on Friday.

The situation of Turkey is deplorable, and the latest accounts make it seem worse than before. Affairs there seem to have reached a point beyond which there is seemingly chaos, if it were not for the fact that the so-called government of the Sultan appears to be able to survive bankruptcy, an unpaid army, and the refusal of supplies, even to the palace, unless paid for in cash. It is clear, nevertheless, that the day is not far distant when it will be necessary to appoint an administrator for "the sick man's inheritance," and as that must be a general European question, it will require some very strong coalition to settle without a struggle who the administrator shall be.

In the island of New Hebrides, in the Southern Ocean, three thousand seven hundred pounds of arrowroot were shipped recently for London by the native Christians who have been gathered in by the gospel within the last thirty years. Their offering is to make payment for an edition of the Old Testament, as it is now being issued in their language. Silver and gold they have not, but what they have they freely give.

Mr. Edson L. Clark, in his new work on The Races of European Turkey, says that gypsies are really an offshoot from the Hindoos, being simply a wandering tribe from the valley of the Indus. Their language is a branch of the ancient Sanskrit, akin to the modern dialects of Northern India. A modern Hindoo would probably make himself understood to any tribe of gypsies in Europe.

POETRY.

The Story of a Life.

[Without the Christian's shield of faith and anchor of hope, how justly and pointedly true is the subjoined poetical picture of the vanity of human life? What wise man will covet such a fate?] A. S. M.

A child in a nursery crying—a boy in a cricket field "out!"
A youth for a pharmacy sighing—a man with a fit of the gout—
A heart filled up and harrowed—a look repeated in vain—
A field plowed deep and harrowed, but tares and barren of grain.
Some sense of pleasure wasted, of counsel misunderstood,
Of pleasure bitter when tasted, and pain that did him no good.
Some stanks of sentiment polished, some flashes of gentle zeal—
A torrent of false love cherished, a ripple of true love cooled.
Some feeble breeding of trouble, to glide again with the stream;
In principle void as a bubble in purpose vague as a dream;
A future hope half-hearted, for aims the future now.
That the triple cord is parted, and death is damp on the brow.
And the debt to pay by the doctor—a doctor, a lawyer, a nurse;
A feeling he should have been better, a doubt if he could have been worse;
While the ghostly finger traces its ghostly message of doom,
And a troop of ghostly faces passed on in a darkened room;
With ghostly shapes to beckon, and ghostly voices to call,
And the grim recorder to reckon, and add the total of all,
A sum of life expended—a part in the rough cast—
A comedy played and ended—and what has it come to at last?
The dead man propped on a pillow—the journey taken alone—
The tomb with an urn and a willow, and a life carved deep in the stone!

SELECTIONS.

THE BURMESE HORROR.

The Story of a Second Nero.

Later dispatches by way of London bring the news that the 700 human beings sacrificed by King Theebau at the Burmese capital to propitiate evil spirits were not burned to death, but were buried alive. The full depth of this horror probably will not be fathomed until English correspondents reach Mandalay, but it is now known that 700 men, boys, women, girls, priests and foreigners have been entombed under the towers of the city walls. A Rangoon correspondent of the London Daily News gives the following explanation of the massacres: "When a city is built in Burmah human sacrifices are offered up. A new monarch usually has a new capital. The evil spirits are irritated that there has been no change of capital, and the virtue of the old sacrifice being gone, to appease them the astrologers declared it was necessary to offer up seven hundred lives. The sacrifices were made by the order of King Theebau." This tremendous outburst of fanaticism has caused a terrible panic, not only in Mandalay, but throughout Burmah, and, as previous dispatches noted, hundreds are seeking safety in flight.

The scene of this extraordinary outrage is a country of Farther India, whose position on the map every schoolboy remembers, but which is not at all familiar to American newspaper readers. Burmah lies just north of Siam, and is bounded on the east by China and on the west by British India, both the British and the Chinese having materially reduced the area which the Empire occupied in the days of its greatest prosperity.

It is a fertile country, and especially rich in metals and in gems. The inhabitants, whose number is estimated at about four millions, are Mongolians, with a monosyllable language, a quiet, industrious and not uncultivated race, very skillful in ship-building, in carving and working in metals. Most of them profess the religion of Buddha, to which a great number of temples and pagodas are dedicated, and in connection with which there exists an elaborate monastic system, with a multitude of monks. The government of the country, as may be inferred from the recent performances, is an absolute despotism of the worst Oriental type. The late King, Mindone Min, was a villainous old scoundrel with half a hundred wives and more than a hundred children, who was supposed to have done a good thing for his country—which he had never been accused of doing before—when he died, some time in 1878. The exact date of his death cannot be given, from the fact that a cheerful edict had been issued to the effect that whoever said the King was dead should have his tongue cut out, and the courtiers were naturally a little modest about making the announcement. He did die, however, and the Ministry in Burmah, thought they saw an opportunity to introduce a constitutional monarchy. With this end in view they selected one of the King's younger sons, a likely youth, called Theebau, and in the King's name issued a proclamation declaring him Ain Shay Min, or Dweller in the Eastern House, a title equivalent to heir apparent. Having got thus far, they presently mustered courage to announce that Mindone Min was dead and to proclaim Theebau Thatira-maha-opamma-raza, otherwise His Most glorious Excellent Majesty, Lord of the Ishaddan, King of Elephants, Master of Many White Elephants, Lord of the Mines of Gold, Silver, Rubies, Amber and the Noble Serpenthe, Sovereign of the Empires of Thunaparanta and Tampadipa, and other Great Empires and Countries, and of all the Umbrella-wearing Chiefs, the Supporter of Religion the Sun-descended Monarch Arbiter of Life, the Great Righteous King, King of Kings, and Professor of Boundless Dominions and Supreme Wisdom.

THEEBAU'S ACCESSION.

Theebau was at this time about twenty years old. He is described as a tall, well-built, comely young fellow, with smooth olive complexion, a good forehead over bright black eyes, a firm but pleasant mouth, a full, sensual chin and "a will all his own." Of this last quality the King soon gave unmistakable proof. To begin with, the reforming Ministers who had advanced him to the throne were shut up in prison and the King formed a Ministry of his own, composed mainly of youths of his own age, who had a right royal time in the palace, which became, as it is described, the scene of orgies conducted absolutely without restraint. Recognizing, however that he had no title to the throne, Theebau proceeded to get rid of possible rivals by the simple plan of killing all his relatives. There were a great many of them, for his father had left thirty-seven of his wives and fifty-nine of his children living, and their massacre, a year or two ago, attracted the attention of the whole world, and was the occasion of some ineffectual diplomatic "representations" on the part of Great Britain. The descriptions given of this bloodthirsty performance are most revolting. At first the victims were led from their cells in twos and threes to shekko to the King; then their heads were tied to their respective pairs of ankles, and blows with a heavy club on the backs of their necks ended their misery. But this soon proved too mild a spectacle for the fiendish malignity of Theebau. One of his elder brothers professed utter scorn for what could be done to him, and was dragged to death. Another, who had looked upon the foreigners as the dirt beneath his feet, and as utterly unworthy to crawl between heaven and earth, was taunted and driven to madness before receiving a half-fatal blow, and his writhing body was then thrown into the gigantic trench dug to receive the dead. A former Governor of Rangoon had his nose and mouth filled with gun powder, a match was applied, and he was also flung into the trench, to be stifled by the succeeding bodies. One young girl of sixteen was pitched into the same heaving grave after having suffered every outrage which would be devised by eight soldiers of the guard. One princess was cut in two, and her husband was called to see his wife and child before he died. The massacre was carried on in this leisurely fashion until Theebau and the executioners wearied of the sport; then the women were simply battered over the head and the children were swung against the palace walls.

A DETESTIBLE REIGN.

This accomplished, King Theebau settled down to business as an Oriental despot upon a grand scale. He spent money furiously, and to provide a royal revenue he devised a system of lotteries, of which his Ministers were the managers, and they were given to understand that they must get plenty of subscriptions if they expected to retain the royal pleasure. This resulted in the use of force by them to induce investments, and the community became so demoralized that trade stopped, drawings were held even on the ordinays or old-fashioned sacred days, and Damayous—a place of worship and prayer—was selected and used as a lottery office. Meanwhile the Master of Many White Elephants was going from bad to worse. A correspondent who visited him a year ago described his face as puffed and bloated, his eyes sunken and dead, and his whole physiognomy repulsive and unwholesome, giving prophecy of his early death. Last week the report came that that this young beast had taken the small-pox and died. Yesterday it was said that he had the leprosy, and that the propitiatory sacrifice he had ordered was designed for the benefit of his health. To-day a new explanation is given, and there is no intimation concerning the King's health or whether he is alive or dead. It should be mentioned in this connection that, in spite of his heroic measures, three or four of his brothers escaped into India, where they have been under the protection of the Anglo-Indian Government, and it is not inconceivable that the present disturbances may have something to do with the question of succession. As was seen in the case of the former King, the Burmese are a little timid about announcing a royal demise. The obscurity of the information from Burmah, is sufficiently accounted for by the fact that King Theebau, at the time he was killing off his relatives, threatened to exterminate all foreigners as well, and the English residents were with some difficulty brought away in a gun-boat. There thus remains nobody at Mandalay to forward the news, and all that we can learn must be in the shape of scattering reports picked up from fugitives who have made their way to Rangoon or other points in British India.

Distress in Anatolia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 2.—Colonel Wilson, the consul general in Anatolia, who has just returned from a tour of inspection in various provinces, draws a sad picture of the deplorable condition of the people—misery and want are everywhere, and many are dying of starvation within ten miles of Ismade. Much of the present distress might have been prevented but for the improvidence and want of foresight of the Turkish Government, who for the purpose of obtaining a little ready cash in Constantinople a short time ago, sold five million okes of corn at a very low rate to traders, who are now taking advantage of a scarcity, and hold out for prices which people cannot pay. At Sivas grain received as tithes during the last six years is rotting in granaries. Aiden Pasha has repeatedly demanded permission to send this grain to the distressed people, but can get no answers from the authorities, who are pressing for the payment of the taxes, which, owing to the recent financial decree, the peasantry find impossible. The widows and orphans of men who died fighting for the defence of the country are subjected to harsh treatment because their store of metallic money saved up for taxes has now became insufficient. The whole country has been drained of money. Should the next harvest prove bad—and the prospects at present are very discouraging—the greater portion of Asia Minor will become a tomb. Turkish authority is perfectly incompetent to deal with the state of affairs.

Baker Pasha, who was proceeding to Bagdad, has been recalled to Sivas. He has obtained a vast amount of valuable strategical and other information. Up to the present he has met with no official opposition to his inquiries and movements.

The Russians at Batoum.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 3.—I have received from a most trustworthy source information that the free city of Batoum is being rapidly converted into a stronghold. The forts, instead of being destroyed, as the Berlin Treaty requires, have been repaired, and a large arsenal is being constructed on a hill about two miles to the rear of the town. This arsenal is connected with the entrance fort by a tramway already in working order. The contemplated railway from Poti is to follow, not the natural course near the sea shore, but for strategical reasons will be placed behind the lower ranges of the mountain spurs coming into Batoum from the rear, thus being protected from flank attacks by a maritime Power. The Russians have a large number of guns in Batoum.

The Threatened Collapse of the Turkish Empire.

The Turkish Empire is drifting hopelessly to ruin. Unless collective action on the part of the Great Powers speedily takes place, with the object of forcing the Sultan to adopt a complete change in the present system of government the provinces will soon be in open revolt. The Porte finds it impossible to produce a budget, owing to the ruinous condition of the country. The demands upon the treasury increase, while its resources diminish day by day. At the present moment in Macedonia alone there are twenty-seven distinct bands of brigands, whilst Asia Minor is in the throes of famine, mainly produced by improvidence and misgovernment.

The ambassadors are highly indignant at the disposition shown by the court-martial to shield the assassin of Colonel Commenoff from the extreme penalty of the law. A meeting was held last night at the British Embassy to consider this, and also the whole question of Turkish administration of the law. The ambassadors unanimously determined to present the strongest front possible against the attempts of the Turkish Government to prevent Vell Mehmed receiving the punishment due to his offence. Sentence has not yet been formally passed, but it is generally understood that the Sultan desires that the criminal should be condemned to transportation in place of death, on the plea of temporary insanity. The composition of the court-martial, including three Christian officials, is reported here with great suspicion, as expressly intended to cover the Porte's responsibility; the said officials having always received substantial marks of Imperial favor.

Fuad Pasha is still harassed by the Turkish Star Chamber, but owing to the protection afforded by the foreign Embassies, he is likely to be acquitted.

The assassination of the Shireef of Mecca has greatly strengthened Osman's influence. The Porte is sending four ships with troops to Jeddah, for the purpose of installing a new Shireef, a brother of the murdered man.

The Jews in Europe.

The present position of the Jewish race is altogether anomalous. The Jews are at once the most national and the most cosmopolitan race on the earth; but they neither found a state of their own, nor do they become absorbed in the population of the countries they live in. It seems difficult to believe that this contradiction can be a permanent one. The scandalous oppression under which they have long suffered forced them to be a caste apart. It was as futile for them to hope for a genuine national life of their own as it was to hope to share the national life of others. Their enfranchisement puts the alternative before them to do either the one or the other, and the one or the other they will in the natural if not in the supernatural course of things, be forced to do.

BREVITIES.

The dome of the Troy Polytechnic Institute's observatory is twenty-nine feet in diameter, and made of paper, reduced by pressure to the hardness of wood, and one-sixth of an inch in thickness. Its weight is only one-tenth of the usual material, and it is so nicely adjusted that a child can turn it.

Gen. Stoler recently had a narrow escape from assassination at Kiefl. He was walking along a street when he felt something cold touch his cheek. He turned suddenly and saw a man armed with a revolver standing by his side, who as once turned away, exclaiming, "Excuse me; I have made a mistake."

A MAN ENTOMBED ALIVE IN A TREE.

A singular discovery was recently made in Styria. Some woodcutters felled a venerable oak in the forest of Droomling. It was found to be hollow, and was soon brought to the ground. A human skeleton, in excellent preservation, was disclosed. Even the boots, which came above the knee, were almost perfect. By its side was a powder horn, and a silver watch on which was engraved the name "H. von Kruckowitz, 1812." It was the skeleton of a man between thirty and forty years of age. It is conjectured that, while engaged in hunting, he climbed the tree for some purpose and slipped incautiously into the hollow trunk, from which there was no release, and he probably died of starvation.

LATE DISCOVERIES IN NINEVEH.

Judge Daly, in his recent annual address before the American Geographical Society, said: "Fresh discoveries of the cuneiform inscriptions at Nineveh have revealed the fact that the ancient Assyrians were acquainted with the existence of spots on the sun, which they could only have known by the aid of telescopes. These it is supposed they possessed. Mr. Layard found a crystalline lens in the ruins of Nineveh. The Assyrian Cyclopedia, imprinted on bricks, was an exhaustive work. The inscriptions on these bricks, on being deciphered, disclosed that houses and lands were sold, leased, and mortgaged, that money was loaned at interest, and that the market gardeners, to use an American phrase, 'worked on shares;' that the farmer, when ploughing with his oxen, beguiled his labor with short and homely songs, two of which have been found; and to connect this very remote civilization of 2,000 B. C. with the usages of to-day, the Chief Justice, in conclusion, referred to one of the bricks of this library, in the form of a notice, which was to the effect that visitors were requested to give to the librarian the number of the book they wished to consult, and that it would be brought to them; at the perusal of which, his Honor said, one was disposed to fall back upon the exclamation of Solomon, that 'there was nothing new under the sun.'"

THE IMPENDING STRUGGLE.

The Hon. John Jay writes: "That there is to be a struggle, and a hard one, for the control in our Republic between the people constituting the state and the ecclesiastics who represent the Roman Church, no rational man who understands the situation can for a moment doubt. In the light of history and reason it seems equally clear, either that the struggle is now to be decided by maintaining against the opposition the supremacy of the state in its right of education, intellectual and moral, in its administration of justice, in the safety of elections from priestly control, and in every other legitimate exercise of sovereignty,—or that, if these be yielded through treachery or indifference, the struggle will sooner or later be transferred to the battle-field, and decided in the most terrible of conflicts, a religious war."

Several of our contemporaries have published letters dated from Constantinople stating that the reform measures instituted by Great Britain in Asia Minor have caused great irritation in Turkey against the British; that this irritation is steadily fanned by Russian agents, and that there is a probability of the Turks making a bold endeavor, with Russian aid, to remove British control. Hobart Pasha, however, who may be presumed to know better than any newspaper correspondent the secret springs of Turkish politics gives a very different account of the prevailing feeling in Turkey. As late as February 23 he wrote: "All I can say is that the only feeling against England is held by a small fanatical minority which does not represent the general feeling of the Turks, who would gladly throw over the thraldom of this clique and completely cast themselves into the hands of England for guidance and support, and at the head of this progressive party is His Majesty the Sultan himself." That is to say, the Turks are not only not hostile to the British, but desirous of such a protectorate in Turkey in Europe as already exists in Turkey in Asia. From this it would seem that the Turks at last are ready to assimilate their politics, which include their religion also, to Western ideas.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at Brother Gotlin's the first Friday in May, meeting to commence at 2 o'clock P. M. The second Sunday in May at Gospel Grove, and at Warsaw the third Sunday in May. The fourth at some other point as Brother Joseph Mersmore may appoint.
J. S. HYDE.

I will preach in Brethren Evans' neighborhood [illegible] Pulaski, Ohio, the first Sunday in May. Meeting will commence over the following week.

According to previous announcement, the second quarterly conference of the Church of God will be held, the Lord willing, at the Harvest Ridge school house, commencing the 17th of May, and to continue over Sunday. This place is situated only a few miles south of Jewell Station, Jewell county, Kansas. Persons living between there and Concordia, are cordially invited. An invitation is extended to all to come at once and help along with the meeting.

RESTITUTION FUND.

AKRON, Fulton Co., Ind., Nov. 29, 1878.

Elder Eschbach:—With your permission I will make an appeal to the brotherhood for help to support THE RESTITUTION for the year 1880 and locate its weekly visits.

Now, dear brethren, I call upon one and all who feel themselves able, to donate to the cause of Christ the small amount of $350 between this and the first of January.

Dear brethren, we could do this with a few exceptions, if we but thought so. I am well aware that some brother here contributed nobly, but I make the appeal in a special manner to those who have heretofore done nothing or a few miserly.

Dear brother, do not say, I am too poor! Perhaps you are using the tobacco weed, tobacco in some form. Consider for one moment are we who claim to be the children of Christ to be poverty stricken that we cannot support a weekly paper?

We do hope that everyone will respond to this appeal. Please let us hear from all those who cannot or will not pay the $350, and all those who give us their excuse. I am also a poor man. My name is Abraham Poorlove. I am 49 years old and have a large family to support. I have a small farm of 50 acres. I farm and work at the carpenter's trade to support my family. I use neither tobacco nor intoxicating drinks.

And, dear Elder, I will enclose $[illegible] to commence on. I read THE RESTITUTION, and the Bible, and I hope to meet you within that coming Kingdom. So, farewell.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. G. Barker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. B. Fitz, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Barker continues in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of hymns. Also an appendix, besides a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar in a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and very many more beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,

ENTITLED THE

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrations and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references by Benjamin Wilson.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; and this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words therein falsely translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers. Now improved edition on larger paper. One vol. 1241 pages. Price, extra cloth $6 00; Library Binding, $6 50 postpaid. For sale at this office.

POETRY.

Harvest.

M. F. A. C.

I hear the harvest call—I know the fields
Lie white beneath the rays of hot July!
I know the wheat-heads bending with their weight
Are full of precious grains that you and I
Must save, or they may perish bye and bye.

Come with your sickle—be no laggard now!
Who toils not through the day, at eve shall hear
No golden sheaf in his inglorious arms!
And, O to meet the Harvest Lord, and there
To bring no witness of our faithful care!

And, O, to meet Him, and His sad reproach!
To see His smile we shall had tried to win,
Only for others—and to see the crown,
The starry crown, that might have been our own
Or other brows that wear no taint of sin!

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Literal Narration Continued—Dates—Characters—Time of the End—No. 16.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Narration.—Dan. xi. 42.—"He shall stretch forth his hand upon the countries; and the land of Egypt shall not escape." The French infidel democracy, led by Napoleon, its chief executive agent, aimed at universal dominion.

Verse 43.—"But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt; and the Libyans and Ethiopians shall be at his steps." He will retain all his power in Egypt. He held his power in the land of the Pharaohs—had all its treasures at the disposal of his army of Savans, who enriched themselves, their general and their country, by the spoils of Egypt. He went beyond the borders of Lybia and Ethiopia, but did not conquer them.

Verse 44.—"But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly make away with many." Fulfilled.—After his return from Syria, and during his negotiations with Smith the English admiral, he received a file of newspapers, giving him the first account of French affairs on the Continent, since his departure from Europe. Excited, and alarmed by the tidings, he deserted his Egyptian army and returned with two small frigates to France, where he began anew his career of conquest. Millions of lives were sacrificed at the shrine of his vain ambition. Europe was desolated by his armies.

Verse 45.—"And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." Fulfilled.—His tents were pitched in the land of Palestine between the seas, and in all Europe. Yet, after conquering nearly all Europe, he is overthrown, becomes the world's prisoner, he dies on the lone island of St. Helena, there being no power on earth to save him.

Dan. xii. 1.—"And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince that standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered every one that shall be found written in the book." Future.—The events named in in this verse are still to transpire.

a. The standing up of Michael.
b. The time of trouble.
c. The deliverance.

Events, admitted to be future, should be handled with considerable caution.

a. Standing Up of Michael.—Who is this Michael? Gabriel, the narrator of these events to Daniel, and who may be termed the prophetic historian, calls him, "The first of the chief princes," Dan. x. 13; and "Michael your prince," Dan. x. 21; "Michael the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people," Dan. xii. 1; "Michael the archangel," Jude 9; "Michael," Rev. xii. 7; and in Zech. iii. 2, "The Lord." Some learned men consider Michael to be Jehovah the Messiah; and Zech. iii. 2 he is called יְהוָה Yehowah. The Lord said unto Satan, The Lord rebuke thee. Others make him the chief among the orders of created angels. He is a leader and warrior. He is the prince of Daniel's people, and seems to be a powerful prince that is to be a great leader of the Jews out of their long captivity. At the time named above he enters upon the work of his mission.

b. The Time of Trouble.—This trouble has to do with the return of Israel, since Michael is their prince. They are to be gathered out of all nations. Centuries have so mingled their blood with that of the Gentiles, that the severance, will, in many instances, produce great distress. In other places the nations will thrust them out, when they may have no means of support. Great trouble would follow. "Alas for that day is great. So that none is like; it is even the time of Jacob's trouble." Jer. xxx. 7.

c. The Deliverance.—Who are delivered? Thy (Daniel's) people, whose names are written in the book. What book? "Book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. xiii. 8. "Lamb's book of life." Rev. xxi. 27. Daniel's people will be righteous whether Jew or Gentile.

Verse 2.—"And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall wake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Without entering into an exhaustive investigation of this verse, we shall be permitted to suggest a few thoughts:

1. This is a part of Gabriel's literal narrative, and is to be understood in its literal sense. The sleepers are not seen in vision, and, therefore, are not symbolic, but literal sleepers in dust, or dead persons; consequently, a literal resurrection is intended, not a spiritual or political change.

2. Duration, or the length of time covered by these events noted in this verse, is not stated. The sleepers in earth's dust are waked.

רַבִּים מִיְּשֵׁנֵי אַדְמַת־עָפָר יָקִיצוּ אֵלֶּה לְחַיֵּי עוֹלָם וְאֵלֶּה לַחֲרָפוֹת לְדִרְאוֹן עוֹלָם

V'rav-bim me yo shei-nai a-de-mah a-phar yak-ki-tzoo ell-leh lay-yai o-lam ell-leh Vha ra photh (pl) Vde-ron o-lam;—and many that sleep in the dust of the adamah (earth) shall be waked, these to the age life, (life pertaining to the age) and these to the reproaching and degradation of the age. The terms here used require the literal construction.

Verse 3.—"And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." The "wise"—the teachers, the prudent, learned, intelligent, מַשְׂכִּילִים maskil-yim, "For ever and ever," לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד To-lam wa-ad, to the age and eternity, or for the age and onward.

It will appear from these passages, uttered by Gabriel, that this chain of events extends to and into the endless age. Two classes of persons enter that age. The one class having the life of the Messiah, the second Adam; the other class, in the likeness of the first, receives the reproaches, and degradation of that age. How long they are thus punished, will depend on the will of the judge. It will be till they have received in body according to what they have done. Here the angel reaches the utmost limit of the Vision. What follows are directions and helps in explanation of the narration.

Verse 4.—"But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."

"Shut Up the Words."—The words, which describe the standing up of Michael, the trouble, deliverance of the righteous, the resurrection, the rewards of the good; in a word, all the events that follow the standing up of Michael.

"Seal the Book."—The events are too distant to be fully understood, or even to be investigated so as to be comprehended. Seal the book; the events are appointed and sure; seal them that there be no change of my words. It is clear that the book was to be understood before the events would transpire.

"To the Time of the End."—Not the end itself, but to a period near the close, so that the generation that shall be living when Michael stands up may accomplish their peculiar mission—the instruction of the world.

"Many Shall Run To and Fro."—This mission belongs to the time of the end. Two meanings have been attached to these words, both of which are being remarkably fulfilled.

a. It shall be a time of a very active diffusion of general intelligence by lecturers, by the art of printing, and the rapid multiplication of books and periodicals.

b. That the expression is confined to the searching of the prophecies, especially those of Daniel.

Verse 5.—"Then I Daniel looked, and, behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on the other side of the bank of the river." There seemed to be classes of angels. The two now seen, were on the opposite banks of the Ulai. One thing deserves special notice, these were all interested in Gabriel's narration. While empires have arisen, spread ruin over the earth, and have disappeared since the days of Daniel; while countless millions of human beings have been born and died without studying, or taking any interest in these prophecies, these celestial messengers, beings of another race and destiny are all attention. They are not selfish; not loafers on the banks of this beautiful stream, but messengers and disciples of the man clothed in linen,—all interested in human redemption.

Verse 6.—"And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" The one clad in linen, over the waters of the river, appears to be a being of superior knowledge since he is addressed, as one with power and ability to solve the question. He was, in all probability, the one that was with the church in the wilderness, with the angel which spake to him in Mount Sinai, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us. Acts vii 38. "The messenger of the covenant." Mal. iii. 1.

Verse 7.—"And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was over the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and swear by him that liveth for ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and a half: and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."

a. The Oath.—One hand only (the right) is usually raised; here both are elevated to add emphasis. The time of these events was revealed and he had authority to declare it, appealing unto the Father for the truth of what he is about to state.

b. "Time, Times, and a Half."—This is made three and a half times prophetic, (since it is a part of the 2300 days). A prophetic time is a prophetic year; two prophetic times would be two prophetic years; one half a time would be one half of a prophetic year; in all 1260 years. This was the length of time the holy ones were to be under the power of the little horn, Dan. viii. 25, Rev. xii. 6, 14, 1260 days and time, times, and a half cover the same period, consequently are equal.

c. "Scatter the Power of the Holy People."—Who are the holy people? The people of God are, in the higher sense, the only holy people; still, the children of Israel may be called such from what they were and what they will be. Since the saints under Papacy have been broken into fragments and have suffered during 1260 years during which the natural seed have suffered, it would properly include both classes. The period of severe oppression is 1260 years.

Verse 8.—"And I heard, but I understood not; then I said, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" Daniel's curiosity is too great to silence inquiry; he still presses the angel for more information, the angel over the waters, whom he calls "my Lord."

Verse 9.—"And he said, Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." Daniel was commanded to seal, it is here stated that they are sealed to the time of the end. As we are, at least, living within that period here called the time of the end, the book is no longer sealed as in the days of Daniel. So much of the vision is now become a matter of history that, by careful study we can gain the knowledge of our present position.

Verse 10.—"Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." This verse is retrospective and general. Purified, made white, and tried, was the work of the Pagan and Papal abominations, —the age of martyrdom, when the church was in the wilderness. (Rev. xii. 6).

None of the wicked shall understand these things, through want of interest, and, consequently, a lack of investigation; but the wise, the teachers, (Dan. xi. 35, and Dan. xii. 4,) by close application to study of prophecy compared with history, shall understand.

Verse 11.—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." On this verse we have made some remarks. In No. 13 we have shown the meaning of the two abominations. Pagan, which was taken away to give room for the Papal abomination. The Papal abomination produced great astonishment that the church should produce such a persecuting monster of desolation.

The Twelve Hundred and Ninety Days.—This number is nowhere else found. It is a part of the 2300 days, since it covers the agency of the desolator. It extends thirty years beyond the close of the 1260. Should we reckon from the decree of Phocas A. D. 606, the 1290 years would extend to A. D. 1896.

Verse 12.—"Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." These days would add forty-five years to the 1290 years, and would extend to A. D. 1911. We find great difficulties clustering about the beginning of the 1260 years, and, consequently, about the close of the 1290 days and 1335 days. Of one thing we are fully satisfied,—that we are living in the time of the end.

The seventy weeks are the only key to the 2300 days which mark the end of the pollution, or treading down of the sanctuary by the Gentiles. If the seventy weeks extend to the taking of Jerusalem by Titus A. D. 70, which from Dan. ix. 20-27, we are inclined to believe, the 2300 days would expire in 1830-1.

Verse 13.—"But go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." This verse intimates that the vision was to be very long, and that it would close with a resurrection.

Concluding Remarks on the Vision.—What did Daniel understand? He fully comprehended what was said relative to the empires of Persia and Greece, they were plainly interpreted in Gabriel's first visit. The seventy weeks were given by Gabriel at his second visit as an explanation of the 2300 days. The weeks would be an explanation of the 2300 days unless they are a part, and the first part of those days, and show when they commence. This, as we have shown they do. On this point we were particular to bring ample proof.

The angel's third visit was occupied in a literal narration of events extending from the time of his visit to the standing up of Michael and the resurrection of sleepers in earth's dust. We have followed that chain of events to the time of the end, and find nearly the entire series accomplished, and in the rear of our present position. The coming age with all its overthrows and reformations is impending. The days of thrones and earthly dominions are numbered and will soon give place to One whose days and whose power, righteousness and peace will be as durable as its King, and as endless as his life. Why should the events of this age be so attractive to the children of the coming age? Let us act out our faith that when he comes, we may say, Lo this is our God, we have waited for thee.

Israel the Head of the Nations and Not the Tail!

And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children forever: and my servant David shall be their prince forever. Ezek. xxxvii. 25.

Though Israel has been oppressed and degraded by the Gentiles for a long time, yet, when restored, they will be highly esteemed among the nations and eternally enjoy the peculiar favor of God! The promises of this are many; a few of them I will present. One of these glorious predictions is given by Isaiah lxii. 1-5: "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God. Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate, but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee."

As it is literal Jerusalem that has been termed "forsaken," and the literal land of Israel, which is Palestine, that has been termed "desolate," therefore, it will be the literal city and land which will be "no more" so called when the promise is fulfilled. The distinction between Israel and the Gentiles is clearly set forth in the text, "The Gentiles shall see thy righteousness." Remember it is not their own, but Jerusalem's righteousness (it is common in all languages to use the place for the people,) which the Gentiles shall see. Hence, the prophet proceeds, verses 6-9: "I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night; ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, and give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth. The Lord hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies: and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast labored; but they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the Lord; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness."

That this is the literal Jerusalem, the city for the people, that is addressed, must be obvious to all, from the fact that they have been scattered, peeled and oppressed by the Gentiles, and their corn has been meat for them, (Gentiles,) and their wine drink for them. But, in the age to come, this curse will have been removed, and "stranger," (Gentiles,) "shall stand and feed folks, and the sons of the alien, (Gentiles,) shall be your plowmen and your vine dressers." Hence, the command is given in the tenth verse, to "prepare the way," for their restoration; and when the way has been fully prepared—Jesus their "salvation" come—their restoration completed, then the Gentiles, (verses 11, 12,) "Shall call them the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord; and thou shalt be called, sought out, or city not forsaken." Therefore Israel's exaltation will be seen and acknowledged when Jesus shall have become their King and Zion his residence.

Psalms cxxxii. 13-17: "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever, here will I dwell: for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priests with salvation: and her saints shall shout aloud for joy. There will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a lamp for mine anointed." In keeping with this portion of Holy Writ was the faith of Simeon and the wise men—"The glory of thy people Israel"—"Where is he that is born King of the Jews?"

Isaiah lx. 9-22: "And the sons of strangers (Gentiles) shall build up thy wall, and their kings shall minister unto thee .... Therefore thy gates shall be opened continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the wealth of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.... The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel."

Again, Israel's exaltation is forcibly presented in Isaiah xlix. 13-23: "Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted. But Zion said, the Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me. .... Thus saith the Lord God, behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me." Here we learn that Gentiles are to carry Israel's "sons in their arms," that their "kings are to be nursing fathers, and their queens nursing mothers, and that they shall bow before Israel and Israel's King." Oh, how great the change! when the Lord shall have "turned again the captivity of Zion," when, instead of being "spoiled, evermore," Israel shall "eat the riches of the Gentiles;" when, instead of Israel being oppressed, Gentiles shall "be their plowmen and vine-dressers." Yea, "the nation and kingdom that will not serve them shall perish." "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously. In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people"—"Israel."

Again, we have one of these delightful predictions of Israel's exaltation and glory in Luke ii. 19-12: "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee; and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee. And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again." Also, Ezek. xxxvii. 24-28: "And David my servant shall be king over them: and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, where your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children, forever: and my servant David shall be their prince forever. Moreover, I will make a covenant of peace with them, it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them forevermore. My tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore." This is subsequent to their restoration to the land of Palestine and becoming one nation upon the mountains of Israel. Two nations they have been since the days of Rehoboam, therefore its fulfillment we must have in the age to come; and, to avoid this conclusion, the Bible must be rejected! Long have Israel been cast off, and without a home, and their land by strangers trod; and they the Gentiles scoff; but in the day of their restoration they will become powerful in the hand of the Lord, and be made a scourge and terror to the nations whither they have been driven, and by whom they have been hated and oppressed.

Proof:—Luke ix. 13, 14: "When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man. And the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south. The Lord of hosts shall defend them."

Isaiah xli. 8, 9, 14, 15: "But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend. Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away. Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy redeemer, the Holy One of Israel. Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff."

Obadiah verse 18: "And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it."

Jer. ii. 19-23: "The portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is the former of all things: and Israel is the rod of his inheritance. The Lord of hosts is his name. Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms; and with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider; with thee also will I break in pieces man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid; I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers."

Micah iv. 11-13: "Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth."

Micah v. 8, 9: "And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver. Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off."

Zech. xii. 5, 6: "And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the Lord of hosts their God. In that day will I make the governors of Judah like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem."

Thus Israel is to become the head of the nations, not the tail! Solemn day! when these denunciations shall be inflicted on anti-Christian nations, and gospel hardened sinners, and those who curse Israel!

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION Means the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also declares, and means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sin, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Chain of Prophetic History by Christ—Matthew and Luke Compared—Literal Narration—Various Divisions—Events of Each Division—Signs of the Fall of Jerusalem.—No. 17.

J. P. WEETHEE.

1. Chain of Prophetic History by Christ.—From the first advent to the second—from the cross to the crown. It was in A. D. 33, just previous to his apprehension and noted trial, that he gave to his disciples the prophetic narration which we are about to follow.

On the departure of Christ from the temple for the last time, the disciples came unto him and were pointing out some of the beauties and grandeur of that edifice, when Jesus makes this reply—Verse 2, Matt. xxiv: "And Jesus said unto them, see ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." Such a prediction was a matter of astonishment. Passing on, Jesus ascended and seated himself on the Mount of Olives. Here he was visited privately by his disciples that they might learn the meaning of his statement relative to the ruin of the temple. The prophetic narration was called out by an inquiry of the disciples.

Verse 3: "Tell us, when shall these things be? And what (shall be) the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" Before entering upon the narration itself, we shall be allowed to present a few preliminary statements:

1. It will be admitted that Christ had a perfect knowledge of all the events to transpire between his first and second advents. His divine nature requires him to be in possession of this information. It cannot be doubted but that his knowledge of future events was equal to that of Gabriel who revealed a chain of events to Daniel 570 years longer than the one given by Messiah.

2. That he knew the characters or mental abilities, and the education of his disciples, what they could understand, and what would be beyond their understanding.

3. That he was able to couch those events in language which they could clearly and fully comprehend.

4. That he would naturally express himself in plain, literal words and phrases, so that his instructions might be easily understood by illiterate men such as those whom he was about to address.

5. Since the disciples did not ask for any explanation of the wording of the narrative, it is reasonable to suppose that none was necessary; that the words and phrases were comprehended; and, if understood, they were literal; and that the narrative is in plain, literal language, and not to be understood figuratively.

6. Since they made no further inquiry, we infer that their questions were fully answered, and, that the narration extends to Christ's second coming, that interpretation which makes it reach to the fall of Jerusalem only being incorrect.

7. That the narration is literal, and the events also. By this we must not be understood to affirm that every word in the narration is literal, but that literal events are described in language that is generally literal, and very readily understood.

8. The general rule of interpreting language, is to give every word its ordinary and literal meaning, unless forced from that position. In considering the language of this narrative, we shall consider all Christ's language, and not deviate from the literal interpretation unless forced from it by the obvious meaning; and shall attempt to harmonize the prophetic histories of Gabriel and Christ where they describe the same events, as they do from A. D. 33 onward.

9. These points are necessary to be kept in mind, since they determine the length of time included in the prophetic narration,—the school of expositors that gives it a figurative interpretation, terminates it at the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70, covering thirty-seven years only, while the school of literal expositors makes it reach to the second literal coming of Christ, already extending 1847 years. Two interpretations differing so widely in time cannot both be true. It will be our aim to establish with all possible clearness the literal view.

Outline of the Events.—This chain of prophetic history is divided into minor periods by certain noted events. Since we have the history of these events, the time and manner in which they transpired, it will be expected that we show when, where, and how the prophetic events were fulfilled. By noting the past, we ascertain what are in the future. Let us outline the events as follows:

First Period.—Extends from the cross to the vicinity of the siege and fall of Jerusalem.

Second Period.—The signs of that event, and why given.

Third Period.—Siege and fall of Jerusalem.

Fourth Period.—This period extends from the fall of Jerusalem, and captivity of the Jews to the vicinity of the crown, or Christ's second coming.

Fifth Period.—This period covers the space of time occupied by the signs of his coming—physical and moral signs—state of the world and the church.

Sixth Period.—Shows the events that transpire when he comes.

Seventh Period.—Is the establishment of peace in the reign of subjugation. These periods we shall examine in their order, noticing the principal events belonging to each and compare the three records.

First Period.—Verse 4.—"And Jesus answered and said unto them, take heed that no man deceive you." The caution (take heed) belongs equally to all parts of the entire period of his absence. It implies that his return was the chief thought of his narration, and that his coming again was an event in the distant future—that his long absence would tempt them to accept impostors. The unity of his subject (his return) must never be out of the mind of the reader. As we examine his narration of each word or phrase ask this question, What bearing has it on the principal topic (his coming) of the narration? We say, "the principal topic," for some expositors make three leading topics: a. "When shall these things be?" b. "What (shall be) the sign of thy coming?" c. What shall be the end of the world (age)? We do not think that the minds of the disciples were thus divided. There might have been in their minds a complex thought; the leading thought was the coming of Christ to do what he had named; this will appear if we examine the words of the other two evangelists. "And as he sat upon the mount of Olives over against the temple, Peter and James and John and Andrew asked him privately, tell us, when shall these things be? and what (shall be) the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled? Mark xiii. 3. Mark follows Peter's version, who was probably the chief speaker on this occasion. Luke uses nearly the same language: "And they asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign (will there be) when these things shall come to pass?" Luke xxi. 7.

Having examined the occasion of the narration, and the general caution we are now ready to enter into a full examination of the narration itself. The events of the first period extend from A. D. 33 to A. D. 66, when the Jews began to feel the war power of the Romans, and Judea was threatened with an invasion.

Verse 5: "For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." False Christs are here predicted, described more particularly in verses 23, 25. During this period many false Messiahs arose, some of which are named in the Acts of the apostles; such as Theudas (Acts v. 36), Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing (Acts v. 37), Simon Magus (Acts viii. 9), and the Egyptian impostor (Acts xxi. 38). Josephus gives a particular account of various impostors, that arose and were put to death. Suetonius confirms the statements made by Josephus. These false Christs deceived many Jews but no Christians, so far as is known.

Verse 6: "And when ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars, see that ye be not troubled, for all (these things) must come to pass, but the end is not yet." Mark's record is in about the same language. See Mark xiii. 7. Luke says, "When ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified, for these things must first come to pass, but the end (is) not by and by." Luke xxi. 9. Josephus' history of this period might have the title, "Wars and rumors of wars." This is true of the reigns of Caligula, Claudius and Nero. The people of those countries were like a troubled sea.

Verse 7: "For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." Mark's record is the same. Mark xiii. 8. Luke says: "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven." Luke xxi. 11. The latter clause belongs to the second period, and will be considered under that head.

Four classes of calamities are here brought to view,—wars, earthquakes, famines, and pestilences. There were wars among the lesser kingdoms. Also, Roman provinces were in a state of hostility to the empire. His blood be on us and on our children began to show signs of an early and terrible retribution. Earthquakes were felt in various localities, in Crete, Smyrna and Miletus: so many and so severe that it drew the attention of the learned Suetonius. Famines were frequent and severe (Acts xi. 27, 28,) under Claudius Cæsar. Pestilences multiplied as the overthrow of the Jewish nation approached. Their morals and modes of living sowed the seeds of disease in their systems that frequently showed their effects in fearful maladies. By wars, earthquakes, famines and pestilences, the lands of western Asia were severely scourged; and, near the close of this period it was evident to the wise and observing that some terrible calamity was impending. This state of things grew apace.

Verse 8: "All these are the beginning of sorrows." Mark says: "These (are) the beginnings of sorrows"—convulsive throes of the Jewish nation. Luke has omitted this remark, but he has given us an expression which enables us to select all Christ's narration that belongs to the first period. "But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you," etc. Luke xxi. 12. Before these beginnings of sorrows, before these "fearful sights and great signs from heaven." This remark of Luke shows the order of events, and of the record given by Christ to his four apostles. Luke falls back in his record of Christ's narration, and shows how they, as the disciples of Christ, will be treated, and that their sufferings will be before these beginnings of sorrows, teaching that those sorrows belong to another people (the Jews), and that they are retributive. We learn from Luke that these wars, earthquakes, famines and pestilences, belong to the closing years of the first period, and that their severe treatment belongs to the earlier years of that, when the apostles were spreading the glad tidings of salvation among all nations. The Acts of the Apostles cover that space. We now carry forward Christ's narration.

Verse 9: "Then shall they (Jews and Gentiles) deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you; and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake." Mark has the following: "But take heed to yourselves, for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten; and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them." Mark xiii. 9. Luke is still more distinct and systematic: "But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you and persecute (you) delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake." Luke xxi. 12.

Verse 10: "And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another." Mark says: "Now the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death." Mark xiii. 12. Luke—"And ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and (some) of you shall they cause to be put to death." Luke xxi. 16. The Christians of this period were composed of Jews and Gentiles, who were devotedly attached to Judaism, and to the worship of idols. The gospel entered Jewish and heathen families, and converted here and there a member; here, a son, there a daughter; sometimes the father; at other times the mother; hence a man's most active foes were often the members of his own house.

Verse 11: "And many false prophets shall arise and shall deceive many." This verse was fulfilled during this period, as we learn from the Acts of the Apostles, and from many of the epistles.

Verse 12: "And because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold." Many, through persecutions, deserted the cause of Christ, returning to the temple services or to the senseless rites of idolatry.

A few verses in Mark and Luke, belonging to this period are not found in Matthew's record, which we shall here insert. "But when they shall lead (you), and deliver you up, take no thought before hand, what ye shall speak, neither do ye pre-meditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye; for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost." Mark xiii. 11. Luke says: "Settle (it) therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer. For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist." Luke xxi. 14, 15.

We are now through with Christ's narration of the events of the first period which covers a space of about thirty-five years. During this period the gospels, the Acts, and the epistles were written; the gospel as proclaimed by inspired men was proclaimed throughout the Roman empire. Many had been converted to its doctrines, both of the Jews and also of the Gentiles. Its success brought upon Christians violent persecutions. The Gentiles could not submit to see their heathen worship fall before the simplicity of the gospel; neither could the Jews quietly submit to have the laws of Moses give way to the religion of Jesus of Nazareth.

The Kingdom of God.

BY G. M. MYERS.

ENQUIRER'S ELEVENTH QUESTION.

1. We read in Matt. xvi. 18, that Jesus said unto Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church."

2. We read in Acts ii. 47, that those parties to whom Peter preached, and to whom he opened the doors of the kingdom were added to the church. Therefore, was not the church, or kingdom organized upon that day—the day of Pentecost?

REPLY.

As your question apparently is principally based upon the word church, I will inquire into that word from its various points of interest.

1. The word is derived from the Greek word Ekklesia—Ek—out, out of, and Kleesis—to call, a calling; therefore a calling out, or the called out. This word, then, is applicable to anybody which has been called out whether secular, political, or religious, and whether organized or unorganized. By reading Acts xix. 32, 39, 41, you will find its application to a rabble. By turning to Acts vii. 38, you will find it applied to Israel while in the wilderness. Also, we read of the congregation in the wilderness, and of the tabernacle of the congregation in the wilderness. Thus, we see that God in the days of Moses, had an Ekklesia or church, and if a called out body of people then, we are led to believe that he has ever had a called out people from the days of Abel and Enoch.

2. This called out body which belonged to God, composed of those to whom John the Baptist preached, and who afterward became the disciples of Jesus, we find Jesus claiming: composed of the twelve, of the seventy and of more than five hundred brethren, who, as Paul says, 1 Cor. xv. 6, at one time saw Jesus. This body then inorganic, Jesus said he would build—organize as the word oikodomeo will signify.

3. This body of disciples existent as a called out body, in an inorganic state before the ascension, which Jesus said he would organize, we find he never, in person, organized, but delegated this authority to the apostles, as he said: "He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." "As my Father hath sent me, even so I send you." John xiii. 20; xx. 21. Now the question of importance is, when was this authority exercised? Not upon the day of Pentecost, for all the work which we find accomplished upon that day which effected the church in the least was simply an addition of three thousand persons to the hitherto called out. Not the least intimation of the appointment of a deacon, elder, shepherd, pastor or any other officer of which afterward we read, either in Scripture, or modern church history. But the first act which looks in the least like organization in the church we find a record of in Acts vi. 1-6. Next, the first appearance of the word "elder" in connection with the church we find in Acts xi. 30, in the year 42—nine years after Pentecost. And the first appointment of these elders—older ones—to office, of which we read is in Acts xiv. 23, in the year 46. Now, with these points before us, shall we not discard the old idea that the church was organized on the memorable day of Pentecost.

As marked distinctions between the church of God or Christ, and the kingdom of God or Christ, I will enumerate,—

1. That persons may be in the church and yet upon the outside of the kingdom—Read Acts xiv. 21, 22,—"And when they (Paul and Barnabas) had preached the gospel to that city, (Derbe,) and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must, through much tribulation, enter into the kingdom of God." Next, we read, Col. iv. 7-11, of Tychicus, Onesimus, Aristarchus, Justus and Paul—all fellow workers unto the kingdom of God. Again, 2 Tim. iv. 18, we read: "And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom." And, last, as a citation upon this point which I will give, is 2 Peter i. 5-11. Here disciples who have exercised faith and are in the church, are required to then add courage, knowledge, patience, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity to their faith, and then in verse 11 are informed that it is so—in this way—by this process, that an entrance shall be ministered unto them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

2. That the church is composed of the disciples of Christ, while the kingdom is to be composed of Christ and his disciples—the Christ body—as the head over the kingdom, Israel as the subjects, the promised land as promised to the fathers as the territory, Jerusalem restored as the metropolitan city, and the nations as the dominion.

3. That while the church is composed of the disciples, yet it was the Father's good pleasure to give to them—not the church composed of themselves, but—the kingdom. See Luke xii. 32.

4. We read of the work of the persecuting power, that he was to wear out the saints—who are the called out—the church—Dan. vii. 25. But of the kingdom it is written: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed." Dan. ii. 44.

5. We read that the saints—who are the called out—were to be given into the hands of this persecuting power for a time, and times and the dividing of a time. Dan. vii. 25. But of the kingdom it is written: "And the kingdom shall not be left to other people." Dan. ii. 44.

6. We read of this persecuting power that he was to make war with the saints—the called out—and to prevail against them. Dan. vii. 21. But of the kingdom it is written: "But it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. ii. 4.

7. We read of the church at Jerusalem, Acts viii. 1; xi. 22, but no where of the kingdom in Jerusalem.

8. We read of the churches of Galatia, 1 Cor. xvi. 1; of the churches in Asia, 1 Cor. xv. 19; of the churches in Macedonia, 2 Cor. viii. 1; of the seven churches in Asia, Rev. i. 4; but no where of the kingdoms in these cities or localities.

9. We read of churches meeting in private houses, Rom. xvi. 5; Col. iv. 15; but no where of the kingdom thus located.

10. We read of the ordination of elders, and of precepts in every church, Acts xiv. 23; 1 Cor. vii. 17; but not so in every kingdom.

11. We read in Matt. xix. 24, where Jesus said, "That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven;" but no difficulty now in the rich gaining entrance into any modern church.

12. We read now in modern terms of a Methodist church, of a Presbyterian church, of a Baptist church, of an Episcopal church, but who ever would think of talking about a Methodist Kingdom, or a Presbyterian kingdom, or a Baptist Kingdom, or an Episcopal kingdom?
